> I have read, in the past few days, every line printed in every Boston newspaper on this case since it became a burning issue with the news of the Supreme Court's final decision; and all important items for some years before that. It is an interesting, if somewhat melancholy, experience to note the progressive timidity in the tone of the editorial comment of most papers, as public feeling has grown more bitter. Almost equally striking is the decrease in quantity. Throughout the case, all the papers have printed the day-to-day facts, with, so far as I could judge, accuracy and fairness, although, repeatedly, items which seem to me of high news value have been buried on a remote inside page, have been written with utmost brevity and printed under headlines so quiet (for Boston) as to be almost speechless. It is with editorial discussion, however, that I am here concerned. Of that there has been amazingly little, in view of the overwhelming interest in the case. News articles have outnumbered editorials fifty to one.

Mr. Bliven gives great credit to the Boston Herald for its service in opening up its correspondence columns to letters giving every possible view of this famous case.

THE current issue of The Trib—a monthly periodical of shop talk about the Chicago Tribune—being an eightieth anniversary number is so full of valuable historical matter that it deserves permanent preservation by all who are interested in the history of American journalism.

Pages two and three picture the various buildings occupied by the Tribune during the eight decades of its history. Pages four and five give glimpses of how some of the departments of the Tribune looked thirty years ago. Pages twelve and thirteen constitute a double page spread which portrays the evolution of the make-up of the first paper of the Tribune. The last page (24) prints the pictures of the famous publishers and editors of the paper.

The editorial page reprints the editorial which James O'Donnell Bennett contributed to the Sunday Tribune for June 5—"Eighty Years Young, 1847-1927." The two years of 1847 and 1927 are thus contrasted:

> From a raw midwest boom town reached only by stage coaches and steamboats in 1847, to your world capital that is the terminus of twenty-seven railroads; from seven bankers and brokers with almost no institutional standing to 214 banks with deposits of nearly two and three-quarter billions; from wooden taverns, mostly on or near sodden river banks, to a glittering avenue of hotels into some of which could be crowded the equivalent of Chicago's population of eighty years ago; from a lake front with tracks strung on piles and carrying wood burning locomotives to electrified trains gliding silently beneath the walls of the largest art school in the world, and past the marble porticos of "far-eyed Science"; from a city that disaster left bookless fifty-six years ago to ten premier libraries containing more than four million books and pamphlets; from a meager, anxious four-page Tribune that circulated 400 copies on the morning of June 10, 1847, to a Tribune that finished printing this morning nearly 1,200,000 copies of this issue.

Another valuable feature in this anniversary issue of The Trib may be found on pages 14 and 15 which reproduce the historic utterances chiseled on the walls of the Tower Lobby of The Tribune. Prominent position is given to the words taken from the last will and testament of Joseph Medill.

TWO contributions in the current issue of Oregon Exchanges—published for the newspaper folk of the State of Oregon—deserve at least passing mention. These are "The Use of Exaggerated Statements in Advertising Copy" by H. P. Nunn, Portland Advertising Representative of the Christian Science Monitor, and "How to Keep Up Reader Interest in a Country Weekly" by Mrs. May B. Johnson, Editor and Publisher of the Madras Pioneer. The latter article suggests that correspondents, even for community weeklies, should be paid for at regular space rates if best results are to be secured.

WHEN Don Marquis conducted "The Sun Dial" in the New York Evening Sun and later "The Lantern" in the New York Tribune it was his custom to comment now and then about "The Almost Perfect State." These comments he has now brought together in a volume having the same title (Doubleday, Page & Company). The charm of the text is that every now and then he scatters among comments in the lighter vein squibs that portray an interesting philosophy of life.

But for readers of "Our Own World of Letters" a footnote on page 152 has about as much interest as anything found in the volume for it pays this tribute to George Smith who was managing editor of the Evening Sun when Marquis started "The Sun Dial" back in 1912:

> George Smith was the best editorial boss under whose supervision (and protection!) we ever worked. He let us say and do what we pleased; he never interfered; he prevented other people from interfering; he was a shield and buckler for us against all the usual leagued stupidities of newspaperdom. We could be as notional, as fantastic, as unconventional as we had it in us to be, confident that he would back us up in it. Even when our private and personal opinions ran counter to the settled tone and policy of the paper, he let us express them in that department, and stood between us and an official call-down. He gave us our charter as a privateer, and turned us loose with our whimsical little craft to shoot our swivel-gun in any direction we might fancy. You may be sure that, when any writer emerges and splurges for a while, and creates a little transient notoriety for himself, he has the backing of some editor or publisher. No more just, sane or capable man than George Smith was ever connected with journalism in New York. He died in his forties, when all who knew him thought him to be at the real beginning of his larger career. He had brains, that man, and character and imagination and courage; he was the American newspaper man at his best.

The volume has one fault. It does not describe the contents of the newspaper that will circulate among those who live in "The Almost Perfect State." But in spite of this fact, the volume is an excellent hammock companion for vacation days.

LOUIS LUDLOW, Washington correspondent for the Columbus Dispatch and for the Ohio State Journal, is the author of another book dealing with political life in Washington—"Senator Solomon Spiffledink." It was be reviewed in an early issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Those who have seen advance copies say that it is an excellent exposé of the bunkum in public life.

SO many of the high school papers are printed in the plants of local newspapers that "Best Creative Work in American High Schools, 1926-1927" ought to interest numerous newspaper men throughout the country. The contents of the volume indicate that American journalism to-morrow is going to have a number of talented writers.

George Horace Gallup of the School of Journalism at the University of Iowa assumed the task of editing the book and Dr. Edward H. Lauer, also of the University of Iowa, furnished the financial assistance that made the volume possible. Technically the work has the imprint of the National Honorary Society for High School Journalism which has planned to publish a similar book annually. Material for the present volume was submitted by 5,000 students representing some five hundred high schools.

VIRGINIA SPEAKERS NAMED

Dr. John Finley, of the New York Times, and Charles M. Meredith, of Quakertown, Pa., president of the National Editorial Association, will be the speakers at the mid-summer meeting of the Virginia Press Association, to be held at the College of William and Mary, at Williamsburg, Va., July 14, 15 and 16.

DEADLOCKED ON STATE PRINTING

North Carolina Firms Stand Pat on New Price—Second Bids Rejected

The state of North Carolina's two-year $400,000 printing contract went begging again when bidders refused to reduce their original price schedules in responding to a second call for bids from the state printing commission.

Adjournment of a conference between the State Printing Commission and the bidders apparently marked the end of negotiations looking to the award of the contract, for the time being at least, and the state will enter the new biennium July 1 without a contract arrangement for handling its public printing.

The commission meanwhile will turn to other states in a search for a new way to meet its printing requirements without meeting the substantial cost increase sought by the printers who have held the contracts for the past several years.

Frank D. Grist, commissioner of Labor and Printing, and W. F. George, his chief assistant, were commissioned to visit several states and find out how printing is handled there.

The deadlock between the printing commission and the bidding printers arose last month over the cost allowance for composition work. The five printers who have held the contract for the past two years raised the composition cost in their bids from 80 per 1,000 ems, the existing contract price, to 98 cents per 1,000 ems.

The difference in this item would mean an increase of $18,000 in printing costs over the present contract price.

ACQUITTED—SUES FOR LIBEL

North Carolina Constable Asks $10,000 of Rutherfordton Sun

George Vess, state constable, of Spartanburg county, South Carolina, has instituted suit against the Rutherfordton Sun, for $10,000 damages as a result of an alleged libelous article published on August 5, 1926.

The article in the Sun is alleged in the complaint to have been published with a view to injuring the defendant. It is alleged to have charged Vess with the wilful murder of Thomas Cothran, near Fingerville, in Spartanburg county, in July, 1926.

Vess was tried for murder in Spartanburg, and acquitted, a directed verdict being given from the bench.

"AN Extra Day of Rest" is a good heading for a quarter or half-page of ads of laundries in your vicinity. Print a coupon at the top of the lay-out to be filled in by your reader and send to one of the laundries mentioned in the ad as a "ticket to the extra day of rest." A little reading matter explaining the idea sets off the lay-out to good advantage.—Cole, Fall River.

Why not solicit a page of advertising to feature window and door screens, and the various sprays, poisons and other ingredients to kill or catch these pests. A few stories on the damage done by flies and mosquitoes, and the rapidity with which they breed, could be used in the center of the page. This is the right time of year for merchants who sell these things to let the public know where they can be purchased.—L. D. Chamberlain.

One of the most complete and successful business guides ever compiled in the territory was published by the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press and Evening News on June 15. It consisted of a five-page supplement to the classified advertising section. Virtually every business, manufacturing and professional concern in the Albany area was listed, giving name, address, class of service, telephone number and name of manager. The information, with other useful data, will be published in book form as a buying guide.—C.W., Albany, N. Y.

For the "lean summer months" the Roanoke (Va.) Times and World News has compiled a page of small advertisements to run once a week under a streamer head. "Buy at Home" slogans are used in one column boxes alongside of the six column streamer that is changed weekly. "Do business with People You Know" is one of the captions used. A three column eight-inch editorial on the advantages of purchasing from the home merchant is the appeal that attracts the advertisers. These editorials are different each time the page runs.—J. F. Donalson, Roanoke, Va.

"Souvenir Day"—Get merchants to cooperate first in offering of genuine bargains. Group these bargains on one sheet, page size, space to each merchant depending upon number participating divided into space of entire page. Nothing on this but explanation of the day, and each merchant one "leader" and leader price bold. Mail this page out week ahead to outside of town mailing list secured from some source and which will make good coverage of your outside territory. Next have each merchant participating arrange for some souvenir of worthwhile merchandise, value from 20 to 25ç, to be given free with each purchase of $1 or over. The idea on the date of publication, day before Souvenir Day should be good for two eight-page sections in community of 10,000 people. One store in a community of that size gave over 3,000 souvenirs, which means over 3,000 sales of $1 or over in one day. Have merchants of larger stores where trading is heaviest establish desk where patrons must present sales slip and give name and address before receiving souvenir. This gives splendid additions to mailing lists.—H. W. Fredericks, Monrovia (Cal.) Daily News.

In small cities, an institutional advertising feature, based on the theme "Your Drugist Is More than a Merchant," should be practicable and of real constructive worth, both to newspaper and merchant. If enough advertisers can be signed up, it should occupy at least a page with a space provided in the two center columns for educational articles on the functions of the druggist and his relation to the health of the community.

Have the druggists cooperating sign these articles, and if practical, use portrait cuts with each signed article. Naturally, the rate charged should cover the value of space devoted to the editorial feature. Such advertising pages, rightly handled, possess real news value. —Victor N. Vetromile, Malden, Mass.

One department store advertised that it would give away one free baby chick with each $1 purchase made at the store on a certain date. Also that there would be an expert in the store giving free advice on how to raise chickens. The chicks cost the store 15 cents each. Twenty-five hundred were claimed that day. The store is considering continuing this scheme one day a week for some time.—Thora Eigenmann.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

HERE'S a stunt, mainly applicable during the vacation season, but sometimes of usefulness at other times: Carry a personal message in an office advertisement, addressed to some known local resident who has ordered your paper to follow him on his vacation trip. Mention in the message that his order has been received and will be filled, etc. You'll find the psychological effect on others is good.—B.A.T., Springfield, Ohio.

An interesting variation of the "Ask Me Another" fad would be to run a series of questions daily under the caption "Know Your State" or "Know Your City." Answers to be run the following day. Good local interest here; chance to use names and familiarize readers with city and state.—Norman B. Terry.

An "Older Persons Contest" conducted a few years ago has come in handy for a new feature in the Troy (N. Y.) Record. Photos and information received in the original contest are now being worked into birthday articles, nearly all of which are particularly interesting because they concern persons in the 80's and 90's.—C.W., Albany, N. Y.

A pleasing feature for men readers of the sports page was recently inaugurated by the Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer. This consisted of a series of problems in a box, day after day, as to an umpire's decision in such and such a case, for which the paper offered a first prize of a season's pass to the ball field, the ten runners-up being given each two tickets for any home-game.—C.M.L.

A pleasant feature for your editorial page would be two or three paragraphs (about 100 words) each day under the heading "A Thought for Today," writt each day by a different minister of yo city, and placed at the top of your ec torial column. The Logansport (Ind Press invited the ministers of the ci to write a personal expression of sor religious nature for the paper, and it h become one of the best features the pap has. The ministers were pleased wi the invitation to express themselves oth than in the pulpit, and the readers of t Press have become unusually interest in the local ministerial paragraphs. Su subjects as "Your Pastor" and "Prob tion" have been chosen by some of t ministers for their "thoughts."—Dc Richardson.

"Why I Love Milwaukee, but lau at it," is the title of a column, contai ing humorous news events of the cit published daily in the Milwaukee Journ Other newspapers might well imita —R.L., Milwaukee, Wis.

Why not a contest on "The Meane Trick I Ever Heard"? Then fc low it up with "The Kindest Action Ever Heard."—Fred L. Bennett.

Broadcasting to New York State families.

Over 25% of New York State families are radio owners. To be more specific there are now approximately 700,000 radio sets in use in the homes of New York State families. This not only shows buying power but it's a good indication that the people of the Empire State keep pace with progress, and take advantage of the modern improvements and appliances that help make the home more comfortable and enjoyable.

The advertiser who plans his national campaign should consider New York State his first market. Here he will find it most profitable to broadcast his advertising message to the greatest number of people, in a small, concentrated area where there is no limit to quality or quantity.

Announcement

Lemuel F. Parton

LEMUEL F. PARTON, "one of the very best feature writers in America," as the veteran editor, Fremont Older, describes him, has joined the staff of The Consolidated Press.

Parton's experiences range from the Polar Sea to the tropics. He met MacMillan and took his trick at the wheel steering the Bowdoin home through the ice floes. He lived and wrote the story of Goldfield in the days when it was a roaring camp. He cut his way through a South American jungle; he was in Italy at the birth of fascism. He has reported under sixteen flags.

When it was announced that he was to have a national assignment covering the big story wherever it might break, telegrams of praise and congratulation came from many notable members of the profession. Some of them appear below:

from FREMONT OLDER

I was glad to learn you had appointed Lem Parton, special staff writer for your organization. I consider Lem Parton one of the very best feature writers in America. He has done some very brilliant distinctive work for me in years past and his work since he left me is even better than in earlier days. I place him in front rank of best American newspaper writers today.

from D. A. MORRISON, Assistant Editor of LIBERTY

I have known of Lem Parton's work for many years both on the Pacific Coast and New York City. He is among the most highly regarded reporters in the game. He is one of those rare reporters a real news getter and a splendid writer. He learned this business in the old days before newspaper men became journalists.

from PAUL U. KELLOGG, Editor, the SURVEY

Congratulations to Consolidated Press in commissioning Lem Parton as special staff writer. He has rare insight into American life and motive forces which underlie the news. His beat has reached from Pacific to Atlantic and you can't do a greater public service or make more interesting contribution to American reading life than to turn him loose as reporter in general to the United States. His experience ranges over men and affairs.

from W. M. HINES, Editor and Publisher, the SAN FRANCISCO BULLETIN

Lem Parton, your new special staff writer, is one of the most brilliant editorial men in the United States. Analytical and colorful, he brings to his writing a brilliance and thoughtfulness that should at once make him a marked asset to the Consolidated Press. Parton comes from a school of Western journalism that has given many leaders to the profession. His metal has been tested on many events of supreme importance. The San Francisco Bulletin, where Parton once was managing editor, congratulates the Consolidated Press and as a Consolidated Press member will be proud to list Parton among the contributors to its columns.

from HENRY JUSTIN SMITH, Managing Editor, the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

Many times during my acquaintance with Lemuel Parton's work I have been impressed by his grasp of difficult subjects, his energy in pursuit of news and his ability as a writer. I wish him success in this new undertaking.

from J. W. BARRETT, City Editor, the NEW YORK WORLD

I have known Lem Parton for many years and have followed his newspaper career with great interest. I have been actively in contact with him from time to time, especially during his services on the N A N A and the Consolidated Press. I consider him a highly qualified man in all respects and he possesses a peculiarly distinctive ability to see and develop exclusive news features.

from WILL IRWIN

Consider Lem Parton as sharp and thorough newspaper man as I know. Beyond that he has the trick of readable writing, an unfailing eye for the picturesque and humorous and absolute integrity of word. I congratulate both him and the association.

from PETER B. KYNE

I think Lem Parton can do as fine writing as any man I know of and I'll take short end of modest bet that he could have been one of foremost fiction writers of country had he not given his heart to the fourth estate. He has been trained in every angle of the newspaper game and is a thoughtful, cultured man of great educational attainments. He is student of world affairs and I think is fully competent to tackle any job to which you can assign him.

Parton knows America from the Golden Gate to Hell's Kitchen, and from the "Loop" to the Levees. He will cover the big stories wherever they break.

180 communities where production economies beckon to Industry

To the tremendous natural resources of Georgia has been added another great, vital asset—created by nature, harnessed by man—adequate, cheap Hydro-electric Power. Today 180 Georgia communities can supply power on a par with the largest centers, at rates that compare with the lowest in the country.

Among those 180 communities you will find the precise combination of natural resources, transportation, labor and other factors required for economical production.

To industry they offer intelligent, efficient Anglo-Saxon workers, whose willingness cuts costs and simplifies the problems of management. They offer the benefit of Georgia's low tax rates. They offer a wealth of raw materials, so diverse as to include the needs of practically every industrial development, so reasonable in price that they form a major attraction.

Impartial engineering analysis piles up such a startling total of savings that men from other sections often doubt the findings. But they are truthful findings. Georgia is inherently a profitable location and will increase your net profits.

It is a part of the work of this company to place the facts about Georgia in the hands of America's Industrial Leaders, in order to stimulate the flow of industry to our state.

WE BANK ON THE SOUTH

Everybody knows how the South has come forward by leaps and bounds in recent years until today it is the most rapidly developing section of the United States. ¶But it was not so long ago, back before the World War, that the rest of the country looked on this section as a kind of poor relation, good to visit at times but never likely to amount to much in a business way. ¶While such ideas were current in the North and East, Caldwell & Company, a Southern banking house, had faith in its own section. So strong was that faith that this institution staked its future on the slogan, We bank on the South. That slogan we have held to ever since. We have come to see our faith supremely vindicated. ¶Not only is the South now leading the nation in development of resources, but its securities have gained high favor among investors everywhere. Those who bought Southern bonds of our recommendation a few years ago have seen a substantial increase in the security behind these issues. ¶We wish to go on record further by stating our belief that the growth of the South in the past ten years is insignificant in comparison with that which will take place in the ten years that lie just ahead. ¶With a broad and intimate knowledge of the South to back our original faith, we know that the Southern States have only crossed the threshold of a period of major industrial, commercial and agricultural development. ¶Now, as ever . . . We bank on the South. ¶We will be glad to submit a list of selected Southern securities to interested investors, upon request.

The "Iron Capital" Of Coming Years

Birmingham is the future iron and steel center of the American Continent, according to geologists who have made a survey of conditions here and elsewhere in the United States.

It has not been so long ago that the mere suggestion that the steel center would move southward to Birmingham within a few years was scoffed at by those interested in the industry, but gradually it is dawning upon them that, while the metal of other fields is being exhausted at a rate that threatens absolute depletion within a generation, in the Birmingham district approximately three centuries will be required to deplete the coal and iron ore deposits that have been surveyed and tested.

The Mesaba Range, commonly referred to as the Lake Superior district, now and for years past the principal ore producer in the United States, and the Birmingham district have about the same quantity of unmined ore, according to Ernest F. Burchard, of the Geological Survey of the United States Department of the Interior, but the rate of production in the Lake Superior district is 10 times greater than in the Birmingham area.

With an estimated untouched deposit of 2,000,000,000 tons of ore in each of these districts, Lake Superior is shipping at the rate of 60,000,000 tons a year; the Birmingham district, at 6,000,000 tons. This rate continued, Mr. Burchard says, will exhaust the Lake Superior District in 33 years, while the Birmingham district will last 330 years.

The assumption of the relative life of the two districts is based, Mr. Burchard says, on the theory that the present rate of production will continue. Increased production, or decreased production, would lengthen or shorten the life of the district undergoing the change.

Concurrent with the survey made by Mr. Burchard, a survey of the coal deposits in the Birmingham district was made by Charles Butts, of the Geological Survey. He states the coking coal deposits here are sufficient to last three centuries or more, provided this kind of coal is not drawn too heavily upon for other purposes.

It is pointed out by Mr. Burchard that the rate of ore consumption in the Birmingham district is not likely to reach the present proportions of the Lake Superior district, because of the depth of the deposits, some of which are between 3,000 and 4,000 feet below the surface. There it has to be mined slowly and brought out a little at a time through slopes.

Mr. Burchard estimates that there are 1,470,000,000 tons of first grade red ore and 500,000,000 tons of second grade red ore apparently available above a depth of 3,500 to 4,000 feet in the Birmingham district and that at present rate of consumption this would last 330 years.

Coke is essential to the iron and steel industry, the survey states, and in this respect Birmingham is peculiarly fortunate as both coking coal and iron ore are in close proximity and can be assembled at the furnace at low transportation cost.

At present about one-third of the coal is used for purposes other than the manufacture of coke. If this rate were maintained, there still would be sufficient coking coal to produce the 900,000,000 tons of coke necessary for smelting the 1,470,000,000 tons of first-grade red ore.

Having studied these figures obtained through a survey of the coal and iron ore deposits, Mr. Burchard says the Birmingham district will be the longest lived iron mining district in the United States. Furnaces may be in operation here long after the fires have been banked in the furnaces of other districts.

Triumph of the New South Acclaimed on Publishers Silver Birthday

eview of Social and Economic Development Pictures Golden Age—Southland Has Taken Rank as Generous Third of the Nation Since Southern Newspaper Publishers Association Was Organized

OURING the Southern states in this year of grace is an experience replete with thrills and fascinations for the patriotic American citizen. One comes quickly to understand the astonishing meaning of the popular appellation, the New South. What Midas touch has transformed the vast rritory from Chesapeake Bay to the lo Grande, from Atlantic and Gulf uters to the old Mason and Dixon line, Ohio River and northern boundaries of rkansas and Oklahoma? The transi-tn, both social and economic, is a naissance, a retrieval and a progression i some respects unparalleled in history. In the main essentials of community life ad action the South of today is a gener-cs one-third of the United States of merica. Her triumph over adversities tat followed the Civil War now seems mplete, the spirit of enterprise and the ause devotion among her forty millions aounts to a patriotic chivalry unique in t: nation and the marvel of her mate-rl expansion since 1900 marks an epoch i: American history equal to that of the ening and building of the West. Badly duded is he who thinks of the South in t: terms of twenty, or ten or even five ars ago.

Next week at Atlanta the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will elebrate with impressive ceremony the 2h anniversary of the founding of that iportant regional division of the na-tn's press and the occasion offers appro-pate auspices for a review of the amaz-ig quarter of a century of Southern velopment. It is a fitting and dramatic ccumstance that the journalistic flag-barers of this quarter of a century sec-nal advance should reach their silver thday as an organized body at a time wen the world is proclaiming the New South.

As defined by the United States Census l South covers an area of nearly one-lrd of the nation's 3,026,789 square res and comprises 16 of the 48 states. Tis area represents both the Old South history and the New South of prog-ss. Of the 16 states Delaware, Mary-nd, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia were of the thir-en original colonies, cradle of our na-inal life. The Virginia House of Burgesses was the first government estab-shed in America. A Southerner took eadership of the revoluntionary struggle nd gave the world a new standard of man freedom. Southern statesman-hip created the Declaration of Inde-pendence and had an important part in the rming of the Federal constitution and f14 men who succeeded Washington in i high office, up to the time of the vil War, 8 were natives of the South. Historically the South holds many of n most glorious tablets that have been written by the valor of free men.

The first national census, taken three years after the adoption of the Constitution, credited to the South half of the 4,000,000 population. In 1860 the South's share of the nation's people was 35 per cent. Following the Civil War the population dwindled. Foreign immigration which flooded many northern and western states was not encouraged by the South, but today her population is officially estimated as more than one-third of the nation's total of 117,000,000 people.

By MARLEN PEW

To understand the full meaning of the New South comparison must be made with the territory left devastated and prostrate by the Civil War and tragically divided in sentiments which now, happily, seem completely lost in the mists of time. Among the archives of the Census Bureau at Washington there is a document which bears this dramatic legend: "Consider the condition of the South when the war ended! The younger men had fallen in battle. The older men had seen their estates laid waste, their savings exhausted, their property taken from them. All—both young and old—had no capital left with which to work the estates that still remained in their hands. Everything—even the railroads—was in ruins. The country was reduced to poverty. It was a land of debt, devastation and death; a land of widows and orphans; and a land 'of sorrows and acquainted with grief.' In 1860 the value of taxable property in the South was six and a third billions of dollars; in 1870 it was three and a half billions. The loss of life for the South during the war, including those killed in battle and those dying from wounds or disease, has been estimated as 260,000 men—one-fifth of the total white male population between 20 and 50 years of age. One man in five! * * * But the census does not show the number of maimed and crippled, the number of men whose health was permanently broken, or the number of widows and orphans."

Richard H. Edmonds, distinguished editor of the Manufacturers' Record and famed sage of the South, in his office at Baltimore a week ago, declared that the first 11 years following the close of the Civil War were "hell, worse than the four years of war." Between 1865 and 1900 some five million native whites emigrated from the states between Virginia and Louisiana to the North, West and Southwest, an unprecedented drain of man-power and vitality. Until the year 1900 in the central South almost exclusive dependence upon cotton was a curse that cast a pall of misery on the population. The average planter was a mere grub-staker, always in the shadow of low-priced cotton and endlessly in debt for food and feed raised in the West and North. The first great act to break the chains of the central South was crop diversification and, as Mr. Edmonds adds, diversification of thought.

From this brief sketch of the past it may be seen that the New South is the creature of the era that the Southern publishers are celebrating at Atlanta. The traveler in Dixie today finds the unhappy age forgotten and everywhere the people seem to possess, not the "booster spirit" that one often encounters elsewhere, but pride in tangible achievement and a vision of much greater things. The Southerner addresses the stranger thus: "Have you seen our new high school? Of course it is too large for present needs, but more children are coming to use it. Have you driven along our new concrete highway? It is 20 feet wide and crosses the state. That mill over there was built five years ago, gets its hydro-electric power at 1½ cents per kilowatt hour? How much do you pay for current up North? There has never been a strike in that mill. Have you seen the model town that was built for the mill workers?"

With enthusiasm he will tell you of the varied crops raised in the state, of prices obtained, of the number of automobiles owned and driven by city folks and agriculturists. He will enjoy the compliment when you say that the people seem busy and happy, the girls pretty and the boys strong and active. He is calm about the future of the South and unconcealedly excited about the present.

The wonder of 25 years in the South, in the broad sense, is best shown by the comparative statistics of the Southland, as it is officially defined by the Census Bureau, and those of the whole nation. Here are some random flashes of information that astonished this writer and may be equally surprising to the EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S reading audience:

The value of manufactured products in the South has increased since 1900 nearly eight-fold. The value of manufactured products for the whole nation in the period increased less than six-fold.

True property values of the nation have been multiplied, in the quarter century, by approximately 4½; those of the South by approximately 4⅓.

Of course, the South possesses a natural monopoly of cotton production, and the value of her annual crop ranges from $1,200,000,000 to $1,650,000,000, but the value of her manufactured cotton products in 1925 was $930,000,000 against about twice that amount for the whole country, this indicating how broad has been the movement of cotton manufacturing to the proximity of the cotton field, available labor and hydro-electric power.

Great though the cotton industry remains, the South's total value of farm products exceeds five billions, which is about a third of the value of farm products of the whole country.

If anyone doubts that diversification of Southern agriculture is a fact these statistics will be enlightening: Last year the South raised more than two and a half billion bushels of corn, a billion and a third pounds of tobacco, two billion bushels of wheat and oats and hundreds of thousands of carloads of truck and fruit and her farm acres pastured more than 150,000,000 head of cattle, sheep, swine, horses and mules.

The annual products of Southern mines, quarries and wells, according to the last government census, are worth one billion dollars, which is a third of the wealth from these sources for the nation.

The South cuts some eighteen billion feet of lumber per annum, the nation only forty billion feet.

In the South about an eighth of the pig iron and a seventh of coke are made and almost an eighth of the iron ore mined.

In the production of petroleum the South supplies a third of the world and and gives this nation more than half of her supplies. Incidentally, in 1900, the South's petroleum yield was only 17,000,000 barrels, against 473,500,000 barrels last year.

Power-House and Dam of Alabama Power Company, 50 miles from Birmingham.

The great story of 25 years of Southern progress is eloquently told in the terms of dollars. Individual bank deposits in 1900 were $691,000,000; last year they were $7,344,000,000, a more than ten-fold increase. The increase for the whole country was only about seven-fold.

But while the South is proud and happy over these material developments she best enjoys such facts as that she spent more than 30 times as much for highways in 1926 as in 1900, whereas the national expense for the purpose in the same time gives 24 as its multiple. And for public schools the Southern expenditure has increased more than ten-fold, whereas the ration of increase for the nation is approximately 8½ over that of 1900.

The South believes, and with manifest justice, that the other two-thirds of Uncle Sam's big family do not half realize or appreciate how her third is prospering. She believes that moth-eaten ideas concerning her old estate, in the years when she confessedly was down, still animate a considerable portion of public opinion in the north and west. She is working to dispel this delusion. The New South wants to be given its true rank and invites the world to consider whether any people in any land can show comparable material conquest by peaceful pursuits during the past quarter of a century.

Where the north or the west leave off and the South begins in this day is distinguishable only by imaginary lines drawn on the earth. Her fifty cities ranging in population from 40,000 to upward of a million, are no whit different in all respects of modern, urban utility than the finest cities of the same size in the North and West. You see cotton and tobacco [in Florida, tropical fruits] growing in the fields, but otherwise the South's farms are like the farms of the East and middle West. If the North and West boast good roads, so does the Sou and of the same sort. If the landscape the North and middle West and sectio the Pacific Coast are bristling w smokestacks and electric transmissi lines the South can show its share. Y see more negroes in the South than the North, except for Harlem in N York city, the "Black Belt of Chicag and sections of a few other Northe cities, but you do not encounter in t South among the whites many counte ances that obviously trace back to Sou ern Europe, Russia or Asia. It is a d tinctly Anglo-Saxon population, hom geneous, thrifty and at work. Less th 3 per cent of the white population of t South is foreign born.

The hook-worm and malaria slu make the South indignant. These curs have existed there but health conditio now favorably compare with any secti of the country and the average deat rate is the lowest in the country. It an acknowledged fact, long known a often published, that the altitudes a climatic conditions prevailing in t Southland are "favorable to the establis ment and maintenance of the higher ty of the white man's civilization."

H. L. Mencken calls the South t "Bible Belt" and the South exults in t appellation. It is a Bible Belt and n where in America are there finer church for the size of cities and nowhere else a churches so full to overflowing with Su day and even week-day congregatio The religious fervor that one finds over the South has no equal in Americ It is said that the South has built mo than 60,000 new churches of all denom nations since 1900.

Education? Following the Civil W the South, struggling to regain her fe neglected her educational enterprises a the balance of the nation fairly distanc her in this respect. But the New Sou is equipped with public schools—n make-shift affairs, but the best money c supply. One might also call the Sou of this day the School Belt and it surprising, to some even amusing, to s a magnificent school, brand new, su rounded by a little cluster of houses ar a few stores, the inhabitants of whic would not half fill the study rooms. B in the morning all is explained when shiny auto-bus drives up to this scho laden with the children from the farn and villages of a radius of perhaps fift miles. There are schools for colore children in the South that are a hundre times finer than scores of rural schools in Eastern states known to this writer. The South for years has been, and is now, spending more than $300,000,000 per annum to build up and equip common schools. A North Carolina editor said to this writer: "This state is building a new common school every day of the year, has been for a long time and proposes to continue to do so. Our free educational system is our first civic concern. After that comes roads." Institutions of higher learning, liberally endowed and sumptuously supported by the states or by private philanthropy, are developing college and university facilities all over the South. Vocational education is being stressed in the high schools. The pathetic, "Ignorant White Trash" characterization of Old South days is rapidly being whipped out of use or meaning by the American school-teacher and a community which solidly stands behind free education for all children, rich and poor, white and black.

Good roads have been leading strings to Southern progress, their necessity the more demanded by automotive traffic. They are built by process of taxation and they spell high civic spirit for any community where they exist. Twenty-five years ago the red clay roads of the South were celebrated for the miseries they inflicted on man and beast—find them today! Wonderful paved or improved highways, graded and bridged, stretch over mountain, plain and valley, sometimes to amazingly remote places, from Baltimore to Brownsville, from Washington to the tip of the Florida peninsula, and the South proclaims that her highway building is at the most rapid rate of any section of the country. Eastern cities would call Texas roads "boulevards," so great is their width of pavement. The Dixie highway from north to the extreme south is one of the world's best and most beautiful thoroughfares.

Highway expenditures in the South in 1926 were nearly $400,000,000, whereas 410,000,000 was being spent in the year the S. N. P. A. was organized. The whole nation spent last year $1,300,000,000 for its roads. Again, in this respect, the South holds her third place in the national scheme of development.

No section of the country that does not hold either New York or Chicago, our great treasuries, can compare in banking but the South's aggregate bank resources in 1926 were $10,000,000,000, against only $700,000,000 in 1900. The bank resources of the whole nation last year were $65,000,000,000. The popular impression in the north that much of the new industrial enterprise has been financed elsewhere is no more true than of the same implication in reference to other industrial and agricultural sections of the country and as regards textiles it is asserted that fully 80 to 85 per cent of the South's mills are locally owned.

The South delights in her magnificent resorts, the fairy-land of the Great Smoky Mountains, the wondrous charms of the Florida tropics, picturesque Chattanooga with Moccasin Bend misty beneath Lookout Mountain and hundreds of similarly rare natural beauties. The South is proud of such as the remaining colonial architecture, for example that gem of ancient building, the state house at Raleigh which is being preserved as a trophy of the yesteryear; glorious old New Orleans, nestling under the new; the tidal coast-line of 8,000 miles which is characterized by an endless succession of bays, sounds, inlets, lagoons and the great Gulf; nearly 20,000 miles of inland waterways, of which 15,000 miles are navigable; great ports through which pass between six and seven billion dollars of shipping in a year; the location of 426 new industries on Southern railroads last year and, not the least, the charm of good, well-built homes, whether cottage or palace. The shambling old South is vanishing as if it were a nightmare. The new South of progress has no place for ugliness nor for sloth.

Type of improved highways which have cemented the fourteen counties on the Delmarva Peninsula into an economic unit, Delaware-Maryland-Virginia.

When one gets into the realm of futures in the South the sky is the limit. In all that is being undertaken in improvements anticipated expansion is being provided for; one sees this promise of future greatness in all public utility construction and in the plans of every city and state. They tell you that the climate is right, the resources of the soil have not been exploited by half, the tax laws are encouraging, the conditions inviting, the opportunities to gain wealth alluring, the flow coming their way and that nothing can stop it. Hydro-electric development, they say, is just started. Every year breaks every previous year in the number of new industries gained. Balanced crop production has wiped out the great economic peril of the past. The South possesses the largest area of available standing timber remaining in the United States. Growth, development, expansion on every side and in almost everything is the order. The output of any essential or fundamental of the South, it is claimed, can be tripled or quadrupled and thousands of acres of land merely await the hand of man. Such is the New South's vision of greater conquests.

New Sentiment Among the People

THE physical changes that one beholds in the South are no greater than the altered sentiment that reveals itself as the northerner revisits southern cities after a lapse of more than 15 years. There is a new idealism and it is startling how few of the characteristics that the North and West popularly attribute to the South can be found when one goes there in search of them. The languid negro strumming the banjo on the Swanee River, the Southern Colonel in the stage uniform of Simon Legree, the proud poor and the tyrannical rich of the movie and magazine are just as scarce in the South on close inspection as is the roving Buffalo herd on Western plains, Indian war-dances in the South-west, silver mounted saddles on Colorado ranches, fiddling Yankees in New Hampshire, plug-hats in Wall Street or log cabins in Ohio.

In Southern sentiment as in physical aspect the lines between North and West and South are fast vanishing.

In a recent issue of The New South, a handsome monthly magazine produced at Chattanooga, the following significant editorial was noted:

"If there is a characteristic dominant in this new era of progress astir in the South, it is the growing tendency to throw overboard the sentimental trappings of Old South traditions. This is especially noticeable in the larger centers. Losing the languor that has been aesthetically termed 'atmosphere,' cities follow the universal trend toward ultitarian uniformity. Hospitality, as a sectional trait, has long been jettisoned as incompatible with the modern social order. Courtliness has given way to civil courtesy. Romance, as a laudable avocation to be pursued by the scions of stately Southern families, has retreated in disorder before the advancing columns of the Twentieth Century flapper—brandishing the javelins of her realistic creed.

"It is a healthy indication, and those who consider deeply will find in its rudiments no lack of fundamental reverence for the finer qualities of a noble heritage. It is simply a revealing and a weighing of intrinsic values; for there has been a tendency in the South to pass the counterfeit of haloed memories as legal tender for current obligations. There are still those who utilize the mantle of their dignity as a cloak to hide soiled linen. But traditions that are sound, and aristocracy that will stand the test of fire, need no pompous introductions and no barricade of sham to secure their permanence.

"It is this germ of inquisition that is responsible for the revitalization of the modern South. It is marked by a certain ruthlessness that is typical of youth and of all vigorous growth. Traditions that cannot stand before the light of truth must wither and fluff off, unnourished by the maudlin sympathies that have been the blood of their existence.

"It has been the throttling inner consciousness of this tendency toward sham that has hobbled the stride of the South and has given rise to the bluster about traditions which we only half believed ourselves. But from within there has arisen a new faith, bolstered by the force of self-assurance and standing upon the knowledge of inherent power. The eyes of the South are on a new horizon. There has been a long hoarding of energies that are eager to meet the test of a swifter progress. And behind it all, despite the melodrama that has been woven about its past, there is the splendid fortitude of a staunch and worthy heritage, that will give vitality to future generations and justify the promise of a tried and worhy South."

Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association History in Outline-1903-1927

First Meeting Place Was Piedmont Hotel in Atlanta—First President H. H. Cabaniss—Story of Ann Gatherings Now Compiled for First Time—Changed from Social to Business Organization

THIS history was compiled from records gathered by Walter C. Johnson when secretary-treasurer with an idea of publishing a complete Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association history. There is no official record of meetings prior to the 12th convention in Atlanta in 1914. Information about meetings previous to that time were secured from newspaper accounts in the cities where the conventions were held, and when the first research started it was not known when the first and subsequent meetings took place. A careful search of the files of the Nashville Banner by the late Edgar M. Foster furnished the data which gave a majority of the leads in assisting Mr. Johnson to get information giving the dates, meeting places, officers and members of the executive committees.

THE history of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association has been written from day to day by the publishers who form it. Always aggressive, always pioneering, always venturing—the S. N. P. A. is unique among publishers' associations.

H. H. Cabaniss, 1903-1905

Every effort to restrict the activities of the association so as not to replace, conflict with or duplicate the work of other organizations has met with demand the membership that the organization be strengthened, developed and continued so as to perform a distinct service to a large group of daily newspaper publishers which have much in common through training, economics, trade and climate.

The life of the S. N. P. A. as an organization can be divided into three distinct periods, marked plainly in the records when the 25 years are viewed as a whole. The first 13 years comprised a delightful and romantic period when the social events of the annual gatherings were highspots. The conventions were made official occasions in the cities.

Those first 13 meetings were held in 12 different cities, Atlanta entertaining the first and twelfth conventions. The last 12 conventions have been held without regard to local features, but aimed chiefly at a business program for the membership.

J. C. Hemphill, 1905-1906

The activities of one man are indelible upon the history of the a on at the beginning of the second period, for Walter C. Johnson of the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News became secretary-treasurer in 1916. Within a few months after he entered upon the duties of his office, a membership drive was launched and the first bulletin was issued in Jan., 1917. When he became secretary-treasurer the membership numbered 66, and today there are 200 members. He has been an active official every year since 1913. He was a director in 1913 and 1914; elected vice-president in 1915; secretary-treasurer in 1916; president in 1925; chairman of the board in 1926-27.

The third and present period started in 1924, when the affairs of the association required more attention than could be given by a member, and then it was decided to create the position of manager, with this person being an executive in charge of a permanent headquarters office at Chattanooga. The board of directors selected as the first manager, Cranston Williams, of Greensboro, Ga., who resigned as secretary to United States Senator W. J. Harris to accept the position. Williams, a World War veteran, learned the mechanical side of the printing business as a youngster in his father's office, the Greensboro Herald-Journal. From 1915 until he entered the army in 1917. he was editor and general manager of the Americus (Ga.) Times-Recorder. On his maternal side, he is great grandson of Colonel Cornelius R. Hanlieter, of Atlanta, a pioneer editor and publisher.

The association has met in 13 different cities for its 25 conventions. Eleven meetings have been held at Asheville, N. C., in the last 13 years and Atlanta has entertained 3 conventions.

Col. Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States and Shreveport Times, is the only active S. N. P. A. member today who was a member of the first executive committee, which was later displaced in the organization by a board composed of directors from each state. He was present at the original meeting and has been very active in association affairs. He has carried the burden of the S. N. P. A. fight in behalf of a reduction in second class postage rates in the last few years. Col. Ewing served on the executive committee for the first three years and returned to the board as a member in 1921.

The territory did not include the states of Oklahoma and West Virginia when first organized. Oklahoma came into the association in 1920 and West Virginia entered in 1924.

Curtis B. Johnson, of the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, is the oldest past president active in the association today, he having served in 1910-11.

It is interesting to note that among the names of those most active in S. N. P. A. affairs as officers and directors are found the men who have been most successful as newspaper directors and publishers. More frequently it is found that the person on the business side of the newspaper is active in the association, but the secret of bringing about full co-operation from the editorial department is still being sought.

Experiments, inventions, innovations and pioneering have always been encouraged and fostered by the S. N. P. A. The association came into being when modern machinery and equipment was in the progressive stages of development, and nowhere did these future successes receive greater encouragement than among the individual publishers who formed the S. N. P. A. An accurate roll of the most successful newspaper men in the South since 1903 will show that every person on that list has been active in S. N. P. A. affairs. No greater testimonial could be given an association, for no one would say that the success of these persons came as a result of their own individuality and ideas.

Dry mats received among their first trials through the interest of the S. N. P. A. in 1916, when experiments were made by the Houston Chronicle, the Columbia State and the Chattanooga News and the results given to the membership in the first bulletin issued by the association, dated Jan. 1, 1917.

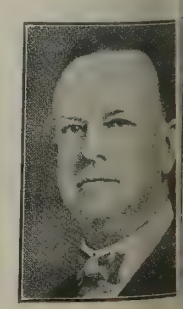
The first co-operative advertising paign to sell the South to the natio launched in 1912 by Printers' through George M. Kohn, on a basis of subscribing newspapers paying their pro rata part directly to Printers' Ink without the S. N. P. A. being responsible. The schedule provided for 18 pages, with $955 pledged. More than routine work in association affairs developed from this campaign, with additional labors fallin Secretary W. M. Clemens.

W. T. Anders 1915-1916

At the Nov., 1913, executive con tee meeting in Birmingham, Victo Hanson, of the Birmingham (News, offered a motion, seconde Walter C. Johnson, that something nite and tangible be developed "on proper method of advertising the S and Southern newspapers." That m was adopted unanimously and the committee to take charge of an S P. A. advertising campaign was C B. Johnson, chairman; F. W. R. man, Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-U W. L. Halstead, Atlanta Constitu and V. H. Hanson. Messrs. Hanson W. C. Johnson have served continu in connection with the details of e S. N. P. A. campaign since the first one started in 1914. The year prior was a private arrangement between Printers' Ink and certain members, although encouraged and approved by the association.



R. S. Jones, 1916-1917

The printing school idea was first developed by the S. N. P. A. the Macon Printing School was started. Out of project and experiences have grown printing schools all over the cou some fostered and supported by ass tions and others by individuals.

V. H. Hanson and Walter C. Joh are the only two men who have f every office in the S. N. P. A. Mr. H son has the longest record of contin connection, for he was present at organization meeting in Atlanta. was secretary-treasurer from 1906 1911, when he was elected vice-presi He was president in 1912-13 and se as a member of the executive com tee from 1913 to 1920, and chairma the board from 1923 to 1925.

The same purpose of "business before pleasure" has marked the association since its beginning. The account of the organization meeting in Atlanta, on April 14, 1903, contained this paragraph:

ogether and to meet each other socially, h did not overlook the business obes which brought them together. Tly talked business at the morning eting, after the general details of the ganization had been completed and r after a barbecue dinner at the Piedmont Driving Club, they came back to the el and began business discussions anew.

The meeting was called to order shortly after eleven o'clock by Hon. Clark Howell of the Atlanta Constitution. F. P. Glass, of the Montgomery Advertiser, to whose enthusiasm and energy the present meeting was largely due, was then called to the chair temporarily. J. H. Cabaniss, of the Atlanta Journal, was made temporary secretary. A committee of five was then appointed to submit plans for a permanent organization, and while waiting for this committee, the newspaper men indulged in a discussion of matters of general interest to the guild.

Permanent organization of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association was perfected soon after the report of the committee was made. There were very few changes made in the report, and following its adoption as a whole, permanent officers were elected for the ensuing year.

The report of the committee in full as adopted is as follows:

'The committee on permanent organization recommend the formation of an association to be known as

'The Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association.

'And that the membership be confined to daily newspapers of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas, Kentucky and Florida.

'We recommend that the annual meeting, time and place be elected by the executive committee.

W. A. ELLIOTT, 1921-1922

'We recommend the following officers: President, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and an executive committee of seven members, besides the president and secretary, who will be ex-officio members of the executive committee.

"'The terms of officers shall be one year.

"'The objects of this association shall be to promote the business interests, harmony and prosperity of its members. It is not antagonistic to any national organization, but it hopes to be auxiliary to such national newspaper publishers' associations as will work in harmony with it. It is not the purpose of this organization to interfere with the internal management of the offices of its members.

"'Discussions of all topics of interest or profit to newspapers are invited.

"'The annual dues shall be fixed by the executive committee, not to exceed $60 per annum.

"After the adoption of the committee report, Mr. Howell nominated F. P. Glass, of the Montgomery Advertiser, for permanent president, and H. H. Cabaniss, of the Atlanta Journal, for secretary. Mr. Glass insisted that some one who was more thoroughly identified with the business department of a newspaper than himself should be chosen president. After some discussion on this line, Mr. Glass making his refusal positive, H. H. Cabaniss was nominated and unanimously elected president for the ensuing year and Mr. Glass was prevailed upon to accept the positions of secretary and treasurer, to which he was elected by acclamation.

"The following were chosen members of the executive committee, in addition to the officers who are ex-officio members: Robert Ewing, of the New Orleans States; Rufus N. Rhodes, of the Birmingham News; D. A. Tompkins, of the Charlotte Observer; J. C. Hemphill, of the Charleston News & Courier; E. M. Foster, of the Nashville Banner; T. T. Stockton, of the Jacksonville Times-Union & Citizen; and A. R. Holderby, of the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

"The association then decided that the amount of the annual dues should be fixed by the executive committee in accordance with the needs of the association, not to exceed $60.

"The secretary was authorized to employ an assistant when the business of the association became such as to warrant it, the expenses to be paid from the funds arising from the annual dues.

"Outside of some discussion as to business matters affecting newspapers generally, there was no other business of importance transacted, but throughout the meeting there was an air of business which indicated that the newspaper managers meant to get together and to stay together for their mutual good. A spirit of harmony and good fellowship was engendered and the results will unquestionably be felt at no very distant day.

"At the conclusion of the morning meeting, Gov. Terrell came into the hall by special invitation. He was introduced to the gathering by President Cabaniss and made a brief speech in which he congratulated the newspaper men of the South upon getting together and expressed the hope that their organization will yield unbounded success. Governor Terrell said he had been told the meeting was one of the prominent and representative newspaper men of the South. 'That being true,' the governor said, 'you are the prominent and representative newspaper men of the whole country, for nowhere is the true spirit of the press more felt, and nowhere is the influence of the newspaper more powerful than right here in the Southern states.' Governor Terrell expressed great regret that he was unable to join the newspaper men in their barbecue at the Piedmont Club, but said he was detained by important business at the capitol.

CHARLES I. STEWART, 1922-1923

"A happy and fitting response to the address of the governor was made by R. N. Rhodes, of the Birmingham News, who was one of the brightest and most popular after-dinner speakers of the occasion. He commented especially on what the newspaper men of Georgia had done for this state, and spoke, too, of her statesmen. He paid an interesting tribute to Governor Terrell.

"The meeting then adjourned and took a special car for the Piedmont Driving Club, where a splendid barbecue, prepared under the direction of Howlett Joyner, was served.

"At the Driving Club the visiting newspaper men were the guests of the Constitution and the Journal. The table was prepared in the New York building, since the weather was too inclement to permit of the dinner being served in the open air. President Cabaniss acted as toastmaster and, after an excellent repast, called on many of the newspaper men present for after-dinner remarks. There were just fifty-two newspaper men who sat around the table and almost any kind of a hand wanted might have been drawn from the bunch. There were editors - in - chief, managing editors, business managers, advertising solicitors and advertising agents, and those who work the other side of the game. It was a jolly, genial gathering, enjoyed by everyone fortunate enough to be present.

A. G. NEWMYER, 1923-1925

"James R. Gray, of the Atlanta Journal, spoke first, urging a strenuous organization of Southern newspaper men, one which might successfully deal with important problems as they presented themselves. Clark Howell spoke of the Atlanta spirit and said that while Atlanta's great newspapers might be divided on editorial issues, they always stood shoulder to shoulder when it came to working for the interest and welfare of the city.

"R. N. Rhodes, of the Birmingham News, said the Atlanta spirit had impressed itself on Birmingham and that city was now working along similar lines. He urged that every man bend his best efforts to the success of the newspaper association. Col. J. H. Estill, of the Savannah News, was introduced by Toastmaster Cabaniss as the Nestor of the Georgia press. Col. Estill told several interesting stories and made a strong appeal for thorough organization of the newspaper men of the South.

WALTER C. JOHNSON, 1925-1926

"J. C. Hemphill, of the Charleston News & Courier, said his paper would celebrate its one hundredth anniversary this year and he cordially invited the Southern newspaper men to meet with him in Charleston to celebrate the occasion. He said, 'What Charleston needs most of all is that Atlanta spirit which had been referred to.' Robert Ewing, of the New Orleans States, said he felt that the South was unquestionably the section for the young man. He thought the association should get solidly together and work energetically in the interest of all. F. P. Glass, of the Montgomery Advertiser, was introduced by President Cabaniss as the man to whom the success of the old association had been largely due and to whose inspiration the present gathering might be attributed. Mr. Glass urged that the newspaper men should get together with a view to increasing the circulation of each by building up the advertising department.

Illiteracy is being wiped out of the South. In 1870 only 32 per cent of the white children of 5 to 19 years of age attended school. The figures today, in most states, rank equal to those of northern states. Nearly 2,000,000 negro children are receiving free public school education. In some states the length of the school term has been increased more than a third. After the Civil War 23 per cent of the white population could neither read nor write. The percentage today is under 7. Illiteracy among negroes has declined from 85 per cent in 1870 to an average of approximately 25 per cent.

"Bruce Haldeman, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and Eugene Knott, of the Louisville Post, made brief remarks joining in the general hope that the harmonious union of the newspaper men of the South would result in great benefit to the industry. A. R. Holderby, Jr., of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, said he was young in the business but could probably give some pointers on consolidation.

"D. A. Tompkins urged that the newspapers of the South should work together not only for their own benefit but along industrial lines. The newspapers of the South, he said, would have progressed in the same degree of union and harmony. What they need, he said, is co-operation.

"Interesting remarks were also made by C. R. Pendleton, of the Macon Telegraph; E. W. Barrett, of the Birmingham Age-Herald, and Chas. Rucker, of the S. S. S. Company.

"The gathering of newspaper men then returned to the Piedmont Hotel, where, after a short session, they adjourned sine die.

Active today with S. N. P. A. papers are the following men present at the organization meeting: Robert Ewing, Clark Howell, J. R. Holiday, F. H. Miller, V. H. Hanson, Charles D. Atkinson and R. L. McKenney.

At the second convention, two topics were listed for discussion which have remained in the forefront at every convention since that time—labor and newsprint paper supply. At that meeting a special S. N. P. A. committee was appointed to co-operate with a similar A. N. P. A. committee on the matter of newsprint paper. Some members suggested that it was a duplication of A. N. P. A. work, but finally it was decided that the S. N. P. A. should have a committee also.

No records are available of many topics discussed at the organization meeting, but some of those broached at the second convention in 1904 include:

"What is the best way to handle foreign agencies in order to secure rates and to get along smoothly," led by V. H. Hanson, Montgomery advertiser.

"Is it best to have special representatives in New York and Chicago?" Led by Mr. Holderby.

"What ought the Southern publishers do with the proposition of the Chicago agencies as to allowing longer period in which to force advantage of the cash discount?" Led by F. P. Glass.

Major E. B. Stahlman, of the Nashville Banner, one of the hosts at the second convention, suggested that a committee visit the paper mill of the Kansas City Star and get other information on the suggestion that Southern dailies act jointly in the purchase of paper. A motion to this effect was adopted.

At the fourth meeting a notable guest was S. S. Rogers, president of the A. N. P. A. and business manager of the Chicago Daily News.

Some of the subjects discussed were the building up of classified advertising; obligations of the non-advertising business community towards the press, with especial reference to the members of the legal medical profession; protection in the matter of returns from newsdealers; the possibility of making white print paper from cotton stalks; coupon method of securing classified advertising; agents' discounts for advertising soliciting; effects of magazine, street card and billboard advertising upon newspapers; the post-office construction of the lottery laws.

The fifth convention in 1907 was a combination affair, with Richmond as the host, but some of the sessions were held on the boat, Pocahontas, en route to Norfolk, and at the Jamestown Exposition. The late Senator Medill McCormick, at that time with the Chicago Tribune, spoke on the "Technical Side of Newspaper Work." St. Elmo Massengale spoke on the "Relations of the Agency to the Publisher." On the ride, the battleship Alabama fired a salute of 12 guns when the Pocahontas passed in Hampton Roads in honor of the retiring S. N. P. A. president, Frank P. Glass, of the Montgomery Advertiser. At this meeting the secretary-treasurer was provided with his first salary of $200 a year.

New Orleans where modern architecture blends with the glories of the world-famous old city.

In Charlotte, at the sixth convention, a telegram was sent to Speaker Joe Cannon demanding that removal of the duty on wood pulp be no longer delayed, and the Appalachian and White Mountain forest reserve bill was endorsed. George Harvey, of Harper's Weekly, was a prominent speaker at the meeting.

A topic discussed at the seventh convention in Birmingham in 1909 was the suggestion that a number of members cooperate in establishing a first class news bureau in Washington with several men who would send out for simultaneous publication a budget of general Southern news, as well as news pictures and features. Second class postage rates were being discussed then, for one topic was about the effort being made to secure a special newspaper rate of one half cent per pound. Tennessee had the largest representation at the convention.

Extra A. P. wires were the order of the day in 1909, for a discussion came on the topic: "Are the members using it pleased with the extra wire recently put on by the A. P.?"

At the 1909 meeting a committee, composed of James M. Thomson, New Orleans Item; A. F. Sanford, Knoxville Journal, and Edgar M. Foster, Nashville Banner, was appointed to formulate a plan to "present the Southern field and its resources most attractively to the big advertisers of the North and West."

At the Birmingham meeting, Rufus N. Rhodes, of the Birmingham News, was elected president, but died before the meeting in 1910 at Mobile. When Vice-President Curtis B. Johnson opened the convention, he said it was the first time an S. N. P. A. president had died before completing his term. After a tribute to Col. Rhodes, Mr. Johnson briefly outlined the purpose of the S. N. P. A. when he said: "Its organization was primarily for the purpose of enabling members to meet once a year to dis the various problems that enter newspaper making." Secretary Har announced at that meeting that mem had failed to give full co-operation the committee on the advertising gram recommended the previous year, that a "Southern edition" of Print Ink had been arranged for without sociation support, but through indivi members.

The comic supplement was descri by R. W. Brown, of the Louisville Ti as "ordinarily, to intelligent people, abomination, but the children want and it is a necessary evil."

Melville E. Stone, general manager the Associated Press, was the outsta ing guest at the 1911 convention in Lo ville. The association unanimou adopted resolutions in favor of Canad reciprocity and commending the Sou ern Commercial Congress.

A resolution was adopted at the 1 convention in Knoxville condemn Postmaster General Hitchcock for r ommending that second class post rates be increased from 1 to 2 cents pound. When New Orleans was selec as the 1913 meeting place, it was reco mended that consideration be given to invitation from Gen. Goethals to v the Panama Canal project. The adv tising campaign was again discussed a leadership in urging a program w taken by J. R. Holliday, of the Atla Constitution. He was chairman of special committee, which recommend that $400 be spent in Printers' Ink, a the executive committee was authori to expend not to exceed $750 in adv tising the South. The convention ado ed the recommendation and the first ca paign was started.

The New Orleans meeting in 19 voted to continue one ad each month Printers' Ink. The only available count of that convention comes from t New Orleans Item, and the events a parently amused the reporter, for he are some extracts:

"Frank Glass, of the Birmingha News, broke into the discussion to a whether nice newspapers ever accept pay for a fraudulent ad after they h run it inadvertently. A score arose a gave him the proper answer.

"The convention was getting wrought up about advertising agencie and Clark Howell, of the Atlanta Co stitution, was gesticulating painfully his effort to show that the poor dow trodden newspaper man ought to form union against the predatory advertisi agency, when D. D. Moore inserted hin self into the proceedings to remark th there was going to be a boat trip on t river for the members and that he move the meeting adjourn to catch the boat.

"The Southern publishers may not er joy work, but when they finally get int action the speed is awful. Witness wha they accomplished in two hours Frida afternoon, after frolicking all da Thursday and most of yesterday."

Then followed a list of officers electe and a resolution wishing Godspeed to th new President of the United State Woodrow Wilson.

The convention returned to Atlanta i 1914 for its meeting. Jason Rogers an

THE PROBLEM OF THE MISSISSIPPI FLOOD

Federal and State Legislation to Confine Vast River Within Its Banks Is Fundamental Need—Something That the Whole Nation Must Deal With for Future

By HON. HERBERT HOOVER
Secretary U. S. Department of Commerce.

Written for EDITOR & PUBLISHER

THE Mississippi River has during the last three months been most resolute on re-occupying its natural flood plain from Cairo to the Gulf. It has managed to crumple up the restraining works of man to the extent that it has assumed some 11,000,000 acres of its previous floodground out of a total of 20,000,000 acres which it occupied from time to time before man tried to confine it to the narrow channel of 1,000,000 acres. The net result was that it seriously endangered the lives and property of 1,500,000 people, actually flooded 700,000 out of their homes, 593,000 of whom have been dependent upon public support. Furthermore the later normal spring rise during through the open crevices has reflooded a considerable portion of the territory and destroyed much of the second planting already done. And the reflooding has held back the recession of the water for an additional three weeks until over a very large portion of the whole flood area it is now impossible this year to obtain the normal money crops. The people will be hard put to produce vegetables and forage sufficient for the winter.

The organization of every available agency into a rescue corps made possible the removal of hundreds of thousands from the flood area with practically no loss of life after the first few days of chaos. By effective co-ordination of the Red Cross, the Federal and State agencies, ample care and protection has been given to the exiles. These periods are now mostly passed and we come into the unromantic domain of reconstruction.

The return of these thousands of families, many of them to desolated homes, and with increased indebtedness due to the loss of crops they had planted largely with borrowed money, and inability to resume the normal course of agriculture, indeed presents a difficult problem in reconstruction. In any event the rehabilitation of these people cannot be accomplished in a single day no matter how much money is available. It must be a step-by-step undertaking; first the return of families to their homes, sometimes carrying their tents for temporary housing; second, a supply of food to carry them over until some production begins; third, supply of a minimum number of animals and implements to start farming operations; fourth, a supply of household furniture to replace the necessities that have been lost; fifth, the repair and restoration of homes; sixth, a vigorous campaign of sanitation against malaria and contagious disease.

I believe the various agencies, state and national, which we have mobilized can accomplish these steps and can carry the burden until after the harvest. At that time a new survey of the situation will need to be taken to determine whether the population has the resources to carry through until next year and to undertake farming operations for the subsequent harvest.

Many agencies have been brought to bear financially to assist in the whole flood problem—the Red Cross with the publicly subscribed fund of $15,700.000 the emergency credit corporations which we have created with loaning capacity of about $12,000.000, the use of federal equipment and supplies to the value of some $7,000,000 and the special funds for sanitation amounting to about $1,000,000 comprise the resources of assistance outside the people and states themselves. They also have resources and are fighting bravely for themselves. As I have said, these resources should carry on until after the results of the havest are known.

One of the most fundamental contributions that can be made, not only in the long view but in the short view, is the quick passage of adequate flood control legislation and appropriations for carrying out the measures. If these people could know that their future would be secure from a repetition of these events their economic situation will improve enormously by virtue of the confidence and hope that will immediately accrue to them.

In the long view we have 20,000,000 acres of the richest land in the United States, a large part of which is still unreclaimed, capable directly and indirectly of supporting a population within another quarter of a century of 5,000,000 to 10,000,000. We cannot contemplate this number of our fellow citizens living in constant jeopardy of their lives and property. Nor can we contemplate repeated loss to the community from disasters of the character we have seen, or the loss to the nation in failure to bring these lands into safe productivity.

The lower Mississippi is the drainage trough for 30 states. Moreover we must bear in mind that in the critical economic condition which the people of the flood teritory rest, it is impossible for them to provide the money for flood control. It is a problem which affects the whole economy of the nation. It is therefore a national problem.

MUSCLE SHOALS GOLDEN KEY TO POWER

All South Await Congressional Action—Developments in Tennessee Valley Held Up—Shoals Now Considered in Terms of Power Disposal—Complex Situation Reviewed

By RUSSELL KENT

Washington Correspondent of The Birmingham News, Age Herald, Montgomery Advertiser and Knoxville Journal

FINAL settlement of the Federal government's policy toward Muscle Shoals is a matter of first importance to the further industrial development of the South.

Early determination of the question is a matter of concern, for lack of action by Congress is holding up power developments elsewhere in the ennessee river valley which, in the aggregate, are far more valuable than Muscle Shoals, alone, ever will be.

It is unfortunate that Muscle Shoals should have become clouded in the mists of controversy for in its very essence the problem is one of economics and not of politics.

At the same time, it must be admitted that delay has served some good end for much more is known today in regard to air nitrates—the purpose for which Uncle Sam harnessed the Tennessee river at the Alabama site—than was the case, for instance, when the Ford offer occupied the spotlight.

Stripped to its essentials Muscle Shoals is a power project. Any addition considered in connection with it is an appendage.

When the Federal government decided to build a power dam at Muscle Shoals, it was with the object of securing electric energy for the operation of atmospheric nitrogen plants in order to assure a supply of this chemical for use in munitions of war.

The world-famed Wilson Dam, Muscle Shoals, Ala., one of the marvels of modern power engineering.

Science at that time was new and, as a matter of fact, the government erected at Muscle Shoals two plants using widely different processes of producing fixed nitrogen. One of these, the Haber process plant, now is recognized as obsolete. Nitrate Plant No. 2 is equipped with the cyanamid process.

Since the World War, the picture as to nitrogen has changed radically. Government officials are on record as believing that were war to come tomorrow, the United States government would not be dependent upon Muscle Shoals plants for its nitrogen. The cyanamid process is in production elsewhere but the tendency in recent months has been for the production of fixed nitrogen by the synthetic ammonia process. Already, there are seven private plants in this country producing by this process and another of huge proportions is being constructed in Virginia.

It is noteworthy that the synthetic ammonia process of producing nitrogen from the air consumes very little electric power. Thus cheap power is not an essential in such production. The nitrogen experts of the Department of Agriculture have reported officially that the tendency in Europe, where the development is in advance of that in this country, so far as quantity production is concerned, is almost wholly towards the synthetic ammonia process.

More than ever, then, Muscle Shoals is to be considered in terms of power disposal rather than in terms of nitrogen either for war purposes or as an ingredient in fertilizer for the farms of the nation. The only way that it appears possible to produce nitrogen at Muscle Shoals by any process cheaper than elsewhere in the country is through means of what must be recognized as a subsidy to the producers. Even a power subsidy, if power were a negligible factor in the cost of producing nitrogen, would make relatively little difference in the cost of the output.

What concerns most earnestly many people of the South is a greater supply of electric energy for industrial purposes. Nor is the agricultural industry to be ignored in this situation for electricity on the farms is a matter of grave moment to the economic development of agriculture.

Remarkable strides have been made by the South in the last few years in industrial development. Hand in hand with this, or in advance of it, there has come about a pronounced development of electric facilities by the corporations serving that territory. Interconnection has brought about a superpower system of remarkable extent.

Continued industrial development in the South is dependent upon a supply of power at reasonable rates. The energy developed at Muscle Shoals is only a relatively small factor in this situation, considering alone the possible eventuality that this energy will be distributed through a superpower system, but so long as indecision at Muscle Shoals holds up other developments it assumes much greater importance.

Southern power companies have been making a survey of their territory with a view to charting future demands. Consumption in 1926 increased more than 18 per cent in the South, the record shows, as compared with an average increase throughout the country of a little more than 11 per cent. The power companies' survey indicates that by 1940, six million additional horsepower will be required to meet the public demands for electricity in the South. It will cost two billion dollars to construct this program, and eight billion more of investment to bring about its consumption. Public utility companies are now building hydro-electric plants of 500,000 horsepower in the South and steam plants of 100,000 horsepower.

These figures mean that 13 years hence, all of the hydro-electric possibilities of the South will have been absorbed and that steam plants must be constructed to care for a deficiency.

Muscle Shoals is a great hydro-electric project. It has at present, at Wilson dam, a capacity of primary power around 100,000 (the Federal Power Commission's figure is 135,000) horsepower. The installed capacity at Wilson dam is 260,000 horsepower supplemented by a steam plant of 60,000 horsepower. Provision is made in Wilson dam for increasing the capacity ultimately to 610,000 horsepower but until through storage dams above, the primary or continuous output is increased beyond 260,000 horsepower, there is no business reason for installing the additional units. The project contemplates the construction of another power dam, so that with both dams operating and control works above, the primary waterpower at Muscle Shoals will be something more than 300,000 horsepower and for about six months of the year the will be in excess of 500,000 horsepower.

Until Muscle Shoals has been disposed of or a definite policy determined, it appears that the entire development of the hydro-electric possibilities of the upper Tennessee river and its tributaries will remain dormant. Eleven dam sites have been definitely located by the Federal government, on tributaries of the Tennessee around Knoxville and on the Tennessee proper between Knoxville and Chattanooga. These 11 sites in the aggregate would give a primary or continuous output of 672,000 horsepower, more than twice as much as figured for Muscle Shoals when the latter has been fully developed. Secondary power, available from 6 to 7 months of the year, would add greatly to this figure, of course.

For comparison, it may be stated that the primary power at Niagara Falls is 346,000 horsepower and that the installed capacity at the Falls is 562,000 horsepower, as matters stand today.

In addition to the possibilities of the Tennessee basin above Muscle Shoals, there are places on the Tennessee river below there which are susceptible of development.

All of these potential sources of electric energy have been made dependent upon what Congress does with Muscle Shoals. Private capital stands ready to develop these projects. The power is needed in the South. Through the superpower system, not only would power from these other projects reach communities nearby but it would be of benefit to the entire Southeast. As an evidence of how the electric companies consider interconnection as important, it may be recalled that 13 of them joined in the formation of a corporation to bid for Muscle Shoals, guaranteeing the production of nitrogen as well as the distribution of power, and that these

WHAT, IN THE NEXT QUARTER CENTURY?

By JOHN A. PARK
President Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association
(Written for EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

SOUTHERN people look at the figures in much the same mood as a child pinches its toe when it wakes in the morning after having had a dream of fairies.

We delve into statistics and discover that we have not been ening at all. We find that the only biantive thing which can take place dream is the absorption in work atmakes fairyland into fact.

I is we of the South, who have at gh paused to look around, who dis- v as a miracle almost beyond com- elnsion to ourselves statistics show- gnow far we have traveled since we cne busy.

V· could multiply the quotation of es figures which constitute for us a fevelation when we study them. In e: Southern activity the story is the n one of marvelous progression in the itnetical sense.

Fures depend for their kick on the e·st that is personal, and I shall quote lya few as guideposts.

L us start with the year 1900 and look vat the Twentieth Century shows us mtrast in a few of the essentials.

In1900 the population of the South was 4ó,457.

Ir1926 it was 39,711,000.

Tə true value of property in the uern States in 1900 was officially inted at $17,919,187,000; in 1926 it l rown to $80,000,000,000.

A essed values, in 1900, were $6,511,-,00; in 1926 they were $37,794,506,000.

V ues of manufactured products were: r1880, $5,369,579,191.

r1926 they were, $65,000,000,000.

I strative of what these values have a: and how they have been applied ·ed only to look to the comparative ol of our greatest industrial enter- s the textile industry.

r1900 the capital invested in textiles t: South was $130,253,000, and we ght then that we were beginning to o something about textile manufac- e n 926, the capital invested in this same e n the South was a round billion ks.

n 900 our textile products had a value $9,118,000; in 1926, they were almost ıe in one year to the capital producing n to-wit; $931,567,288.

T: South is the region which grows ·tton.

n 1900 we were consuming in our ll 1,563,841 bales; in 1926 the South- extile industry required 4,770,062 e of cotton to supply its demand for v naterial—that increased volume in ıce of demands in this modern jazz lr silks.

Hw has the potential capital suggested tlse figures been conserved?

Baking resources for 1900 are not ilble, but in 1910 they totaled in the lt $3,275,476,107; in 1926 they had n rebled and stood at $10,200,422,000.

Iw were these resources reflected in rpulation at large?

n 900, individual banking deposits in outh totaled $691,453,000; in 1926 mounted to $7,344,008,000.

u let's be done with figures. If they e tudied back as far as the ending of Cvil War, or even fifteen years later, would disclose a multitude of such s as that North Carolina last year tt omething like a half million dollars con the single item of transporting l hildren to and from school than the l expenditure for public education n-five years ago.

h· would show that the number of school children has increased something like three hundred per cent, the number of high school students by a thousand per cent, college students by four hundred per cent.

Type of public school seen all over the South.

It was recently said in a national publication that there is not a hamlet in North Carolina that is not within five miles of a public road as well paved as Fifth Avenue. While I am unable to endorse this as fact, I can well conceive that it is a true statement.

The greatest single effect of the realization of Southern resources of climate, soil, mineral wealth, rivers, streams and forests has been the social awakening that has followed in its path.

The two great factors are schools and roads, corellated and co-ordinating.

The schools furnish the ambition for the new era; the roads make the ambition possible.

Between them, they afford the intelligence and the initiative that are the basis of practical social morality.

What is the next step in the South?

It is a still more remarkable industrial expansion, which will carry with it of course, an agricultural awakening.

Industry already has experienced the boon of cheap power furnished by the rivers and streams and converted into electrical energy through hydro-electric plants.

In North Carolina we have harnessed 500,000 horse-power from our streams. An additional 100,000 horsepower is now in course of development. In the mountains there are sites already surveyed which will give a million horse-power additional. While plans to combat the Mississippi flood have been playing with the idea of reservoirs on the tributaries, for five years there has been going on a systematic survey of the Tennessee River Valley, with its tributary streams, several of which are in North Carolina. This project alone contemplates the using of several million horse-power of electric energy, in addition to making the Tennessee navigable to the Gulf.

The future of the South?

Herbert Hoover recently said that the flooded district of the Mississippi, if definitely redeemed, should soon be supporting 10,000,000 inhabitants.

The South, with its advantages of a satisfied population; of climate; of infinite agricultural resource; of practically unlimited power susceptible of supporting ten to twenty times our already vast industrial plant; with timber and mines, and, above all, a system of communication through roads awakening the social half the people of the Union.
sense of cooperation, could easily house

It is our happy condition that, while the rich man is a rarity, the pauper has become with us a tradition.

What the future may bring we do not precisely know. But we are looking forward to meet its dawn as expectantly as Charles Lindbergh roaring out of a night on the Atlantic, saw the land he knew spelled fame and fortune.

MUSCLE SHOALS GOLDEN KEY TO POWER

companies included corporations in Kentucky, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee—a rather widespread combination.

Development of the upper Tennessee sites has been withheld on the insistence of Congress that nothing be done there until disposition of Muscle Shoals has been determined because headwater storage will effect the operations at Muscle Shoals. Some bidders for Muscle Shoals have reached 400 miles up the river and linked their offers with control also of the key positions in the headwaters, the chief being the site at Cove Creek, in the Clinch river above Knoxville, which lends itself naturally to the creation of a great reservoir.

When the upper Tennessee sites are freed for development, by whatever manner this development may be determined, unless there are located nearby enormous electric-consuming plants, there will become available to the entire Southeast and to the Carolinas and Virginia and Kentucky a valuable source of electric energy, already needed for further industrial development, and it is for this reason, if for no other, that early disposition of the policy towards Muscle Shoals is of great importance to the South.

NATION'S LEADERS WAVE SOUTH ONWARD

Achievements of the Daily Press in Advancing Prosperity Hailed by Distinguished Members of Sena Governors, and Foremost Men in Journalism, Education, Transportation anl Agriculture

GREETINGS from national leaders in public affairs, journalism, transportation, education, and other activities in wide contact with the people were this week extended to the South and the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association through EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Unanimity prevails in hailing the great forward strides taken by the Southern states during the period in which the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association has flourished and all warmly appreciate the great need of gratitude due the newspapers for moving the South from the rear to the front of the sisterhood of states in education and material prosperity. The symposium of opinion strikingly reveals the fact that the Old South is as dead as the New South is alive and also that the promise of the future is of incalculable greatness. The messages follow:

By HON. JOE T. ROBINSON

U. S. Senator from Arkansas and Democratic Leader U. S. Senate

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The industrial development of the southland during the last 25 years has been tremendous. The fact is universally recognized that newspaper publications have contributed more than any other single influence to the advancement of education, general information and to the abolition of provincialism and sectional prejudice. The 25th anniversary of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association is an appropriate occasion for the expression by public spirited citizens of that cordial appreciation which the association has earned throughout the period of its service.

By HON LAWRENCE D. TYSON

U. S Senator from Tennessee

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Through the medium of your magazine, the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, I wish to extend to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on the occasion of its twenty-fifth Anniversary meeting, at Atlanta, Georgia, my greetings and good wishes.

From the close of the Civil War until the beginning of this century, the South, for causes known to all, made slow progress in development when compared to the great strides taken by the industrial East and the rapidly populating West.

How remarkably different is the story of the last quarter of a century, and how potential the press has been in exploiting the possibilities of the South, and attracting capital to that section of the country, is a fact known to all, and in which the press may claim, with pardonable pride, great credit to itself.

We have witnessed a period of increased wealth per capita; we have seen the conveniences of the home transposed from the column of luxuries to the category of necessities; we have witnessed the welding of the entire South into a neighborhood, by the development of a web of highways throughout our section; we have noted a change from a one-crop basis to an intelligent rotation and variation of crops, by the farmers in almost every part of the Southland; we have witnessed the friendly invasion of capital from the North and the East, and the development of our natural resources in manufacturing of our textiles and timbers, and in the mining of our mineral treasures; we have seen a lowering of the percentage of illiteracy and a corresponding rise in professional standards throughout the South.

To the accomplishments during this period of progress, the press has always done its share, and is entitled to the greatest commendation.

By HON. CLAUDE A. SWANSON

U. S. Senator from Virginia

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I desire to extend my congratulations upon the occasion of the twenty-first anniversary of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, and also, as a Southerner, to express my appreciation of the splendid assistance it has rendered the South in her wonderful development in all directions.

The story of no people can surpass that of the South from the conclusion of the War between the States to the present time. No people were so completely prostrated and in greater need and destitution than the South immediately following this war. Their financial difficulties were accentuated by serious social and political troubles. With strength and courage unsurpassed the men and women of the South undertook the Herculean task of rebuilding their section. In this undertaking they have been supremely successful. In agriculture, manufacture and mineral development the South has made such strides as to justify the conclusion that the day is not far distant when it will be the most prosperous section of the United States. The development of the South is amazing when one considers the difficulties presented. The South is destined before many years to again lead in political and moral achievement.

By HON. THADDEUS H. CARAWAY

U. S. Senator from Arkansas

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Possibly never, within any similar period of the earth's history, has organized society been so dependent upon newspapers as within the last quarter of a century. And, certainly, it is true that the South, more than any other section, has been blest by having its material and intellectual development properly and kindly called to the attention, not alone of the United States but of the world by its newspapers, and that development has been great. Not alone has its agriculture expanded until the production of its chief products is more than double, but it has become a great industrial community. Railroads have been built, mines opened, factories constructed, great banking and commercial institutions have sprung up as if by magic. Despite the boll weevil and other pests that have affected agriculture, and the floods that have devastated vast areas, there is a feeling of confidence inspired by past achievements that makes the South the best field for safe investments of any section of the United States. This confidence, as I said, rests upon past experiences which have demonstrated that disasters, that at the moment seemed ruinous, have only marked the beginning point of new advancements and new achievements. This rests upon two things, natural resources of the section, which includes raw material, soil and climate, as well as the indomitable spirit of the people themselves.

By HON. KENNETH D. McKELLAR

U. S. Senator from Tennessee

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I wish heartily to congratulate the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on the celebration of its twenty-fifty anniversary on July fourth next. As a member of the Postoffice Committee of the United States Senate I have long been brought in close contact with the members of this association and I believe that the association stands for the highest and best ideals and traditions of our southern country, for the economic, agricultural and industrial growth of the southland and is doing a splendid work to assist the progress, development and growth of our section. I send cordial greetings and wish for the association increased prosperity and influence.

By HON. FREDERIC M. SACKETT, JR.

U. S. Senator from Kentucky

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Please convey to the Southern Newspaper Publishers, in session for their twenty-fifth anniversary, my earnest hope that the convention will be most successful. I express the hope that the next quarter of a century may be devoted to encour and continuing the high standar journalism which the Southern e have set for themselves during these years. No tribute to their faithfuln the interests of the South can equal which is visualized to us in the wond progress of our southern countr recent years. Weighing in the crop—familiar field scene in the cotton-belt.

By HON. WALTER F. GEORGE
U. S. Senator from Georgia

To Editor & Publisher: It is a misconception of history to think of the South as standing still prior to 1860. In 1860 three of the five richer states of the Union were in the South. The South had more railroad mileage and appropriated more money for public education than any other section. The first public school in the United States was established in the South. Until the early years of the nineteenth century the South was a leader in the industrial development of the country. For two decades and more after 1865 the South was compelled to devote her energies and capital to the rebuilding of her agriculture. Nevertheless, by 1923 the value of manufactured products of the South reached the total of $9,450,768,000—more than double the value of all the crops produced in the South during that particular year. Cotton manufacturing is of course the foremost industry in the South, but the alarm of the textile manufacturer of New England is shared by the auto-tire manufacturer of Cleveland and the furniture maker of Grand Rapids, while the dairyman of Wisconsin looks on in astonishment.

The prime factor in the economic and industrial growth of the South during the past quarter of a century has been the southern newspaper. The South is to be congratulated on this, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association. Its future is assured because of the increasing number of great dailies, trade papers and magazines having national circulation.

By HON. WILLIAM J. HARRIS
U. S. Senator from Georgia

To Editor & Publisher: It is fitting that the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association should come back to Atlanta, the capital of the South where it was organized, to hold its twenty-fifth anniversary meeting.

I would be the last person to try to tell Southern daily newspaper publishers about what the South has accomplished in twenty-five years, but I hope you will visualize the great economic and industrial growth in our section during a quarter of a century for that picture tells the story of marked advances and achievements.

Atlanta and Georgia are glad to have you meet with them again, and I am sure that your Golden Anniversary will find you as great and successful as today, and I am certain there will be grea progress to report.

By HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS
U. S. Senator from Maryland

To Editor & Publisher: When the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association was formed a quarter of a century ago our Magnolia Land already was well on its way with the wonderful economic and industrial growth which has made it, for the second time, a proud empire within the confederation of States. But scarcely more than another quarter century before that those States that will be represented at Atlanta on July 4 were dismembered and desolate. Today, to use the words of one of the South's favorite sons, the Hon. Benton McMillan, of Tennessee, they have been restored to the firmament, where they cluster and shine, growing brighter and brighter as the years roll on.

Ever in the forefront of this march of progress have been the Southland's newspapers. Individually, but still with team work, from the end of the unhappy conflict which plunged their land in ruin, they sang the song of hope, which soon began to turn into a paean of accomplishment. Their unflagging faith in their States and their people, their editorial encouragement and their chronicling of the victories of peace very largely have been responsible for the results which we now see on every hand. Lack of space forbids statistical enumeration of the advances scored from a standing start, but details are not necessary. The world knows the story of an economic resurrection which has never been seen elsewhere.

Individually, at first, the newspapers carried the banners. Then they grew more powerful and more useful by association. The advance of the South, remarkable as it has been, is only fairly begun, and it will always be the duty and the proud privilege of its admirable press to lead it.

By HON. DAN MOODY
Governor of Texas

To Editor & Publisher: On this, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the creation of the splendid Southern Newspaper Publishers Association I extend felicitations and greetings.

If I, as a layman, am qualified to judge, the advancing South owes much to its newspapers.

By the progress of its Press the South measures its advancement in all other fields of activities, for the newspaper is at once the most faithful mirror of human affairs and the most sensitive barometer of conditions.

The quarter century just closed has been one of expansion and development, not solely superior to that of anything the South has been heretofore, but of such major importance as to be marked for extraordinary comment by economists and students of industry of international renown.

In that phenomenal expansion the Press of the South not only shares, but leads, in that its support for the welfare of the South as a whole has been inspiring to the point of crusade.

Bovee, it was, I think, who said that the office of a good newspaper is to represent well the interests of its time. He went scarcely far enough; it is to lead in that liberal independence of thought and in that far-seeing vision of development that have marked Southern newspapers in the advancement of the South, and in their own enhancement of well deserved prestige.

By HON. JOHN E. MARTINEAU
Governor of Arkansas

To Editor & Publisher: It seems to me singularly appropriate that the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association should celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary on Independence Day, for in my opinion no agency is more potential than the newspapers in preserving that liberty to which we annually pay tribute on July Fourth.

The marvelous progress which has been made by newspapers in the South during the last quarter of a century is self-evident; they now rank with the best, editorially and typographically. To their enterprise may be attributed, in a large degree, the wonderful development of the Southern States during this perio Dixie, newspapers, on account of h educational value, occupy a positi less important than our public schoo universities. In fact, they probably e cise the greater influence in moldi thoughts and character of our peo believe, however, that newspapers make their present and future status secure by raising the standard of co sation of editors and reporters to the where it would, at least, be on a with that which prevails in the mech department. When this is done, jo ism will become attractive as a caree no longer appeal principally to tho whom "the game" has a fascinatio a layman, I have never been ab understand why the man who wr headline should receive less than th who puts it into type.

NEW ORLEANS, in industry, commerce and agriculture, sets the pace for prosperity and expansion in the South. Always the South's first market, New Orleans is the metropolitan nerve center of a section whose potential wealth is becoming more obvious with each busy season. New Orleans' stability is a tremendous factor, too, in the value of this market to the distributors.

Bank debits in 1926 amounted to $4,130,070,000; bank deposits were $245,156,505. Bank resources were $323,623,328; homestead (building and loan) resources $103,591,652. Assessed property valuation was $585,982,065. Building permits in 1926 totalled $18,789,444, more than half of the 2000-odd permits issued being for homes. All public utilities show a surprisingly substantial increase, year by year.

Industrially, New Orleans is taking her place among the manufacturing centers of the world. Low cost production, metropolitan financial advantages, unusual distribution facilities by land and water have combined to attract the manufacturer. Twelve hundred factories are now operating on full time schedules.

As second port of the U. S. A., New Orlean's shipping is vastly important. Imports during the last twelve months (May, 1926, to April, 1927, inclusive) amounted to $219,662,887 and exports $413,686,008.

Farm property in the New Orleans area is valued at $212,364,310, farm products at $86,017,564. Louisiana has suffered a flood loss of $20,000,000 in farm products, property, etc. Funds are already available to cover this loss and the net result of the flood in this area to the national advertiser and distributor will be the release of $20,000,000 for replacement of buildings, retail store stocks, etc., that would not be spent had conditions remained as usual. More than 50% of the flooded farm lands will be replanted with corn, hay, etc., by July 1st, though an estimate of the replanting of cotton lands is not available yet.

Louisiana is rich beyond any state in the union in the amount and value of her hardwoods, and holds second place in the total value of lumbering. Oil and oil products bring $600,000,000 per year to the state, fishing $5,000,000 and $5,000,000 from furs.

* * * * * *

Just as New Orleans and its trade area is the South's greatest market so is The Times-Picayune the South's greatest newspaper. Ninety-one years young, it is more than ever pre-eminent in circulation, in advertising, and in prestige.

think unselfishly for American progress. To the press, we acknowledge with gratitude the service so effectively rendered in giving to the people information which has enabled them to know their own country, its ideals, its possibilities, and its future.

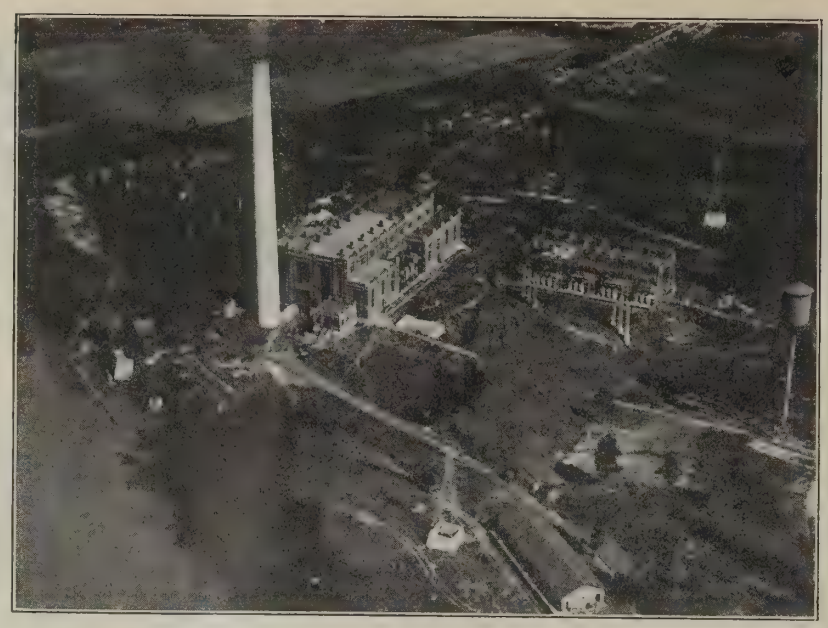
I wish for the association continued progress to the end that the Southland may continue its unprecedented development in the years to come, and that industry, commerce and finance may bless its people with abundant prosperity.

By E. C. HOPWOOD

President, American Society of Newspaper Editors

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary, is to be congratulated because it has kept step in the advance guard of newspaper progress and because it has formed and directed the public opinion which has resulted in the creation of the New South. The public is made adequately vocal only through its newspapers. Without this medium the impulses which began to stir the South a quarter of a century ago would have been voiceless, unorganized and ineffective. It is not too much to say that without the effective leadership of the members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association the impressive achievements of the New South would have been impossible and the vision of greater things yet to be achieved would not have been formed.

By ROWE STEWART



Secretary, International Advertising Association

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: May I extend most cordial greetings to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on their twenty-fifth anniversary. Nobody who has followed its meetings in the past can fail to realize the active co-operation which this organization has been able to effect between its members. The association has undoubtedly been largely instrumental in helping the amazing progress of the new South and advertisers generally recognize the importance of the field represented by its members. May the association continue to have many more birthdays—each better than the previous one.

By JAMES O'SHAUGHNESSY

Executive Secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: This is a particularly happy year in which to witness the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, So many things have developed in the progress of the South in the last quarter of a century, in all of which the S. N. P. A. has been a vital part and in most of which it was the inspiration and the leader. All the South can well join with the S. N. P. A. in celebrating a quarter of a century of great achievement. The other half of our great country may well join in the spirit of the occasion. What is the pride of one, is the glory of the other. Each half of the country is indissolubly bound one to the other—in commerce, in industry and in the social ties of nationhood. Let us all realize then how much of our present national prosperity is due to the power for growth and for good that has been exerted by the great constructive forces that compose the S. N. P. A.

By S. E. CONYBEARE

President, Association of National Advertisers, Inc.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Were Horace Greeley alive today his slogan for 1927 would probably be "Go South, young man, go South." The great newspapers which are members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association have played a leading part in the development of the new South, first, by awakening the people who live in the South to the realization of the opportunities at their very door, and, second, by telling the rest of the country of these same possibilities thus attracting capital and diversified industries. Far-seeing newspaper men in the South have taken the spirit of loyalty to home, community and state, so characteristic of southern people, and have energized this spirit into activity along commercial and industrial lines. Each year more and more the large manufacturing organizations of this country who are members of the Association of National Advertisers are developing their markets in the South through newspaper advertising. As President of this association it gives me great pleasure to extend our greetings to the Southern Newspaper Publishers on their twenty-fifth anniversary.

By HERMAN ROE, President and H. C. HOTALING, Secretary, National Editorial Association

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The National Editorial Association joins with the other publishing organizations in extending its fraternal greeting and congratulations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on the completion of a quarter of a century of service to the publishers and the public of the Southland. Their long history of coordinated effort is marked with notable achievements. The influence and power of the S. N. P. A. is generally recognized and this is due in no small measure to its capable leadership. The need and usefulness of the S. N. P. A. has been demonstrated for 25 years and we predict for it a new era of progres and prosperity.

By T. R. WILLIAMS

Vice-President, Pittsburgh Gazette Times and Chronicle Telegraph and Director, American Newspaper Publishers Association

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Greetings and congratulations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association upon the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of that great newspaper organization. As one of the most important regional newspaper associations in America, the S. N. P. A. has done yeoman service in quickening the conscience and unfettering the latent powers of newspapers of the New South. In no section of the country have papers made greater headway in broadening their influence and usefulness than in the South during the last quarter of a century. May the good work continue, not only for promoting regional interests but, through co-operation, for the advancement of mutual interests of all.

By CHARLES STELZLE

President, Church Advertising Department, International Advertising Association

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The hearty support of the daily newspapers in the South, given, a few years ago, to a study of sociological, economic and religious conditions which I made in a score of Southern cities, for the purpose of setting up constructive community programs, gave me my first enthusiastic appreciation of what Southern editors are ready to do for their cities. In a number of cases members of their staff were assigned to help secure data, and when the process of educating the public to a sense of its responsibility became necessary, these editors readily gave space in news and editorial columns to the promotion of plans which local committees has agreed to execute.

By W. FRANK McCLURE

Chairman, National Advertising Commission

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Heartiest and sincerest greetings to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on the occasion of their notable anniversary. and the important part which its newspapers have taken throughout the years. Our hats are off to Southern enthusiasm and Southern achievements.

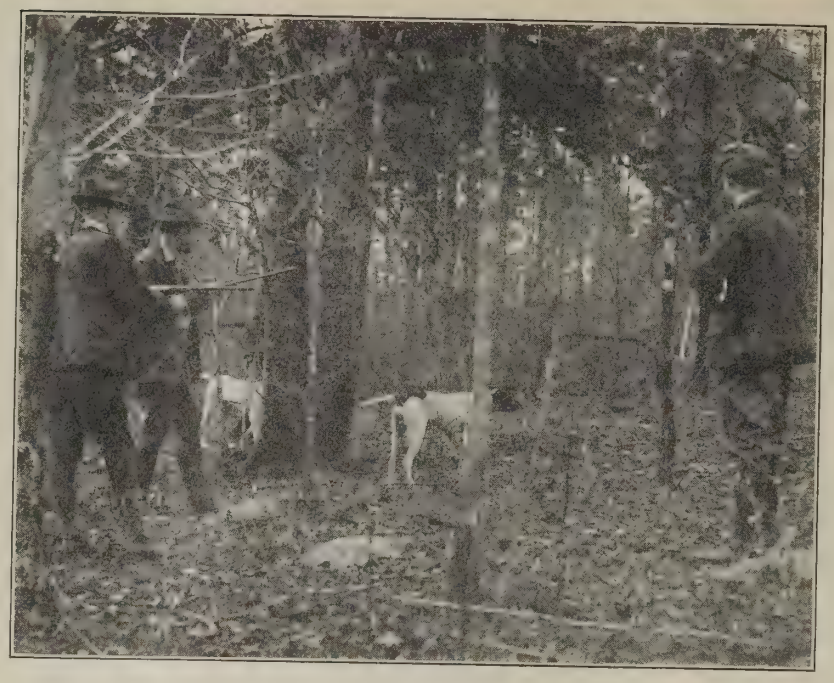
By FRANK T. CARROLL
President, Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives



To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: It is indeed quite appropriate for EDITOR & PUBLISHER to recognize the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association by issuing a special edition in regard to the event. It is a pleasure to me, both as President of the Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives and Advertising Director of the Indianapolis News, to congratulate the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association upon its accomplishments during the past quarter of a century. Advertising men and women have been impressed with the growth and prosperity of the South as they have met in annual conventions in such splendid cities as Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Houston. No one can question for a second the tremendous influence of the newspapers of the South, both large and small, in the development of the great southern markets. Probably no single influence has been of greater importance in this development than the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

By JAMES McGOVERN
Treasurer, Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: No one other Southern organization has done for the South what the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association has succeeded in doing in the short span of 25 years—no other organization could have aroused the pleasantly lethargic South of 25 years ago to the possibilities of development as this body of publishers have aroused their homeland; impressed their Southern brothers with the tremendous natural resources of that vast territory below the Mason and Dixon line and broadcast to other sections of this great land of ours the fact the New South—all the New South—is the "Acres of Diamonds" of America!

By H. A. DRYDEN
Secretary, Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Greetings to the officers, directors and members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on their twenty-fifth anniversary. The progressiveness of the South has been accomplished largely through the newspaper columns. By your activities and standards of newspaper practices you have an Association that opens the gateway to greater prosperity for the New South. The National Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers are pleased to have as members in their Association many Classified Advertising Managers of Newspapers belonging to your Association.

All is not work and worry—bird hunters in the foot-hills of the Great Smokies.

By MARVIN H. CREAGER
Secretary, American Society of Newspaper Editors

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The Old South furnished to American journalism two of its great figures—Henry Grady and Colonel Watterson. With the glorious example of such leaders for inspiration the newspapers of the New South are spiritually rich. And Dixie with great natural resources awaiting full development presents a fertile field for material progress for newspapers that not only talk about things but do things. The South is fortunate in having an increasing number of aggressive newspapers that are willing to work unselfishly for the development of their communities along the broadest lines. Under such conditions there can be but one result—progressive prosperity both for the South and for its newspapers.

By FRANK H. BURGESS
Publisher, La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune and Member of Committee-in-Charge of Bureau of Advertising A. N. P. A.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: As one who has watched with fascination the emergence of the New South into vigorous prosperity and development, I am more than happy to accept your offer of an opportunity to express through EDITOR & PUBLISHER my heartiest congratulations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, not only on the anniversary, but particularly on the job it has done in the 25 years of its existence.

What the circulation of the blood is to the body, so is the circulation and advertising, the news and leadership, of newspapers to their communities; it is not by accident that the generally phenomenal growth of Southern newspapers has been accompanied by a wave of prosperity creating the New South. I believe we should not be overstating the case at all to give to the newspapers of the South the major share of the credit for this important development—certainly it could never have been achieved without the concerted aid of a vigorous, independent and aggressive press.

I wish the Southern Newspape lishers Association a next twe years as patently productive and s ful as its first—which is about th wish anybody could make, in my tion.

Advertising Begins at Home

HOME is where the goods are.

Things that are sold in the Dallas market-area should be advertised in the News and Journal combination. No other medium (newspaper or otherwise) can do the job as well.

You can buy either The Dallas Morning News or The Dallas Journal (evening) alone. You can buy them in combination at a substantial discount and with one handling. One order—one set of plates or copy—one billing.

When you have bought The News—the first choice of national advertisers generally—you can add The Journal at far smaller cost than any other paper.

* * * *

The News is the big paper of the Dallas territory—the wealthiest section of Texas. It has the largest home-delivered circulation in the City (certified by the A.B.C.) and its total exceeds any other by more than 18,000.

Its character, prestige and influence are incomparable.

* * * *

The Journal is the first A.B.C. evening paper. It is read by people of taste and discrimination—the up-and-coming people who set the pace in buying.

Last year The Journal outdistanced all other Dallas papers in national advertising gains.

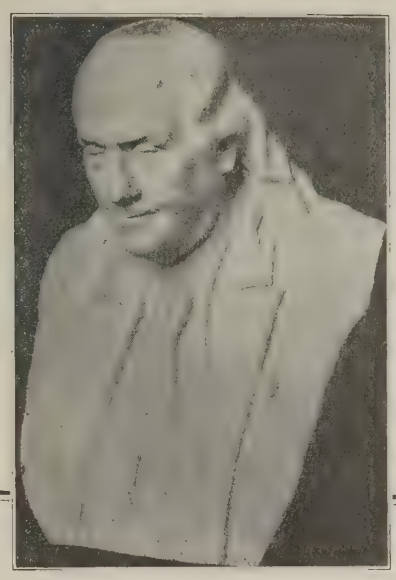
Welcome! Fellow Members of the! S.N.P.A.



TWENTY-FOUR YEARS AGO The Journal was privileged to share in the auspicuous beginnings in Atlanta of The Southern Newspaper Publishers Association. —And in the worthy works that ensued we have been granted also our part.

—Now you come back—and again The Journal welcomes you. But with sentiment even riper now. Friendships grow mature and mellow through such years as these have been . . . years that have brought an empire's awakening.

—Come in! Visit personally with us. Let us perform the little services we should like to render. Use our facilities—our folks—our whole establishment.

—We're glad indeed to see you. Welcome to Atlanta!

Having 52 pages and carrying over 90,000 lines of paid advertising, The Atlanta Journal of Friday, May 6th, was the largest strictly regular week day edition ever issued by a Georgia newspaper. Total May advertising 1,509,566 lines.

Our Perennial Guest

This bust of Benjamin Franklin is at home under The Journal's roof. For many long years—since our very earliest days—it has been with us. A dust-covered fetish at times, perhaps; but our own. Always our own.

About Ourselves—

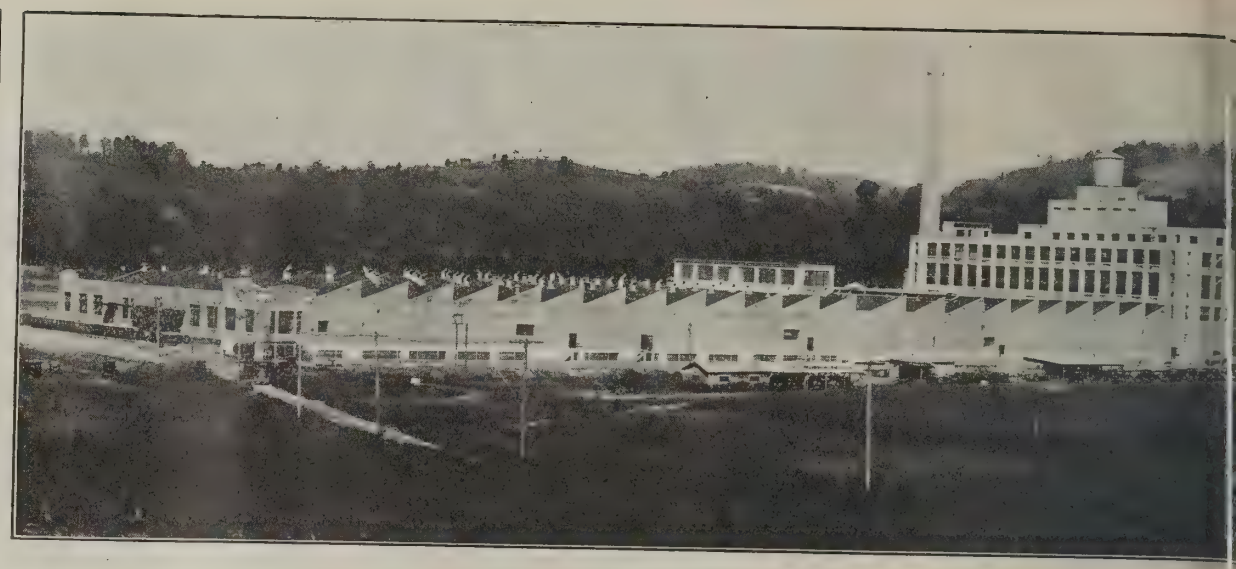
Still on the sunny side of fifty, The Atlanta Journal enjoys distinctive leadership because its ideals harmonize with the aspirations of a people whose forward march in the past half century has been an inspiration. Its influence is strengthened by the high regard and admiration in which it holds the traditions of the Old South.



Founded in 1883 as a four-page newspaper, The Atlanta Journal today has the largest circulation in the Empire State of the South and an advertising lineage volume coveted by its contemporaries. Its prestige and power attest its unselfishness. No executive officer of The Journal ever has sought before the people an elective office. Its personnel in every department occupy the relations of one great family composed of many employees who began their careers on the paper. The policies of The Atlanta Journal have always been constructive and yet conservative. Its editorial page today stands as one of the most forceful in the South. Its news columns are entirely free of editorial color. Its radio station, WSB, known throughout the country as The Voice of the South, ranks among the foremost radio broadcasting stations in North America.

To Editor & Publisher: The French explorers of three hundred years ago who set foot in the South at the same time as they planted their outposts along the shores of the St. Lawrence should not be forgotten in the S. N. P. A. celebrations, for they provide an ancient link between Southern people and ours. Today the link between the newspapers of the South and those of Canada is their common membership in the A. By ASHMUN BROWN

President, Gridiron Club

To Editor & Publisher: Regarding itself as venerable because of its 42 years' existence, the Gridiron Club takes pleasure in extending its hearty congratulations to its younger brother, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the founding of that useful, virile and progressive organization.

Personally, I desire to add my own tribute to the Association which has taken so large a part in the development of the New South. My travels through the country have demonstrated to me that the South is going ahead faster and more substantially than any other section and that its newspapers are in the forefront of its advance. May the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association live long and continue to prosper.

By C. M. MORRISON

Editor, Philadelphia Public Ledger and Director, American Society Newspaper Editors

To Editor & Publisher: In the twenty-five years since the founding of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association the New South has seen many of its dreams of a quarter of a century ago come true. The South is, in fact, the New South. Its progress has been regarded with amazement by its sister States of the North, the East and the West. How great a part of that progress is due to the newspapers of the South, is hard to measure, for their influence has been so great that it is well-nigh incalculable. The New South owes a great debt to its newspapers for they have played a magnificent part in making it what it is today.

By WALTER W. MURDOCK

To Editor & Publisher: It is no idle compliment when I say that the Southern Publishers have sold the nation on the South. Expressed in advertising terminology, you have utilized printer's ink in a great campaign that has produced results in terms of people, dollars and business. Courage, coupled to the persistence you have displayed in emphasizing to your own people and to the people of the country, your beliefs in the future of the South has brought you both material and spiritual rewards that must inevitably become cumulative. Without this belief publicly expressed through your own newspapers; without the work that only newspapers can do, progress if any, would have been slow, uncertain and altogether costly.

By JOHN H. HARRISON

President, Inland Daily Press Association

To Editor & Publisher: I would like through your columns to extend, on behalf of the Inland Daily Press Association, our greetings and congratulations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of that great newspaper organization. The Southern is one of the greatest of America's regional newspaper associations. To have survived and continuously increased in size, strength and usefulness for a quarter of a century is a notable achievement.

The "New South" has been a phrase that evoked favorable reaction for considerable time. But it never before had such force as now. The whole South is developing with the strides of a pioneer country. The newspapers of that section, than which there are no better, are entitled to much credit for their contribution to the striking progress of the Southland.

The Inland clasps hands across Mason's and Dixon's line with the Southern and with our felicitations go best wishes for continued success.

By ROBERT L. WRIGHT

President, New England Daily Newspaper Association

To Editor & Publisher: The awakening of the New South, reinforced by the part that the newspapers are playing in her wonderful development, unveil a new period of prosperity and national importance. The enterprise and courage of her invested capital are attracting the attention of the world. King Cotton is sharing honors with other industries. Her railroad facilities and her deep-harbor ports of entry open the doors to undreamed of business possibilities. Her mighty rivers, harnessed and controlled by governmental aid, will invite still greater strides in commerce and industry. Her building operations are of a character commensurate with her wonderful awakening. Her gain in population and her remarkable educational development will make her one of the great master keys in our governmental life. My greetings to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association. Its faith in the New South manifests itself in never ceasing efforts to say and do the things that reflect the phenomenal progress and prosperity of her people.

President, Maine Daily Newspaper Association

To Editor & Publisher: The Maine Daily Newspaper Association sends greetings through Editor & Publisher to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association. The Southern Association is, next to the A. Your association and its members have in recent years made wonderful progress, and far from being jealous of this progress, your fellow publishers in Maine are glad to congratulate you on what you are accomplishing.

The South has been and is making great increases in its textile industry. Some observers think the South will take away from New England its textile supremacy. New England, however, has different ideas and feels perfectly capable of producing the finest textiles during the coming years, as it has done during the past one hundred years; but— Prosperity to Southern newspapers and Southern manufacturing! There is plenty for both the South and New England, too!

By R. C. SNYDER

President, Associated Ohio Dailies

To Editor & Publisher: The 130 daily newspapers of Ohio send greetings to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on its twenty-fifth anniversary. A community is correctly judged by the newspapers it supports, and nothing is better indicative of the strides that have been taken in the New South than the splendid examples of journalism that are everywhere extant in the Southern States. Did we possess a chalice of clearest crystal we would fill it to the brim with sparkling water and quaff the health, prosperity and happiness of our Southern brethren.

By W. D. ALLEN

President, Massachusetts Press Association

To Editor & Publisher: The old "Bay State" extends to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association its warmest greetings and cordial felicitations on this, its twenty-fifth anniversary. Georgia editors and their families and guests were recent visitors in our midst and we of Massachusetts had our first chance to know these people of the South. After such an experience, one cannot but realize that there is no longer any North or South, except geographically, and that we are all striving to work out a common problem through the medium of the press, —the greatest factor in the upbuilding of any part of the country.

By C. L. HOBART

President, Missouri Press Association

To Editor & Publisher: It gives me great pleasure to extend congratulations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association on its silver anniversary. To stand the "test of time" a quarter of a century is no mean accomplishment of itself. Add to that the magnificent service the organization has rendered, not alone to its membership, but to the New South, and there is indeed a demand for superlatives to do justice to the subject. "South" is merely a descriptive term, used to designate a certain portion of our country, with products peculiar to itself, but which swell the total that makes our nation the greatest on the globe. I hope I may be pardoned if I declare the newspapers of the South deserves the lion's share of the credit for the achievements of that section.

By GEORGE P. COLLINS

President, North Dakota Press Association

To Editor & Publisher: Three hundred North Dakota publishers join me in felicitations to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association members upon their reaching the silver anniversary of organization.

From away up north, we have learned to love and admire our brothers 'way down south. Their influence and work has made a New South and, we think, a Better South. The pure American stock that dominates the Southland is our nation's greatest bulwark against internal disorganization, I really believe.

To Editor & Publisher: Organized effort has developed the natural resources of the South into an industrial empire of unlimited possibilities. NEWPORT NEWS, VA. A MARKET OF ITS OWN

At the lower end of the Tidewater Peninsula of Virginia, at the mouth of the James River, looking out on the wide harbor of Hampton Roads, the prosperous, hustling city of Newport News, with over 49,000 population and a trading area population of over 200,000, stands by itself, not dependent upon or tributary to Norfolk or any other Virginian city.

Newport News is a city of over 11,000 families with a total of 466 wholesale and retail stores and outlets for all kinds of merchandise, and in each of which are sold practically all of the nationally advertised brands.

The Newport News market is served only by the DAILY PRESS and EVENING TIMES-HERALD—they are the only daily newspapers published in Newport News and the five surrounding counties.

The circulation of the DAILY PRESS is 4,989 daily and 8,597 Sunday, and the EVENING TIMES-HERALD 8,363 daily.

Their combined circulation is 13,352 daily, and the rate is 5¢ per agate line flat—space is not sold in either paper separately. Advertisers have the choice of using both papers on the same day, or the evening paper of one day and the morning paper of the next. Both newspapers are members of the A. B. C.

The DAILY PRESS and TIMES-HERALD completely cover Newport News and the surrounding towns and cities of that section. They are not reached by any other newspapers, and the Norfolk and Richmond papers have little or no circulation in Newport News.

Newport News retail merchants may buy largely from Norfolk, Richmond and Baltimore jobbers and wholesalers, but the retailer and consumer demand is in Newport News, where the goods are sold, and a demand for your product in Newport News can only be created through advertising in the DAILY PRESS and TIMES-HERALD. Do not overlook Newport News because retail merchants may buy through outside jobbers—the demand exists in Newport News.

We will be glad to make a canvass or survey of any product among the retailers if you desire a line on Newport News distribution.

A Territory Is One Thing A Market Is Something Else

Where people concentrate, money and Purchasing power concentrate.

When selecting your market count heads, not square miles.

New Orleans offers the largest aggregation of prospects to be found in the South.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States reports the following annual expenditure for food in the leading cities of the South:

	City Proper	*Adjacent Territory	Total
NEW ORLEANS	$29,280,066	$2,323,537	$31,603,602
Memphis	17,421,674	4,149,648	16,581,322

Norfolk	9,774,745	16,097,526	25,872,271

*Adjacent Territory: 10 miles beyond city limits.

As with foods, so with every other product: New Orleans offers by far the greatest market in the South.

Yet the New Orleans "city proper" yields thirteen times the volume of business derived from the "adjacent territory."

This represents the greatest concentration in the South—a market where "city proper" is most important; "adjacent territory" least important, and city circulation all important.

Pick your circulation to reach people, not merely to cover territory.

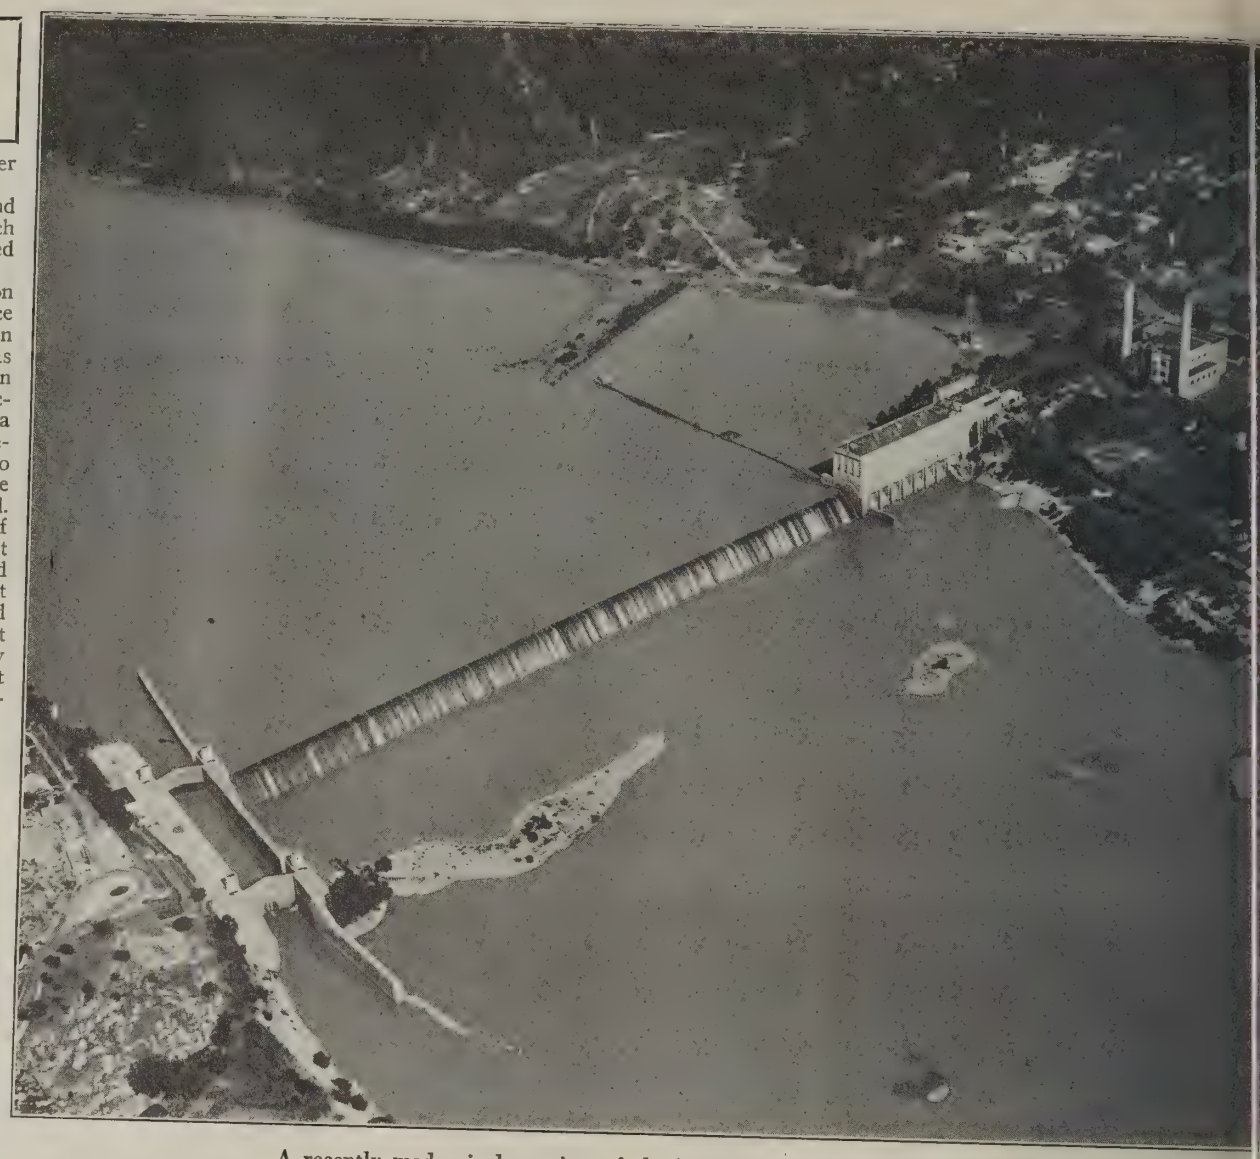
last quarter of a century as all the other material forces put together.

The newspaper constituted the first and chief medium through which the rich treasure of our resources was portrayed to the world.

They have always fostered education and religion and aided in the maintenance of law and good order. The information disseminated through their columns has dispelled the false beliefs so long held in the North and West concerning this section of the country. Through their aid a fine system of good roads has been developed, consolidated schools brought into being and a new program of agriculture and industry established in the Southland. My hat is off to this noble band of patriots who for the most part without money and without price have placed service over self that the new South might be created upon the ashes of the old, and through the wise development of our vast store of latent potentalities eventually made the hub and center of the richest and most progressive part of this imperial country.

By EDWIN E. SLOSSON
Director, Science Service



To Editor & Publisher: The South has untapped springs of energy and the elements essential for a populous and prosperous country. The ultimate source of all the energy of man and his machine is sunshine, and this you have in abundance, both in the solar rays that endow your domain from day to day and also in the stores of solidified and liquified sunshine that were shed by the sun millions of years ago and is preserved in the form of coal and oil. Water, upon which all life and labor depend, must be distributed by the aid of the engineer. Some parts of your country have continuously too little water; some have occasionaly too much. Both defects in distribution may be remedied by irrigation and drainage. Agriculture in all its forms is dependent upon the abundance and balance of the three primary plant foods, phosphorus, potassium and nitrogen. You have large deposits of phosphate rock in various states. Beds of potash salts, rivalling in richness those of Tassfurt and Alsace, have recently been discovered, and in Texas nitrogen is furnished free in unlimited quantity to every locality. All you have to do is to reach up into the air and snatch it in a form fit for fertilizer. The waste products of your farms and factories may be converted into wealth by adding hydrogen to your cottonseed oil. You have been enabled to market it in the form of a fat for the kitchen and table. By adding hydrogen to your unusable lignite you might convert it into motor fuel and other profitable products as is being done in Germany. Most important of all nature's resources is the health and vigor of its people. By scientific sanitation elimination of parasites and well balanced dietaries, great progress is possible in the extension of life and the efficiency of labor. But a program for the scientific development of a country can only be accomplished by the agency of the press. The entire population must be made familiar with the opportunities opened to them; they must be taught to regard science as a friend to humanity.

Gentlemen:

It was a pleasure to renew the contract between The Lexington Leader and the E. Katz Special Advertising Agency.

Through a very long period of years, under successive contracts with your company, there has never been the slightest unpleasantness or anything to arouse disposition to make a change. Within that period our national rate has advanced from time to time, and there has been a steady increase in the volume of national advertising.

We have never hesitated to recommend your agency unreservedly to inquiring publishers.

Dear Mr. Reynolds:

During the past six months our sales on Goodrich tires have increased 100 percent, so that our volume is now larger than any other Goodrich dealer in the Southeast.

The reason -- concentration of our advertising in the Georgian and Sunday American.

Since this is the first time that an Atlanta dealer has topped the list in the Southeast, I want you to know that we have proved that "Georgian-American advertising means more sales."

For five years we experimented with direct mail advertising and with all three Atlanta newspapers. As a result we are thoroughly convinced of two things:

1. That the attempt to circularize a city of Atlanta's size by direct mail is utterly foolish.

2. That our advertising appropriation brings greatest returns when concentrated in The Georgian-American.

I feel that it is unnecessary to assure you that we shall continue to concentrate our copy in "the fastest growing paper in Atlanta."

Sincerely,

leaving their New England locations for plants near the sources of supply; tremendous hydro-electric developments opening up new sources of power to thousands of communities; good roads, built and building, reaching into every section of this sun-kissed region; mining activities on an ever-growing scale; agricultural and orchard cultivation, producing untold wealth; new industrial and commercial establishments bringing in new money and new prosperity.

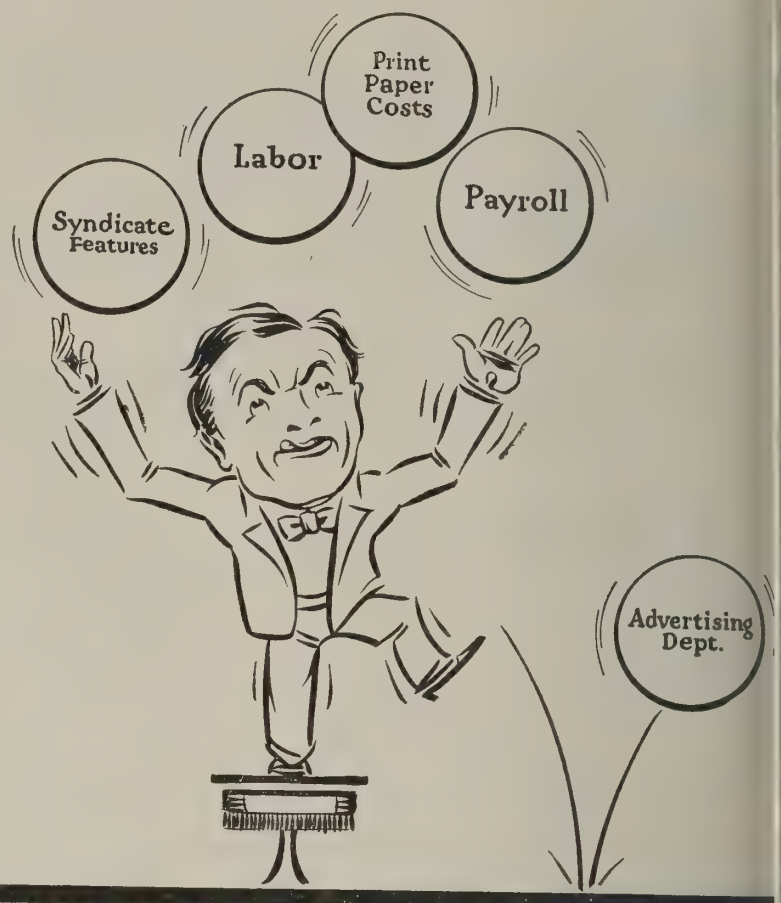
We see the Southern railroads keeping pace with those of the other sections in the development of their plants—in equipment and facilities and improvements and enlargements. Their part in the South's revival has been a real and constructive one. Knowing their managements as I do, I confidently predict that the railroads ever will be in the forefront in whatever development may come about.

In no other single way, perhaps, is the change that has marked our life more evident than in the spirit and appearance of our southern newspapers. Many of them in editorial strength and wisdom rank with the greatest of our metropolitan dailies. Theirs has been a large part in the cultivation of a new and alert and vibrant spirit on the part of the people, who are now playing such a significant role in the great drama of prosperity that is sweeping this favored land of ours.

By R. M. HARDING

Manager, Columbus Electric & Power Co.

To Editor & Publisher: The newspapers talk at laymen for 365 days a year, so I am very glad of this opportunity to suggest to the publishers of the South that they can materially accelerate the growth now well under way by making a study of the fundamentals of development, and then hammering on practical, sensible community policies with the same energy and persistence with which they ride their favorite hobbies.



Recently, the tide of industry has set in strongly toward the South, due almost wholly to the development of electric power, and this has brought about a competition among cities to secure industries from other parts of the country that is as hectic as the Florida land boom ever was in its most frenzied days. In this there is great danger that communities may become so obsessed with the idea of getting industries from other sections that they will lose sight of the more important matter of developing industries of their own; so hypnotized by vague dreams of having others do something big for them that their own ambitions and energies will be submerged and finally die.

Our people should be jarred out of Santa Claus land and brought back to the realm of realities; to the sane understanding that the growth of communities, like that of private business enterprises—like the physical man himself—is governed by immutable laws of progression; that development must first originate in the minds of the people of communities and is largely a matter of community psychology.

This company, through the force of advertising and by the word of its speakers, is carrying on just such a campaign over a wide area, which today is known as the best and most productive section of Georgia—Southwest Georgia. This includes the organization of county-wide chambers of commerce—not to spend their time and substance in vain hoping that the lightning will strike in the form of a big factory and make everybody rich over-night, but to begin doing the things that the people of any community can actually do to make it more attractive and to promote prosperity; doing the things at hand and then progressing, with added experience, vision and confidence, to the

A Message to Business Managers

Everything in the air —except Lineage

YOU remember the proverbial one-armed paper hanger suffering with hives. He was a very busy man. But the multitude of his distractions are nothing compared with the details that beset the average newspaper business manager.

In the turmoil of his existence the problems of his advertising department are often slighted.

This is what Knight Service does in the development of advertising departments:

1. Provides a certified audit of the human values behind circulation;
2. Lays out a course of selling for members of the display staff based on an exact knowledge of what the newspaper has to deliver;
3. Cultivates the confidence of advertisers by displaying an interest in their problems;
4. Makes advertising and merchandising men out of ordinary solicitors.

Knight Service embraces not only a complete study of the market, but also a thorough schedule of work with the display staff, increasing lineage on a substantial basis.

Over a period of years Knight Service has applied in such markets as:

The Athens of the South

Nashville the capital city of Tennessee with a population of 150,000 is the home of nationally known educational institutions, — Vanderbilt College, George Peabody College, Ward Belmont College, Fisk, Scarritt College, and many other colleges and preparatory schools.

It has three railroads, and is located on the navigable Cumberland River, connecting it by water with the Gulf of Mexico.

It is a city of widely diversified manufacturing industries and is growing rapidly with the whole advancing South.

IN middle Tennessee, a hundred and forty miles or more from any other large city Nashville is the commercial hub of a broad and rapidly advancing sales circle.

Its highways lead to many happy and prosperous suburban home sections and beyond to thriving towns and rich agricultural districts.

Nashville and its environs is fairly humming with industry. New manufacturing plants, attracted by cheaper hydro-electric power, reliable native labor, proximity to raw materials, and excellent transportation facilities, are constantly adding to the city's population, and yet Nashville still is a "Homey" town.

The newcomers just naturally settle down and live like the older residents in comfortable surburban homes, and take pride in pretty lawns and flower gardens. There are many thousands of these worth while homes in Nashville. Approximately 27,500 have electric light service, 30,000 have telephones, and 31,500 are equipped with city water.

Into nearly every one of these worth while homes, the homes that can and do buy, the Tennessean is delivered, Morning, Evening and Sunday. The city circulation of the Tennessean's Morning edition is 27,676, city circulation of the Evening edition is 25,515. The city circulation on Sunday is 32,252.

These comparative figures will substantiate the Tennessean's claim to logical first selection as the most influential and only medium the national advertiser needs to carry his sales message to all who can buy.

next step, and the next. A community must learn how to do things before it can do them, just as a man must learn by progressive steps which take him to proficiency and greater success. Communities, like men, must make the start and not spend their time dreaming and hoping. They will make mistakes, but so do all of us; the important thing is to make a start.

Newspapers must be the great agency for applying this doctrine and keeping it applied. They understand the importance of straight thinking, of puncturing impractical bubbles and bunk. They should know how to weigh proposals according to standards of value, of common sense, of practice and practicability. They should never encourage their communities in wild goose chasing.

There is a wonderful opportunity for the bright minds of the press to do some straight thinking, and a tremendous financial reward for practical and persistent work along this line. The surest way to build a newspaper property is to build the community it serves.

It is a lamentable fact that hard headed business men, when they step out of their business offices and take up community work, seem to lose their judgment and native caution, and are willing to believe almost anything and to chase the most impossible, at least improbable, schemes for advancing the community. Much of this is due to the fact that they think they are able to give only a minimum amount of time and thought to public affairs, and their views are rarely ever soundly thought out or forcefully advocated.

Business men of every community must be convinced of the inescapable fact that they are worth exactly the market value of whatever they possess. If, by giving thought, time and even money, to steady efforts to increase the prosperity of their communities—the real basis of values—they can enhance their holdings to twice their present value, they have actually made the difference between what the value is now and what it will be under enhancement—have doubled their wealth.

This intelligent community work, therefore, should become a part of the business policy of every man and every institution, because it is as much a matter of business as any of the other activities of a business man or concern.

But this cannot be brought about in a day, or even a year—can never be brought about until it passes the perfunctory stage with the newspaper men themselves and becomes a matter of deep conviction.

In availing myself of an invitation to write a letter to the newspaper publishers, I want to get over that thought of bringing community development down to a practical business basis—for these communities constitute the South, and it is upon the development of such ideas that the whole South must depend for its greatest development. Let's advocate and practice community self-help.

Meantime, welcome to Georgia!

By H. C. COUCH

President, Arkansas Power & Light Company

To Editor & Publisher: I am deeply grateful for the occasion that makes it possible for me to express something of the admiration I feel for the newspapers and newspaper editors of the South.

Newspapers have it within their power to make of a community, a state, a country whatever they will. The South may esteem itself fortunate that her newspapers have been directed by men of ability, of vision, of faith and, above all, of honesty and of courage.

The South has a larger percentage of native-born American people than any similar area. That our Americanism has remained pure, and has not become tainted with socialist-anarchistic fallacies is due in great measure, if not entirely, to the policies of our newspapers in advocating and fighting for adherence to those principles upon which our nation was established—principles guaranteeing equal opportunity to all, and which have enabled us to become the greatest nation in the world.

The newspapers have had major part in the great economic and social development of the South, and a continuance of their constructive policies in cooperation with other forces working for the further upbuilding of the South—industrially and socially—will enable our Southland to progress even faster in future than in the past. The South is just beginning to be properly appreciated.

The newspapers of the South cannot be praised too highly for what they have accomplished. The several states and communities are heavily indebted to their newspapers for benefits only newspapers could bestow. The growth and prosperity of the papers is proof that this obligation is recognized and appreciated, and even more gratifying, that the citizenship and business people are endeavoring by their patronage to show this appreciation.

By L. A. DOWNS

To Editor & Publisher: The newspapers of the South are noted for their progressiveness. The remarkable economic development of the Southern states in recent years has been due in large measure to the notable work which their newspapers have performed in informing the people of the country of the advantages which the South has to offer. it has been a source of much gratification to observe their unflagging support and co-operation in fostering and encouraging any and all activities designed to assist the cause of the advancing South. The eyes of the Nation are now focused as never before on the wonderful resources of the Southern States and their increasing popularity has undoubtedly, to a great degree, been brought about through the constant effort of the Southern press. There has been, during the recent past, a gradual awakening of the country to a fuller appreciation of the potential value and advantages of the Southern States; every day larger numbers of our population are realizing the tremendous possibilities afforded by the almost unlimited natural resources, favorable climatic conditions and varied opportunities for profitable investment found in this remarkable territory, and the impetus now gained will undoubtedly be accelerated as its advantages become further known.

The opportunity of the Southern newspapers in further crystalizing public attention upon the favorable outlook of the South is very great, yet I have no doubt that they will continue to perform this great service in the future as they have so admirably done in the past, and I wish them all possible success.

By J. E. GORMAN

President, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co.

To Editor & Publisher: I congratulate the members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of their organization, which is to be observed at Atlanta on July 4 next. It seems to me that this organization has a wonderful opportunity to speak for the "New South" to a receptive world, because the Southern states of our Union are rapidly increasing in their economic importance to the whole country, not only agriculturally, but also in every commercial sense. The South is certain to develop and increase in wealth with years, as its wonderful natural resources become better known.

The Rock Island Lines have served a large portion of the South for a long time, and it is most gratifying to the management of this railroad to witness the advance which has been made in recent years in the development of the Southern states. It is truly said that the "New South" offers opportunities which few sections of our country can boast, and we of the Rock Island are happy at this time to pay a deserving tribute to that wonderful territory which promises much, both to its people and to the nation. May the "New South" continue to grow and prosper, as it so richly deserves.

By H. N. RODENBAUGH

Vice-President, Florida East Coast Railway Co.

To Editor & Publisher: The reawakening and growth of that part of the United States, generally known as the Old South, within the past thirty years, have been among the most impressive developments in our national history. This renaissance began through the broader acquaintance with the attractiveness of this territory that came with the Spanish-American War activities. The wide and more thorough inquiry into its possibilities for agricultural, industrial, and transportation growth brought about a more comprehensive appreciation of what a great empire it was, for the further expansion of our nationwide development.

When we entered the World War, ten years ago, it was one of the most prosperous sections of our country. An even wider acquaintance with its possibilities resulted from the national restlessness which prevailed during the World War years. During these last thirty years, no obstacle of any magnitude has appeared to hamper its growth, or to impair its basic values.

Today it stands at the beginning of an era when its possibilities for agricultural, industrial, and transportation development being well known to our country as a whole, it will rapidly and substantially expand into one of the most prosperous and most attractive sections of the United States.

By J. R. KENLY

President, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.

To Editor & Publisher: Someone has aptly said that the "next 50 years belong to the South." There can be no doubt that the natural resources and advantages that our section of the country possesses are being more generally recognized and more widely discussed than ever before. Industries once confined, almost, if not entirely, to the northern states have already come South in astonishing numbers, and the next decade or two will see a further movement that will eclipse anything known thus far.

With our fertile soils and vast supplies of mineral wealth, and mild, equable climate, with the increasing development of hydro-electric power, with constantly improved transportation facilities, and with our reserves of dependable labor, there can be no doubt that the industrial development of the South is destined to progress at a rate and in a way that can hardly be visioned now.

There will be also as great an improvement in the agriculture of the South as there will be increases in its industry. Methods of production and marketing now in general use must, and will be, improved. Farming will be put on a business-like basis. Good roads, churches, schools, electric power on the farm, and improved transportation will all tend to make the farmer's life much more attractive than ever before. As a result a normal number of the younger generation will remain on the farm and in the rural communities to assist in the further improvement of conditions, while the normal overflow will find congenial and lucrative employment in nearby industrial centres.

The press of the South, which has already done so much for the South's advancement, can do still more, in co-operation with other interested agencies, to bring about a more general recognition among our own people of the opportunities which lie at our very doors, and to retain in the South the best of our young manhood and womanhood, as well as to attract to our section the brains and capital of other parts of the country.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad extends to the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association its heartiest congratulations upon the occasion of its twenty-fifth anniversary and offers its best wishes for the future.

By CHAS. A. WHITTLE

Editorial Manager, Soil Improvement Committee, The National Fertilizer Association

To Editor & Publisher: The cotton boll weevil has added to the risk of growing cotton. Bankers and supply merchants are requiring additional security for loans and they are favoring the cotton farmer who grows his own food and feed. Thus diversity in farming has been enforced until the Southern farmer is unsurpassed for growing on the farm the things consumed on the farm.

The landlord who exacts only cotton of his tenants is losing ground and he, too, is coming to a better reinforced system of farming.

On the basis of live-at-home and more per acre, the Southern farmer is building a new and better system of agriculture. The readjustment has been trying but it is winning.

Cotton will continue to be the crop around which the agricultural system of the South will be built, for cotton growing in the South confronts no successful competition in any other part of the world, and no crop can be extensively grown over the South that will bring the farmer as great an income.

Competition among Southern cotton growers is inevitably enforcing greater efficiency in production, requiring not only greater yields per acre but greater returns per man and mule through the use of improved labor-saving machinery.

Children of rural homes are carried to their new school-houses by county operated buses.

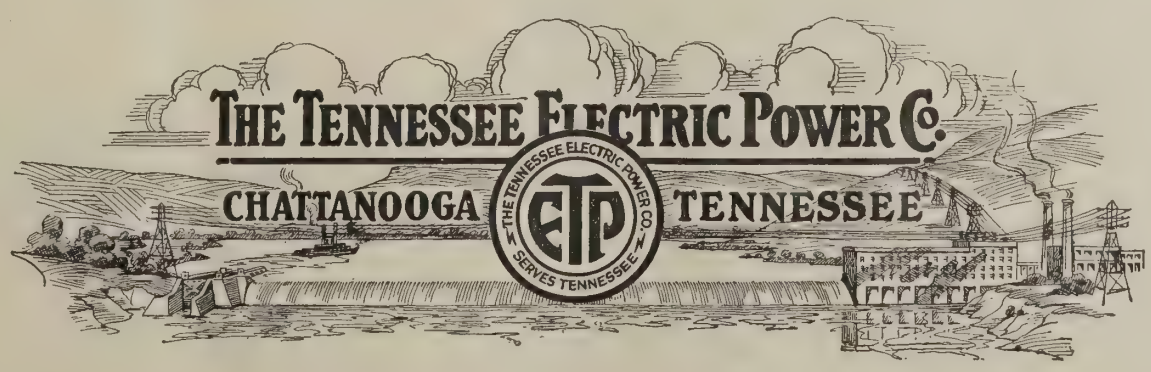
INDUSTRY'S NEEDS ARE MATCHED BY THE RESOURCES OF TENNESSEE



America's Leading Industries Are Prospering in Tennessee!

Chosen at random from the long list of the nation's greatest manufacturing enterprises that find it profitable to operate in Tennessee are American Bemberg Corporation, Aluminum Company of America, Crane Company, International Harvester Company, American Zinc Company, Franklin Process Company, United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry Company, Dupont Rayon Company, American Textile Woolen Company and Tennessee Copper and Chemical Company.

These few names serve to indicate not only the diversity but the caliber of manufacturing developments in Tennessee. In rapidly increasing numbers, large and small concerns in textile, woodworking, machinery, chemical, ceramic, iron and steel, and other major industries are finding Tennessee's assets and advantages ideally suited to efficient, economical production.

One of the greatest aids to Tennessee's progress is the tremendous amount of electric power available. Already The Tennessee Electric Power Company has 294,912 H. P. in operation, and applications are pending for the development of 592,500 H. P. additional on the Tennessee River—aside from Muscle Shoals.

Parties interested in immediate Southern locations or future developments are invited to write our Industrial Department. An informative booklet "Go South to Tennessee" is free upon request.

TRIUMPH OF NEW SOUTH ACCLAIMED ON ANNIVERSARY

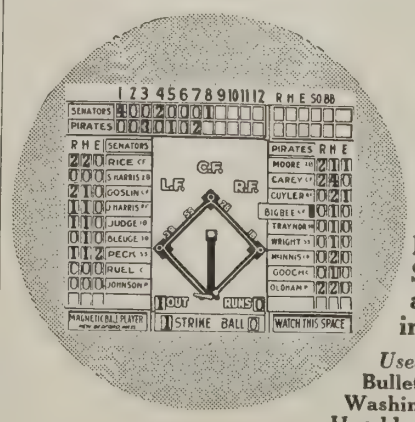
revival, rather than an innovation, for manufactures were common there prior to the Civil War, although the planting of cotton, tobacco, rice and corn was the chief pursuit of the people. The first railroads in America were built in the South, the Charleston & Hamburg line, now a part of the Southern Railway system, being the first to complete a road 100 miles in length, the line through North Carolina being completed in the autumn of 1833. At that time the Baltimore and Ohio extended only from Baltimore to Point of Rocks, Md., 70 miles. The railroad mileage of the South today is 91,246, more than a third of the nation's total.

Among the pioneer manufactories of the South were blast furnaces, rolling mills, cotton factories, foundries, hollow-ware factories, woolen mills and wagon works. As far back as 1810 the South produced 19 per cent of the cotton goods made in the country, and 30 per cent of the value of all manufactures. That was the age of homespun and three-fourths of the good goods came from the hands of families, rather than factories. In 1860 the South reported 11 per cent of the cotton spindles of the United States, and this fell to 6 per cent after the Civil War. That was the low-water mark. The number of active spindles in the South in 1926 exceeded 17,000,000. This multiplication of spindles is an excellent marker of the industrial advance of the central South, running thus: year 1890, the South operated 12.5 per cent of the nation's spindles, in 1900 its proportion was 23 per cent, in 1910 it was 37 per cent, 1915 it was 41 per cent and in 1926 is was more than 50 per cent.

There is an astonishing number of sizable textile mills, many the last word in modern equipment, surrounded by mill towns that appear new, with towering power plants in the background.

Crop Diversification South's Accomplishment

AS one travels through the thirteen states of the South where cotton is grown the great fact that diversification of agriculture is today an established fact becomes obvious. The truth is that only about one fourth of the South farmland is devoted to cotton raising. A wide diversity of crops appear in the remaining three fourths. Not only is the South producing for her own consumption, but each year she is sending hundreds of thousands of carloads of foodstuffs to other markets. The movement of fruits and vegetables alone from the cotton states in 1926 was 15,000 cars and of course from the whole South the Northern movement of potatoes, cabbage, berries, tomatoes, watermelons, cucumbers and feeds has become a stupendous item in Southern railroading. In 1926 the 13 states of the South where cotton is grown produced over 34 per cent of the total valuation of all agricultural products in the United States. Less than 40 per cent of the total value of the crops raised in the South in 1926 is represented by the value of cotton produced. The great fact of 1927 is that while the cotton crop of the South is of tremendous value, it is only one of the crops upon which Southern agricultural prosperity new depends. Cotton is still King, but Dixie's Queen is manufacturing and in the royal household dwell such flourishing Princes as corn crop worth $600,000,000 (half the value of the cotton crop), wheat worth $200,000,000, oats worth $100,000,000, tobacco worth $200,000,000, livestock worth more than $250,000,000 and with such other hopefuls as rice, sugar-cane, citrus fruit, peanuts, pecans, beans, and an amazing array of garden truck that begins to show in New York markets even before the streets are cleared of snow. More than half a million cars of fruit and truck go north each year by fast freight and express. Carload shipments of fruit alone number approximately 130,000. The leading fruits are apples, cantaloupes, grape-fruit, oranges, peaches, strawberries and watermelon. Of the latter, the annual northern shipment is about 30,000 cars. In addition there are pears, grapes and a variety of other luscious fruits and of course the references here are all to fresh fruits and do not include huge shipments of preserved fruits. Among the leading vegetable products of the South are: rice 28,000,000 bushels, sweet potatoes 90,000,000 bushels, peanuts 630,000,000 pounds, sugar 344,000,000 pounds, cowpeas 10,000,000 bushels, pecans 17,000,000 bushels, snap beans 3,500,000 hampers, spinach 6,000,000 bushels, cucumbers 3,000,000 hampers, tomatoes 8,000,000 bushels. More than a third of the nation's cabbage supply comes from the South. Florida ships 40 per cent of the nation's celery supply. Texas grows about 4,000 carloads of onions per year. Virginia stands first in the shipments of carloads of garden truck. Florida is second. Louisiana and the Carolinas rank high in the movement of carloads of mixed vegetables. The carload shipment of truck from the South numbers approximately 112,000, furnishing about one fourth of the nation's supply



Scene at tobacco auction, familiar sight in Kentucky.

Crop diversification is shown by statistics bearing on the relative size of land areas devoted to various foreign crops. It is estimated that the cultivated acreage of the South is 130,000,000. Of this amount only 35,000,000 acres were planted to cotton, leaving 95,000,000 acres for the cultivation of grain, field crops, truck, fruit and pasturage.

The South has not advanced in 25 years in the matter of numbers of cattle, sheep, swine, or horses on her farms. However in recent years with the marked increase in population great strides have been made in the dairy industry. The Southern states east of the Mississippi are now nationally recognized as a potential dairying empire of grea importance. The South is increasing it supply of pure-bred dairy cattle and som of the finest dairies to be found in th whole country may be seen in Alabama Georgia, South Carolina, Oklahoma Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas and Ken tucky. The South is going in for quality dairies which will yield premium price for their products. In most of the state feed-stuffs are abundantly produced Georgia claiming six or seven cutting of alfalfa as against Wisconsin's three o four cuttings.

The farmer who a few years ago staked all on cotton is today found engaged in producing milk and cream, butter and eggs, cattle and sheep, horses and mules, corn, oats, alfalfa and vegetables.

Newspaper Advertising is Market Advertising

IT used to be the idea that advertising in a newspaper would cover only the city in which the newspaper is published.

Today, the well informed advertiser knows that the newspaper serves not only its own city, but a vast outside territory which is tributary to the city itself, and which is accessible and closely related, principally because of good roads, bus lines and the almost universal ownership of automobiles.

Thus an ENTIRE MARKET is covered by newspaper advertising rather than a city alone.

No advertising medium reaches as regularly and as effectively the homes of an individual market as the newspaper.

Hence, a market study, analysis and survey is always important and interesting in order that the fullest benefits may be derived from a newspaper campaign.

We are the national advertising representatives of twenty-four progressive newspapers located in prosperous and responsive markets.

We are at all times prepared—in conjunction with their respective service departments—to provide valuable and useful merchandising service and market reports that will assist the manufacturer of any commodity either in opening up the market or in extending distribution already under way.

Kentucky is said to be the leading southern state in dairying development. Her herds of Guernsey, Jersey and Holstein cattle adorn her beautiful fields. Eighty-one per cent of the farms of the state boast dairy cows and fine poultry. The average herd is five head. Tennessee, Mississippi and Georgia have also recently made great strides in this direction.

Hydro-Electric Power Symbol of Progress

SCIENCE is the pace-maker of our civilization and its single achievement in harnessing the power of a waterfall for the generation of electrical energy capable of turning wheels and giving light is the accepted symbol of progress of the New South. What the development of hydro-electric power has done for the South in 25 years is written large in all of her progress and its promise of future bounties is beyond calculation.

Not only has it created wealth in great abundance, but it has lifted from the backs of men a killing burden of coal; its contribution to modern comfort and convenience is apparent whereever lines carry the magic current to homes, farms, cities, highways, factories and mills; it has lowered the cost of manufacturing and in the South it has given employment to an army of people.

There are, of course, extensive sections of the South where water-power cannot be economically developed, but a feature of its power program is the remarkable extension of power lines to section remote from the source of supply. A wonderful system of waterways, favorable average rainfall, economical means of operating auxiliary steam generating plants in low seasons and the feasibility of storing water in reservoirs built for the purpose in times of high-flood have combined to make hydro-electric development highly desirable and profitable over half the South.

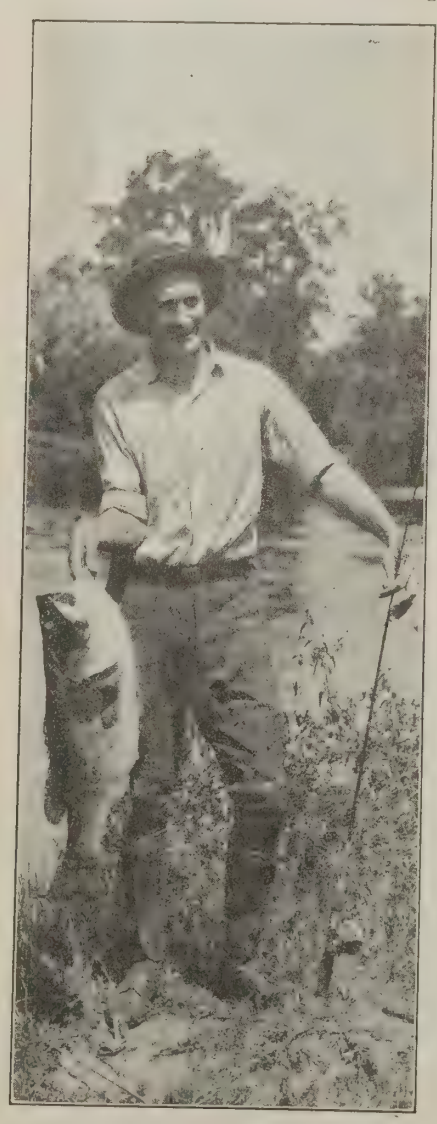
Noble Lookout Mountain, silent witness of Chattanooga's rapid growth.

In January the South, as a whole, had installed water-power capacity of 2,760,567 horsepower in 434 plants. Nowhere else in America has there been a comparable increase in the use of this source of energy. In fact, nearly one-half of the total increase in water-power developments in the United States in 1926 was in the Southern states. The South now has more than 23 per cent of the country's developed water-power. In the Southern states 98 per cent of the electricity used is generated by privately owned companies. It is said that in many sections the cost per horsepower year to the consumer has decreased 70 per cent within a decade as compared with a decrease of only 4 per cent in sections where hydro-electrical developments do not exist, and to this single fact is attributed a large share of the industrial expansion. The inter-connection of large power stations for greater efficiency of service is a general policy in the South.

Construction of steam-electric generating plants, to supplement water-power, has recently gone forward with rapid strides, fuel being coal, natural gas, lignite and fuel oil.

The total developed water horsepower of 15 Southern states in 1927 follows:

Alabama	659,208
Arkansas	15,550
District of Columbia	1,350
Florida	8,770
Georgia	448,670
Kentucky	34,255
Maryland	37,875
Missouri	20,560
North Carolina	542,618
Oklahoma	1,948
South Carolina	571,428
Tennessee	174,175
Texas	14,835
Virginia	138,046
West Virginia	91,279
Total	2,760,567
United States	11,720,983



Wherever one travels in the famous Piedmont the trasmission lines are seen running on steel stilts for thousands of miles through the valleys and over the hills, fairly making a network over Alabama, Tennessee, the Carolinas, Georgia and parts of Virginia and West Virginia and transforming the lives of the people. The engineering scheme of inter-connection of plants in different watersheds proposes to obtain the benefit of diversity of water flow and complete utilization of reservoir storage. Large blocks of power are transmitted over distances of 300 miles and more.

Similiarly in Texas and Arkansas the Colorado, Devils, Pecos, White and Ouachita rivers are also being used to gather the thunderbolt, which, when distributed over the land, means relief for toiling men and new sources of wealth and comfort. In Texas it is said that 60 per cent of the farmers use electricity.

According to the U. S. Geological Survey the total potential water-power available 90 per cent of the time in the South is 3,983,000 horsepower, which may be increased to 7,500,000 horsepower available 50 per cent of the time. Only 40 per cent of the primary power has been developed.

The uses to which electric power is put in manufacturing establishments and the cities and along the highways are self-evident, but less is known of the marvelous benefit it has been to those dependent upon agriculture. Thousands of big and little planters get their supply from rural lines, operated for their benefit, lighting their homes and barns and inviting the use of all forms of modern electrical equipment. How much it has lessened the drudgery of farm life may be imagined. Scientific men are today planning to bring electricity to the agricultural implement, a development easily imagined for the future.

Southern power companies are planning construction 15 years ahead for the greatly increased use of current that will be demanded by a steady expansion of industry and a vastly augmented urban population. An idea of the immensity of the work for the future may be had from a single operation in South Carolina where, to harness the Saluda River, an expenditure of $20,000,000 is to be made, this power plant to include the creation

Gentlemen:

For your information I want to say that I have been using Duplex Presses for about twenty-five years, beginning first with the 8-page Flat-Bed Web Press, which was the first of its kind on the market, and which gave us great satisfaction until we outgrew it.

We then purchased one of your 12-page Flat-Bed Perfection Presses which we used for several years, and which was of very great service to us in increasing our size and circulation.

From the 12-page Flat-Bed we went to the 20-page, 2-page wide Tubular Plate Press, which was one of the most satisfactory machines we have ever used, and which was a model for speed and economy.
But in due time we outgrew this, and went to your 32-page, 4-page wide Metropolitan Tubular Plate Press, which has been in operation in our plant for some five or six years, and which is an extremely economical and satisfactory machine for limited size and limited circulation.

But we have outgrown this press, and now have placed with you an order for your 64-page Super Duty, Interchangeable Unit Press, which after investigation, we decided was the best press on the market for our purposes and I may add that we were somewhat influenced in that decision by the mutually pleasant relations which have always existed with your company, and by the exceeding fairness which you have always shown in any matter which may have arisen between us from time to time.

I feel that we have bought the press, which we ought to have, and I am sure that our relations are going to remain as they have in the past.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours truly,

of a lake 30 miles long and 14 miles wide, and to possess a capacity of 200,000 horsepower.

The Alabama Power Company's Martin Dam project, with an ultimate capacity of 180,000 horsepower, has a storage reservoir which is the largest artificial body of water in the world. This company is about to open work on a $13,000,000 hydro-electric plant to add to its vast holdings. The Florida Power and Light Company has generating plants and 800 miles of transmission lines costing $50,000,000. The Philadelphia Electric Company is constructing a $52,000,000 plant in Maryland. In two years the vast Tennessee Electric Power Company has expanded its hydro-electric developments by the expenditure of $15,000,000. These recent developments merely hint at the stupendous activity in the bewildering progress of hydro-electric development in the South.

18,300,000 Bales of Cotton Produced in 1926

IF 1910 economic conditions had prevailed in the cotton growing states of the South last year, instead of the new order, it would have been a year of disaster. In history there has been no greater triumph of an economic policy than was exemplified by the fact that the South's huge cotton crops could bring a low price without bringing disaster to the community. The fact is that the South last year produced more than 18,300,000 bales, which was 2,500,000 more than she had produced in 1925, but whereas the 1925 crop was worth almost a billion and a half dollars last year's crop was valued at slightly under one billion dollars. Here then, was a value shrinkage of almost half a million dollars, and while it would be stupid to say that the South did not feel it, it is a fact that low price cotton did not wreck anything of great importance, and what was lost on that side the South proceeded to make up, at least in part in diversified crops and in the speeding up of her industrial revival. There was a day when the planter wholly dependent upon his cotton crop would have been well nigh ruined. He would have been in debt and his work would have been for naught. Today he can turn his hand to other crops, or at least he is not dependent for his food and feed on the markets of the north and west. Not only that, but the billion dollars that have been invested in cotton manufacturing in the South, very largely during the past twenty-five years, now gives the agriculturists's family opportunities for work and wages.

The value of annual cotton manufacturing products is approximately a billion dollars. Each year sees an increase in the number of active spindles and looms, and last year the South consumed in her own mills almost 5,000,000 of 18,000,000 bales. There is romance in the fact that the number of spindles in the South 25 years ago was only about four and a half million as compared with seventeen and a half million today. There are triple the number of looms.

Southern mill labor, except for cleaners, porters and low grade help, is white, not only that, but except for persons of high technical skill, Northerners are not employed. The ordinary southern cotton mill worker is an Anglo-Saxon, proud and independent, perhaps not burdened with education, but self-respecting. There are places for the man, the woman and both boys and girls of legal working age. Statistics recently published were that of 1,222,320 persons employed in Southern industries, 18,381 were children under 16 years of age. Richard Spillane, writing for the Manufacturers' Record. says: "One New England state has 50 per cent more child-labor than all the Southern states combined." There is a distinct paternalism in southern mill operation. It is variously exemplified. The average mill worker does not live in a tenement but in a cottage and rents range from 50c to $1.50 per room, per month. The southern mill worker is entirely unorganized so far as unions are concerned. He receives less wages than the New Englander. The southern mill interests claim that it costs him less to live. There are mills which have savings banks for employes. Some mills in various ways see to it that employes buy their supplies economically. Strikes are practically unknown in the South. Shop differences and grievances are carried to the management by individuals and adjustments are quickly made. One of the remarkable facts about the southern cotton mill is the democracy that prevails among the workers and the general good will that is everywhere in evidence. The good-sized mill town maintains fine churches for each denomination. The children of the mill people have the advantages of standard free schools, with longer terms and better paid teachers than are provided in state schools or in schools maintained by municipalities. One will find in the average mill town, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Community

House, gymnasium, ball ground, and recreation park. Nearly every house has a yard and a garden. A notable instance of paternalism is in Greenville where a number of manufacturing companies purchased a thousand acres of mountain land for the establishment of a great center for recreation, educational and "inspirational" purposes. It is a long reach from the shabby old dwelling that the poor white worker inhabited in the South 25 years ago to the handsome frame shingle or stucco cottage in which operators now live in Southern mill villages. The average home is provided with water, light and sewerage. There has been a positive rivalry in the matter of building better homes and finer mills for their employes, not only to conserve, as they say, humanitarianism, but to insure the contentment of workmen of the better class. Years ago we were familiar with the term, "the poor white." He was a proud Anglo-Saxon who could not bring himself to work elbow to elbow with the negro. His complexes brought to him and his family great suffering. Hundreds of thousands of these people have poured out of the mountain district of the South into the new South's industries and their families, big today as they have heretofore been, become educated and thrifty mill operators, responsive to their advantages and prosperous.

"We might take the case of a man, his wife and family of three children, the latter from 16 to 18 and 20 years of age. It is a family of average workers. The mother stays at home to 'tend house'; the father is an ordinary hand at the weaving loom. At an average wage he gets $24 a week. If he is a skilled hand, his pay is more. The children, working as spinners, get $15 a week. Thus the weekly income of these four workers amounts to $69. It is sometimes more; seldom in any case less. It is not uncommon for families of four and five workers to accumulate as much as $4,000 in the course of twelve months. Families of $3,000 and $3,500 income a year are common in the mill communities. The thing that counts is that, these wages represent almost that much 'clear money.' If the wage scale may be regarded as low, the costs of living are correspondingly low. The average type of cotton-mill cottage costs $1,600 to $1,800; in some cases $2,000. The ordinary type contains six rooms, including dining-room and kitchen. The rooms, with light and water free, are rented at 25 cents a week. This makes the rental of a mill home $6 a month, or $72 a year, and the vegetable garden is thrown in."

The mind cannot comprehend the infinite variety of human effort lying behind the more than ten billion dollars of annual value created by Southern manufactures and while the overshadowing industries, such as textiles, power, iron and steel, oil, tobacco and mining may be visualized as separate entities, it is the vast aggregation of lesser industries which swells the bewildering total. One can but consider these industries at random in such a survey as this and while the result will be a description wholly disproportionate, it nevertheless may give the reader at least a fleeting glimpse of the industrial diversification that is making the term "Solid South" have a new meaning in Dixie.

Here is the story in a nutshell: More than a million and a half Southern wage-earners, in 38,000 manufacturing establishments, earn in a year more than a billion and a half in wages for the act of fabricating six billion dollars worth of material, thereby giving to the world products having a value of more than ten billions.

A cut-back to 1900 is sensational, for in that year the value of Southern manufactures was but a billion and half.

Here are some of the principal industrial tributaries to this wide stream: Southern furniture industry, 1925, yielded $142,000,000 products. The lumber industry, in the same year, gave $666,000,000 value, almost half of that of the nation from this source. Every year the South gives the country more than half of her board feet of lumber. She possesses more than half of our standing trees, incalculable source of wealth. From North Carolina to Texas spirits of turpentine and rosins are produced on some 1,500 "turpentine farms." These so-called naval stores yield an annual crop worth forty millions.

The Rich Piedmont Market!

in South Carolina

SOUTH CAROLINA has three Zone Markets, the state being naturally divided into three separate and distinct regions through economic conditions that identify each area. These economic divisions form the three major zone markets of the State. They are the western or PIEDMONT SECTION with the closely connected and neighboring cities of Spartanburg, Greenville, Anderson and Greenwood. The central section centering and surrounding the city of Columbia. The coastal section surrounding the city of Charleston. Each section has developed into a compact homogeneous area with a large city or cities as the center of activity from which radiates the commercial, jobbing and trading influence.

The PIEDMONT MARKET Leads in the State of South Carolina

The PIEDMONT MARKET is the only unit zone market in South Carolina wherein the white exceeds the negro population. The white population of the PIEDMONT MARKET, 339,678, represents 42 per cent of the entire white population of the State and occupies only 21 per cent of the state's area.

plants in the country are in the South, representing millions of investment. "Rayon," the principal raw material in which is sulphite wood pulp of especial purity, was a new product in our markets in 1910 and today it is among the standard commodities.

Meat products yield for the South $400,000,000 annually.

Pulp-woods are still abundant in the South and paper making, particularly of the kraft variety, is a coming activity.

Rice cleaning and polishing is almost an exclusively Southern industry, with products worth $50,000,000.

Southern states lead in the manufacture and distribution of fertilizers, 450 plants yielding $300,000,000 of products.

The vegetable oil industry is, of course, tremendous, cottonseed oil mills alone giving products worth a quarter of a billion dollars per year. Thus the gray seed of the cotton-plant, once not only considered useless but a nuisance, now yields golden oil, meal, hulls and linters that are worth in the markets of the world almost a quarter as much as the baled cotton. Other vegetable oils, abounding in Dixie come from the soy bean and the peanut. More than 30,000 workers are engaged in vegetable oil manufacture. The advance in this business, in point of product values, during the quarter century is twelve-fold. Peanut culture was thought to be an insignificant trade in 1900. The lowly nut was mainly in demand at the circus zoo and county fair. Today 12 states are producing three-quarters of a billion pounds of this highly nutritious and delicious food and it has become an American staple. Sandy soil, hot sunshine, abundant rainfall are propitious conditions for its growing. The uses to which the peanut of modern commerce is put are various, such as roasted and salted, for admixture with candies and in salad dressing, as a substitute for butter, for dyes, oil, oleomargarine, breakfast foods, beverages, sauces, skin cleansing pomade and emulsions.

Delicious pecans are grown from Virginia to Florida and Texas and the increased consumption of this nut in 20 years has been a phenomenon in trade.

Sugar has been produced in Louisiana since 1795 and in 1823 the record shows a production there of 15,400 tons and ten years later this had risen to nearly 40,000 tons. There are 130 sugar mills in that state today, with a capacity of a half billion tons.

It is said that the South's potential quarry, well and mine resources have never been even estimated. In point of production they are amazingly rich, not only the petroleum, coal and iron fields,

Attention Mr. A. J. Cline

Cline Electric Mfg. Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:-

One of the many very happy experiences enjoyed by the Dispatch Printing Co., in the construction and equipment of its new plant, was its relationship with the Cline Electric Mfg. Co.

This was not a new relationship, so the Dispatch again was gratified to find the Cline company was still keeping the faith.

The reel, drive and control equipment purchased from and installed by the Cline company has proved entirely satisfactory, now that it is in full operation, and the Dispatch is proud to have this equipment in its well-appointed plant.

With all best wishes,

Sincerely,

GOLDEN TRIBUTARIES TO BILLION DOLLAR STREAM

The South's proportion of the nation's mineral production was 32 per cent in 1925. It is estimated now as much more than a third.

Some idea of the magical development of the whole section may be had from building statistics. The towering fact is that the South is expending yearly around $900,000,000 for apartment houses and hotels, office, church buildings and other city buildings, dwellings, schools, stores, mills, pavements, bridges and miscellaneous structures. The Manufacturers Record lists $469,000,000 miscellaneous building projects in the South in 1926.

The latest record of the total number of motor vehicle registrations shows the South with 5,805,671 as compared with 22,001,393 for the United States. The state statistics on this important evidence of modernity and prosperity is as follows:

The total gross operating revenues of Class A Southern railroads last year were $876,000,000, a 3 per cent increase over the previous year. Since 1900 these railways have extended their main trackage 5.500 miles and the double tracking in the past three years has been an outstanding development in American railroading.

Last year Southern ports handled 35 per cent of American import tonnage and 38 per cent of the nation's exports. In port facilities and new harbors the South has made an advance in 25 years which astonishes the traveler. The total value of imports and exports by customs districts, according to the Manufacturers' Record, were as follows:

Progress!

In keeping with the growth of the Piedmont Carolinas in population, wealth and industry, THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER recently completed and occupied this new building—one of the finest and most modern newspaper plants in the South.

It has four stories and a basement, with more than 57,000 square feet of floor space. On the top story is a unique enterprise, an auditorium or "Town Hall" open to the public.

A private siding enables paper to be unloaded directly into the pressroom and paper storage rooms. Only a part of the building is shown in this illustration. A large "L" containing the pressroom, mailing department, private garages, etc., is located at the rear of the main building.

PREDOMINANT

In the South's Most Productive Field

Month after month, the business conditions map of the United States Chamber of Commerce shows the Piedmont region of North and South Carolina in the white.

Business is good in the Piedmont Carolinas—and this wealthy, productive region is dominated by THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER.

THE OBSERVER'S paid week-day circulation now is nearly 40,000, and its paid Sunday circulation is in excess of 42,000.

For full information on THE OBSERVER or its territory, write direct, or inquire of any office of Story, Brooks & Finley, national representatives, or of J. C. Harris, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., Southern representative.

HERE COMES VEE-VEE

VEE-VEE wasn't actually much to look at this spring. She was a mighty good private secretary and all that, with all kinds of ambition, but absolutely not a bit of S. A. Just a common-sensible, level-headed business woman who wore plain suits and goggles and long hair done up in braids—and used no cosmetics.

Did men pay any attention to Vee-Vee? You're right—they didn't. And did Vee-Vee care? Not a bit.

But now it's all different. You can see by the picture that Vee-Vee has undergone quite a change. She has been "done over" by a beauty expert. The goggles and the braids and the freckles are in the discard. The answer?—ROMANCE! Vee-Vee found it in the least likely of all places—an office building elevator.

You really should know Vee-Vee. She's simply a wonderful girl for any editor to have around at vacation time. The chances are that more than one editor will fall in love with her before the summer is over. And more than likely there will be a few publishers on the other side of the street who will take a violent dislike to her. That's really too bad, but Vee-Vee won't mind.

You see, Vee-Vee has timed her appearance on the newspaper scene for the psychological moment. She has been saving up her pennies for a vacation. And what a splurge she's going to make! What a time she's going to have! Been buying a lot of gorgeous clothes. Going in strong for sports. When she goes away for her two weeks of play she's going to knock the boys right out of their front row seats.

When Vee-Vee takes her vacation it will be the best time in the world for editors who know her to forget about the summer slump, throw their duds together, fill up the tank with gas, have their own good time and let the fellow across the street sweat with his circulation problem. The truth of the matter is that when Vee-Vee is at play she will be working for the papers that are printing her pictures and telling her story.

Vee-Vee, in case you're getting tired of all this mystery, is the heroine of Anne Austin's newest and punchiest serial, "The Penny Princess." Not a bad title, what? Anne Austin wrote this story just for vacation time, the time when readers are out for fun and likely to quit reading the paper for a spell if it weren't for just such a feature as this to hold their day-to-day interest.

It's a story of a romantic masquerade, of a girl who thought she didn't have time for love. It's peppy and, like all NEA Service fiction, it's clean. In 48 installments, beautifully illustrated with halftones, of which this is a sample.

"The Penny Princess" will provide newspapers with an excellent appeal for summer mail subscriptions. Editors who use it can rest assured that their readers won't want to leave town without having the paper sent to them.

Written by an author whose previous serial successes have spelled big circulation returns wherever they have been used. Distributed by an organization whose program of original fiction has set a new standard in this particular field of newspaper features. In mat or proof form.—NEA Service, Inc., 1200 West Third street, Cleveland, O.

NEWS-I-N-K DEPT.

MR. PUBLISHER:

You spend large sums of money to gather the news from all parts of the earth, and for mechanical equipment to place this news quickly in the hands of the public. This expense has your careful and constant consideration.

Do you give the same consideration in purchasing the materials necessary to convey and display your investment and energy attractively to your reading public? If you buy inferior ink the returns on your investment are limited and reduced.

Many inks on the market today fill up and print grey, causing a poor looking paper with poorly displayed cuts, ads, heads and letter type. It also smears and rubs off on the hands, gloves, and garments of your readers. Inferior oils also give eye strain, due to penetration which is annoying to both readers and advertisers.

Our News Ink is made with the highest grade materials, scientifically compounded. It is clean, does not rub, smear, or rub off, and will not penetrate. It is clean, snappy, jet black, and under a new process of manufacture is rendered free from grit.

A trial will convince you that our claims are just and your printing will be improved.

Very truly yours,

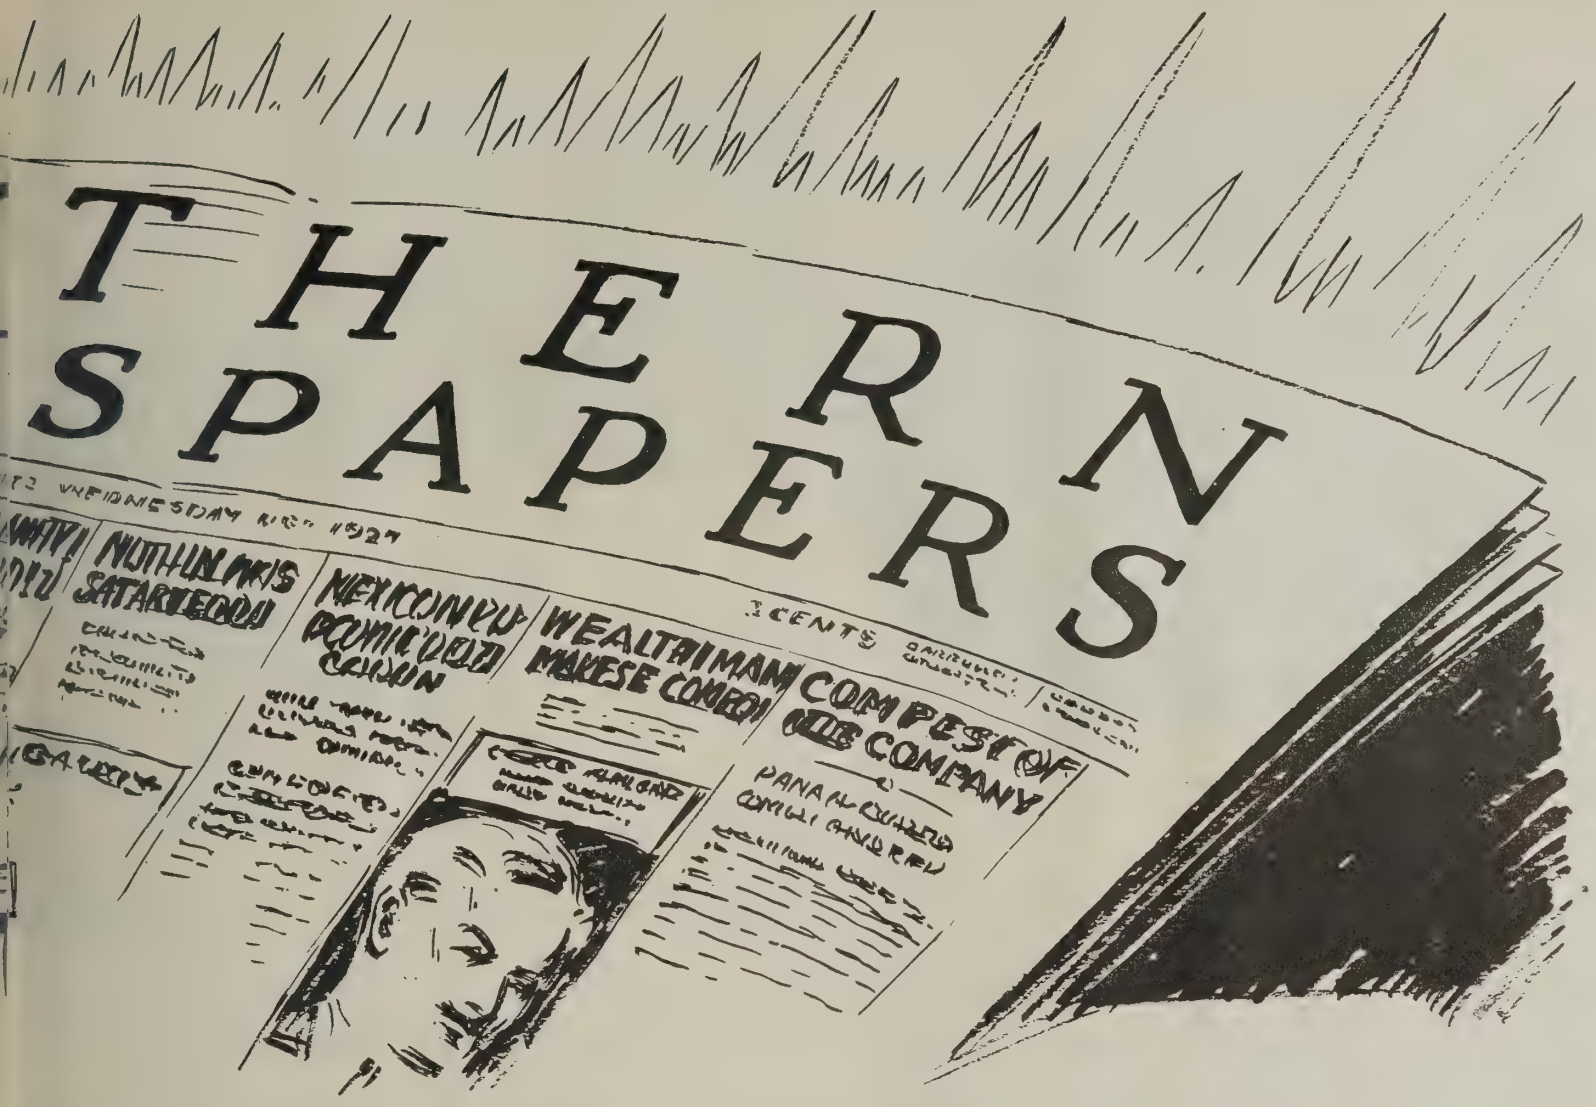
Advertising's New Commandment



THOUGHTS for an advertiser investigating the Southern market:

Here is a section comprising 39,206,000 people. . . . Magazine circulation scattered and extremely small. Newspaper reading almost a universal habit.

Combined circulations, for example, of two of the largest magazine publishing houses slightly over a million and a half.

Combined newspaper circulations one out of every six persons—practically a newspaper in every Southern home.

The Southern newspaper wields tremendous influence. No other medium approaches it. Through its columns opinion is molded; opinion swayed, enlightened and entertained.

Southern dailies will link your product definitely with the locality; creating direct and intimate appeal.

Advertising rates are low. You can cover the entire South with a smaller outlay than would be required to reach any other area of like buying power. Once sold, the South stays sold.

Consult any reputable advertising agency for facts and figures on advertising's new commandment:

VAST RICHES IN IRON AND BLACK DIAMONDS

the South is at Birmingham, but other important centers are Gadsden, Alabama and Chattanooga, Tenn. The Birmingham district is second in rank of the nation's ore production, producing in favorable comparison with Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Chicago. The Birmingham district is about 75 miles in length and 45 miles in width, in a valley surrounding the city, and populated by more than a half million.

The Southern states in 1926 produced pig iron tonnage of four and a half millions, approximately 12 per cent of the country's production, and mined more than seven million tons of iron ore.

The South's manufactures consume more than 80 per cent of its pig iron. There are some 650 foundries in 12 Southern states with an average consumption of 2,650 tons per annum. Such articles of commerce as stoves, radiators, agricultural implements, car wheels and machinery are manufactured in vast quantities and 45 shops produce each year steel and iron pipe worth more than $50,000,000.

In the quarter of a country the South's iron industry has nearly doubled on the mining side and more than doubled on the manufacturing side.

The coal resources with which the South was endowed have developed from the original discovery of the black diamond in Virginia to a total production in 1926 of 263,589,000 tons from fields in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia. The latter state is the tonnage leader by nearly three-fold, Kentucky being second and Alabama third. The South's production of coal exceeds a third of the nation's total yield.

In 25 years the South has increased her mined coal five fold, another startling index of her industrial acceleration. Not only does she supply her own requirements but she is a great factor in the national supply.

The South made more than eight and a half million tons of coke in 1926.

Southern Wells Produce Half of U. S. Petroleum

THE towering fact concerning the South and the petroleum industry is: that the South produces more than half of the whole country's yield of this form of wealth and, indeed, one third of the whole world's supply. The story of the expansion of the oil industry in the South is a modern miracle. The first oil well was dug in the United States in Titusville, Pa., in 1859. Twenty-five years ago the whole country produced only about 60,000,000 barrels. Last year the South produced 437,536,000 barrels, compared with the nation's yield of 766,504,000. The South practically did not enter into the vast petroleum field until 1900, although there was sporadic drilling in West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee around 1880. Texas did not become active until 1897 and it was subsequent to 1900 that oil was at all considered in Oklahoma and Louisiana. The discovery of the El Dorado field in Ar-

Springfield, Mass.

Dear Mr. Anderson:

We have now been running our Hoe 5-unit Press on your drive for a month and a half, and it has proved to be a very satisfactory installation.

If you wish to refer any prospective customers to us, it will be safe to do so we believe.

We wish especially to commend Mr. Schnittcher. We think that any publisher for whom he makes an installation is fortunate.

Very truly yours,

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION.

Apply the proper G-E motor and the correct G-E controller to a specific task, following the recommendations of G-E specialists in electric drive and you have G-E Motorized Power. Built in or otherwise connected to all types of industrial machines, G-E Motorized Power provides lasting assurance that you have purchased the best.

The above letter calls attention to the success of General Electric a-c. drives on newspaper presses. It is of special interest in view of the growing use of alternating current.

The illustration shows the Hoe super-speed unit-type decuple press at the Springfield Union—the installation to which the letter refers. It is equipped with General Electric alternating-current drive and control.

Among other important installations of General Electric alternating-current drive and control, soon to be made, are three 100-h.p. equipments for a nine-unit Hoe press for the Omaha News-Bee; three 100-h.p. equipments for the Newark, N. J. Star-Eagle, handling a total of thirteen Hoe units; three 100-h.p. equipments for a ten-unit Goss press for the Syracuse Herald; and two 100-h.p. equipments for a six-unit Duplex press for the Winnipeg Tribune.

kansas was not until 1921 and that state's production of 10,000,000 barrels in that year gave it leadership over all the states.

A feature of the oil fields of Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia is that they are very similar to those of Pennsylvania, of small production when first driven and productive of oil of high grade. They are shallow and their flow persists. The great gusher is the marvel of Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. Pipe lines carry oil in Tennessee, Kentucky and West Virginia to Pennsylvania and the commodity is transported from Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma by trunk lines to the East Coast and the Gulf of Mexico. Maryland, Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana and Texas maintain some of the most gigantic oil refineries in the country, where petroleum is converted into all of its products and byproducts.

The estimated oil reserves of the Southern states made by the American Association of Petroleum Biologists and Geological Survey in 1922 was 55 per cent of the country's supply.

The South also leads in the production and consumption of natural gas. The value of the gas at her wells in 1924 was estimated at $112,000,000. She is producing natural gas at the rate of 770,000,000,000 cubic feet per annum, supplying her own industrial needs and piping gas to northern cities.

South Grows Third of World's Tobacco

THE other day at Raleigh, newspaper men told me that the treasurer of a tobacco company had that day written a check in the sum of two million dollars in favor of Uncle Sam. It was in payment for revenue stamps to be attached to packages of cigarettes and was not considered a remarkable incident. As in cotton the South has a natural monopoly on tobacco production, having produced in 1926 1,152,418,000 pounds of the delightful weed worth more than $216,000,000. This was 85 per cent of the nation's yield. One third of the world's tobacco is grown in our southland.

Memphis river front with steamers which carry passengers and freight.

The value of the Southern tobacco crop in 25 years has increased more than five fold.

Southern tobacco is world famous. In Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Kentucky, West Virginia, Tennessee Maryland many thousands of farm find tobacco their chief source of inco today as a few of them did even in Colonial era. North Carolina posses the leading acreage in tobacco, follov by Virginia. It is a rich crop, rumm up to $250 or more per acre and calls scientific farming because of its tende to exhaust the values of the soil. So of the greatest commercial industries the South are in the tobacco trade mak cigars, cigarettes, smoking and chew tobacco and snuff. Their developm started from small beginnings and v almost invariably paced to greatness advertising. Certain cigarette and sm ing tobacco brands have the highest va of any single commodity manufactu in the world. There is nothing comp able in industry to the tremendous velopment of cigarette manufacture the past ten years. Bull Durham tod stands as one of the new South's gre est industries. The men in blue a the men in gray enjoyed the flavor the tobacco produced at a little pl at Durham and after the Civil W the fame of this tobacco spread acr the nation. The famous Bull Durh sign has been carried around the wor even painted on the pyramids. THE MAGIC OF LANGUAGE

Every editor who genuinely understands his profession knows that the apt word or the perfect turn of speech can lift a news story from the ordinary "run of the news" to the extraordinary "classic of the news" which delights all newspaper men and grips the interest of readers.

CIRCULATION follows the well written news report as surely as it follows the report that invariably gives ALL THE NEWS.

In the organization of

every man who writes a line of news has been trained to construct and write his dispatches so that they flow into the mind of the reader and form without effort by him an accurate concise and vivid picture of the event described.

GEORGE R. HOLMES, famous Washington correspondent of INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE fulfilled this tradition inimitably when on June 11 he wrote of the triumphant arrival of Colonel Lindbergh in Washington:

"Amid the roar of circling airplanes overhead and the shrieking sirens of scores of river craft, the long grey snout of the U. S. Cruiser Memphis poked its way into the navy yard today bearing Colonel Lindbergh home from his glorious transatlantic adventure.

"The youth who departed virtually unknown a month ago, fortified with four sandwiches and unlimited courage, returned to find the national capital at his feet in such an outburst of hero worship as has never been witnessed before."

DAVIS J. WALSH, nationally known sports writer and authority, was "on the ball" all the way when he wrote his matchless account of the national open golf championship on June 17 beginning:

"Tommy Armour, debonair Scotsman who came to America seven years ago and never regretted it, won our national open golf championship this afternoon after an 18 hole play-off with Harry Cooper by a medal score of 76 to 79."

It is because every news writer connected with INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE is trained to "Get it First but First Get it RIGHT" and then to write it with all the skill and capacity that he has, that the news reports of this organization excel in reliability, accuracy and the gripping story quality which makes reputation and readers.

Type of Central High School seen in Southern cities

NOT only is the free public school system growing in the South more apidly than in any other section of the ountry but last year higher education as given tremendous impetus by the ndowment of the late James B. Duke f a fund of $40,000,000 which may be ncreased to about $80,000,000 in later ears under the terms of his will, making)uke University, formerly Trinity Col-ege, one of the best endowed educational nstitutions in the country. Within the ext five years sixty buildings will be dded to the plant, to cost $25,000,000.

The last figure on the South's annual xpenditure for education is for 1924, the um being $365,000,000 and it is a strik-ng fact that the South is spending 70 er cent more for education per annum han the whole country spent when the outhern Newspaper Publishers Associ-tion was organized in 1900. New chool buildings cost the south more than 75,000,000 a year. Consolidated public chools prevail in the rural districts. The ne-room school is a thing of the past.

The number of pupils attending public chools in the South increased in the eriod from 1914 to 1924 from 7,649,000 o 9,414,000, or 23 per cent. Since that me there has been a still more remark-ble expansion. The South has today bout 40 per cent of the aggregate num-er of pupils in all the country's elemen-ary and secondary schools, although her opulation proportion is about one-third f the nation's whole. About 10 per cent f the South's public school enrollment in high-schools. More than a quarter f the country's university and college nrollment is in Southern states. Public ormal school enrollment increased from 1.5 per cent of the country's total in 914 to more than 44 per cent in 1924.

A much remarked feature of Southern ducation is the popularity of the voca-tional school where pupils receive techni-cal instruction in the industries that are important factors in the industrial ex-pansion, such as textiles, engineering, ceramics. A fine example of this new educational institution is the Texas Tech-nological College, at Lubbock, Texas, where 1,500 students are receiving ex-pert knowledge in textile engineering.

Negroes Have Shared General Prosperity

ACCORDING to the latest official fig-ures the center of negro population of the United States is in the north-western corner of Georgia, having shift-ed in the years between 1790 and 1910 deeply to the southwest and then north-ward and eastward. The migration of negroes to the north has been in progress since the Civil War, but became marked when the World War began to disturb conditions in this country. The total number of Southern born negroes in the North at the date of the last federal cen-sus was 737,423, and the total migration of colored people from south to north was given officially as 8.2 per cent of the total negro population of the South.

In 1870 the population of the South was more than one-third negro. At last accounts it is much less than one-fourth.

There has been in many Southern cities a remarkable decrease in the pro-portion of negroes, northern migration being to a considerable extent from towns and cities. In 1910 the Census Bureau found that 48 per cent of the southern born negroes in the north were from the two states of Kentucky and Virginia. Since that time there has been

S. N. P. A. HISTORY IN OUTLINE

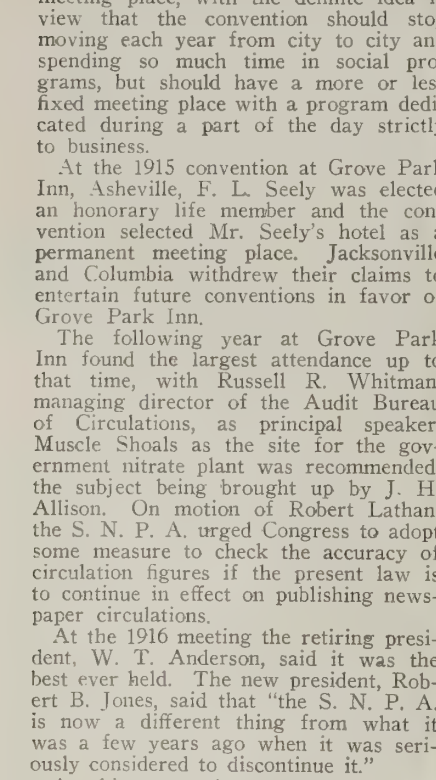
Don C. Seitz were the principal speakers. Asheville was selected as the next meeting place, with the definite idea in view that the convention should stop moving each year from city to city and spending so much time in social programs, but should have a more or less fixed meeting place with a program dedicated during a part of the day strictly to business.



At the 1915 convention at Grove Park Inn, Asheville, F. L. Seely was elected an honorary life member and the convention selected Mr. Seely's hotel as a permanent meeting place. Jacksonville and Columbia withdrew their claims to entertain future conventions in favor of Grove Park Inn.

The following year at Grove Park Inn found the largest attendance up to that time, with Russell R. Whitman, managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, as principal speaker. Muscle Shoals as the site for the government nitrate plant was recommended, the subject being brought up by J. H. Allison. On motion of Robert Lathan, the S. N. P. A. urged Congress to adopt some measure to check the accuracy of circulation figures if the present law is to continue in effect on publishing newspaper circulations.

At the 1916 meeting the retiring president, W. T. Anderson, said it was the best ever held. The new president, Robert B. Jones, said that "the S. N. P. A. is now a different thing from what it was a few years ago when it was seriously considered to discontinue it."

At this convention, Mr. Seely delivered a special address on the subject, "Why the S. N. P. A.—Does Not the A. N. P. A. Answer the Same Purpose?"

The report of Walter C. Johnson to the 1917 convention at the conclusion of his first year as secretary-treasurer showed a membership of 105 against 70 the year before—an increase of 50 per cent. The bulletin had been appearing for 6 months and the varied comments on association activities show that a definite program had started. During Secretary-Treasurer Johnson's first year he wrote 1,526 letters, issued 1,941 bulletins and sent 186 telegrams. The balance in the treasury was $1,499.97, as the highest sum on hand up to that time. Mr. Johnson recommended that no increase in dues be made, although they were extremely low. The United States had entered the World War and discussions on economies and legislation to meet the demands of the time were foremost on the program.

The troubles over newsprint paper dominated discussions at the 1918 convention. John Temple Graves addressed the S. N. P. A. banquet. Stanley Clague spoke on the A. B. C. and the increased second class postage rates just put into effect. Jason Rogers was back again, and Manager L. B. Palmer, of the A. N. P. A., addressed the convention. The annual S. N. P. A. dues were put on a sliding scale based on circulation for the first time, as the dues had been $12.50 per year for each member for many years.

A resolution was adopted placing the S. N. P. A. at the disposal of the government in prosecuting the war and a copy was sent to President Wilson.

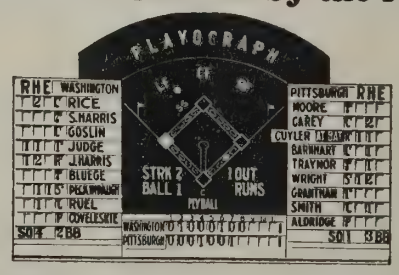
The report to the 1919 convention showed a membership of 149, making an increase of 110 per cent in 3 years.

Troubles over an adequate supply of newsprint paper featured the 1920 convention, with particular emphasis laid on the lack of protection to small town publishers. At this period the S. N. P. A. was gaining new members, partly due to the service it was rendering publishers in securing newsprint and aiding in prompt transportation by active contact with the railroads. Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador to the United States, was a convention guest.

The 1921 convention found present numerous representatives from other organizations, with L. B. Palmer, A. N. P. A. manager, having become a regular attendant. Others present were Stanley Clague, A. B. C. managing director; Thomas H. Moore, associate director of the A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising; Wil V. Tufford, secretary of the Inland Association. Advertising agency men were present as guests, but such events are now eagerly sought as evidence by the Federal Trade Commission.

Secretary Johnson issued at the 1922 convention the first complete list of officers up to that time, including the story of the first meeting, which had been secured from the Atlanta Constitution. President Warren G. Harding greeted the convention in a special letter and expressed regrets at not being able to attend. The Newmyer plan of recharting the work of the association's activities was adopted and the office of vice-president was abolished. Chairman of the board was an office created to be filled by appointment of the president from the board membership.

The famous "Agency Relations Committee Report" was presented to the 1923 convention. This is the document that has figured in the fore-front of the Federal Trade Commission suit. A loss in a few members was explained by the resignation of several publishers who had come in only to get the services of the association during the acute newsprint shortage.



Walter C. Johnson was presented with a handsome watch and Mrs. Johnson given a chest of silver at the 1924 convention. Mr. Johnson had declined in his report to serve longer as secretar treasurer, but agreed to remain at t post for another year, when the conve tion authorized the creation of the po tion of manager.

Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the N York Times and the Chattanooga Tim attended his first S. N. P. A. meeting 1925 and was made an honorary l member. J. Fred Essary, Washingt correspondent of the New Orleans Tim Picayune and Baltimore Sun, was a co vention speaker.

Marcellus E. Foster had just retir as publisher of the Houston (Tex Chronicle at the time of the 1926 co vention and he was made an honora life member. He is now back in harne and may soon play the role of both a honorary and active member.

It is realized that the history of t S. N. P. A. is incomplete, but it is hop that the printing of these notes wi bring other facts to light which can b used in compiling a history to be pub lished later by the association.

portant migrations from southern cot- td states.

The situation in regard to the negro in th South has vastly changed in the quar- te of a century, mainly during the past fi een years. Transformed economic con- di ons have had a striking effect. The ne ro has shared in the general pros- pe ity and is gaining a much higher so al status. The effects of education am ng the colored population, wholly ne lied until after the Civil War, are now ma ing a marked effect. Negro labor is be ng compensated today as never before an his buying power is regarded in the So th as valuable trade, better than that of white laboring classes of many indus- tr l or agricultural centers. When the ne ro earns plentifully he invests plenti- fu y, keen to enjoy material comforts ar without disposition to hoard wealth.

New Orleans and the Mississippi Flood

NOW that the flood of the Mississippi River is off the first pages and the New Orleans date-line is no longer con- spicuous in press dispatches the fact is beginning to be understood that at no time was New Orleans in danger. The people of New Orleans at one time were generally apprehensive of what might happen from the distant wall of water dancing down the valley; if the up- stream levees held it in. But well-in- formed people in New Orleans knew that the levees could not hold it in and, as Marshall Ballard, managing editor of New Orleans Item, says: "If they had to broken where they did break, as a matter of fact, they must have broken further down the valley and still far above New Orleans." The nearest levee break to New Orleans is more that 200 miles distant.

Discussing the subject Mr. Ballard says: "That state of mind among the people lasted only a week. It ended almost suddenly and astonishingly the moment it was announced that a spillway immediately below the city was to be created. Whatever danger there was, you must understand, was not imminent. It lay a month or more off. The minute that people were assured that artificial steps were in progress to relieve them of three feet or so, or whatever water might come down the river, they stopped worrying and turned to helping their friends upstream with a suddenness which was one of the most surprising phenomena of the sort I have ever seen.

"The definite announcement by Chief Jadwin that the Army engineers are go- ing to recommend spillways for the pro- tection of the Lower Valley—a step that has long been fought by the old-fash- ioned 'levees only' camp—will restore confidence in the stability of our agricul- ture, industry, and general values, both at home and abroad, that has been lack- ing in the absence of this assurance. This applies, of course, to the rich, farm- ing regions between here and Arkansas as well as to New Orleans. This an- nouncement unquestionably marks the most important epoch in the advancement of New Orleans and the surrounding country since the victory over yellow fever was definitely established nearly 30 years ago. We are assuming, of course that Congress will put the engineers' plan into effect. The declarations of the ad- ministration, and of a surprising number of Congressmen of all classes, makes that appear practically an accomplished fact.

"Our great port-business, despite the crippling handicaps imposed on naviga- tion by the high water in the river, was bigger in the flood months of April and May than it was last year, and still grows. Our bank debits for last month were bigger than those of the previous May.

"Building and development in New Orleans have never stopped or even slowed down. Five or six large indus-

No other city is situated to cover western North Carolina as effectively as Asheville,—high in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Charlotte is 140 miles to the southeast. Greensboro and Winston-Salem are 200 miles to the northeast. Knoxville, Tennessee, across the mountains, is 130 miles west.

Type of City

There is no other city of similar size the country over with more palatial homes and hotels. This is reflected in the high grade and varied merchandise displayed in Asheville's stores.

Asheville is a wealthy community. The very beauty of the mountainous country and mild climate, aside from business opportunities, attract many rich men.

Developments around Asheville (some not in the corporate limits but actually part of the city) have been multiplying for several years. Suburbs like Biltmore Forest, Lakeview, Grove Park, typify wealth and culture.

The schools, colleges and churches are many, modern and wonderful.

Industries

Aside from local manufacturing, wholesaling, retailing, farming, fruit growing, and stock raising, the "crop" most indicative of the territory is the "tourist crop" yielding approximately $35,750,000 in 1926 from 715,000 tourists.

Asheville is the hub of celebrated resort territory, high in North Carolina's Blue Ridge Mountains — next door to Paradise.

Asheville is Naturally a Morning Paper City

Papers from other cities cannot get into Asheville's territory until the news is stale. And no evening paper in Asheville can get far out until the next morning.

The Asheville Morning Citizen has this natural advantage in addition to its news, feature services and sound management which combine to make it one of the South's most representative newspapers.

tries have taken sites, or enlarged their plants, for industrial enterprises during the past two months. Our belt railway commission is pressing toward conclusion its plans for a great railway-and-highway bridge across the Mississippi just above the city. Other promoters are now asking the state highway commission for a franchise to bridge the Mississippi in the heart of the city. The United Fruit Company has increased its fleet by three new vessels during the past three weeks. I cannot go into detail along this line, but these are a few typical steps in a general forward movement that has been in progress for some years and appears to be gaining momentum all the time."

New Orleans newspaper men keenly resent the evil advertising the city got all over the country, a few weeks ago, as the result of a misapprehension based on a most untimely accident. New Orleans had a rainfall of 14 inches all over her bowl-shaped surface on Good Friday —all within 24 hours. That is an amazing fall. The like of it had never been seen or suspected by this generation.

The city's great pumping system carries off in any given time more water than the river Thames carries under London Bridge. On Good Friday, however, a lightning stroke fouled the feed wires of the Railway and Light corporation with the main feeds of the sewerage and water generating plant, and put the entire pumping system out of commission, right in the middle of the astounding downpour. There were flood waters in all the low places.

Innumerable news pictures were taken of it and circulated all over the country. It would have attracted no attention except that there was a flood up the Mississippi River at the same time. The Mississippi flood levels were 300 and more miles above New Orleans, and not due there until five to seven weeks later. But this made no difference to the picture-users. Three-quarters of them ascribed the rain overflow to a river overflow, as everybody's mind was on the great river catastrophe hundreds of miles north, and not on a passing local rain down in New Orleans. So the newspapers balled the two situations magnificently together, and New Orleans was advertised far and wide as submerged by the river.

The business manager of a New Orleans newspaper, asked for his opinion on the effect of the flood on general business in the South and advertising, said:

"In the fourteen states represented in the S. N. P. A. there is the tremendous buying power of 6,738,813 families, approximately 1,000,000 of which pay income taxes, that according to latest available figures total $153,400,472.

"These states cover an area of 866,360 square miles, and in them are located 288,091 retail outlets and 17,077 wholesale outlets. The newspaper circulations represented a total of 4,891,479 on weekdays and 3,924,874 on Sundays.

"It is therefore obvious that the flooded area of the South can have very little effect on the buying power of that entire section.

"Viewed specifically as to Louisiana, the flooded area is largely agricultural; largely served by commissary stores which in turn buy normally from New Orleans' wholesale and retail outlets. The flood had very little effect on the distribution of goods—on the actual consumer demand. I think the effect from a permanent analysis is psychological.

"In New Orleans, for examp threat of high-water caused a slac of sales in May. A recession water has brought business in Ju ter than last year—this largely re the spending of money and the l purchases last month.

"My impression is that the agric sections will do a quick come-back- of the crops will be replanted i for normal yield—then, there will I hope and believe, the governmen financing and prevention programs should put millions of new mone our section and give employment t ple on relief projects."

Increase the Earning Power of Your Advertising Space

ADVERTISING is coming in for its share of critical inspection in the interests of more efficient business, and the program of the S.N.P.A. Convention to be held at Atlanta, July 4 to 6, indicates a desire on the part of publishers to work even more effectively in making advertising more productive and more profitable.

Newspaper executives everywhere are now realizing more than ever the value of Ludlow equipment in supplying improved service to advertisers, and actually promoting the use of more space.

The Ludlow-set advertisement does have more actual selling power. Analysis shows ads set by this system attract more favorable attention and thus get over the sales message to a larger number of people. It is that kind of newspaper service which increases advertising linage.

How the Ludlow System Provides Composition Improvement

With the Ludlow system any size or style of face for which you have matrices is always available in unlimited quantities and yet no storage system is used. Ludlow faces may be had in sizes from 6 to 84 point and are always new, but cast only as needed—not stored for future use as single types must be.

When ads and news headings are Ludlow-set, compositors are not handicapped in any way—ads can be set exactly as they should be—and when they are printed every letter, including even delicate swash characters, is always clean and sharp. With the Ludlow system matrices are hand-set and slug-cast, thus insuring always-new faces in strong, easily-handled slug form.

You can give your advertisers better service and yourself more profit through the use of the Ludlow system.

LUDLOW QUALITY SLUG COMPOSITION

STORY OF AN EARLIER SOUTHERN ASSOCIATION

REFERENCE to an "old association" prior to the organization of the S. . P. A. has brought to light activities other organizations in the South. The tlanta Journal of April 13, 1903, carried interview with F. P. Glass who was sponsible for the Atlanta meeting. This what Mr. Glass said to the Journal porter:

"Since the old Southern Associated ress went out of business there has t been an active, effective organiza- n of the leading Southern dailies. ere was a Southern Press Association, t it had no cohesive power in the shape a definite purpose. It was largely cial, and it practically fell through at ouston, Texas, two years ago, when ly two members from outside of the ate of Texas were present.

"At the recent meeting of the Ameri- n Newspaper Publishers' Association New York, there was a conference eight or ten Southern members in endance and it was decided to try to m a sort of auxiliary to that bod; this section—and an organization—o te business managers of the Southern ilies, both morning and evening. It believed that much good can be ac- mplished by regular meetings of the siness men of the Southern dailies, o can compare experiences, suggest rnedies for some of the difficulties all ve to contend with, and possibly agree co-operation in some direction. Of rse, the organization will have to go swly, to consider carefully. It must wl first, and then learn to walk. ch organizations are successful in er parts of the country, notably in e great cities like New York, Boston, icago and St. Louis.

'The principal Southern dailies are lly in better position in their respective localities to act firmly in the correction of abuses and boldly in matters of progress than the great dailies of the Eastern and Western cities, where there are a dozen papers with conflicting interests and antagonistic managements. The tendency of the day is to co-operate in construction, and the Southern dailies feel this force at every turn, yet so far they have done nothing to protect themselves. It is time the attempt was made anyhow."

APPRECIATION

EDITOR & PUBLISHER appreciatively acknowledges the courtesy and co-operation in the preparation of this number, devoted to the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association and its great market, of the officers and members of the association, the Manufacturers Record of Baltimore, the U. We are particularly grateful to those who painstakingly searched the records of the S. N. P. A. for material for the history of the association, published herein for the first time EDITOR & PUBLISHER has sought to assemble in convenient form a true word and photographic picture of the New South as a needed contribution to the world of advertising as well as journalism.

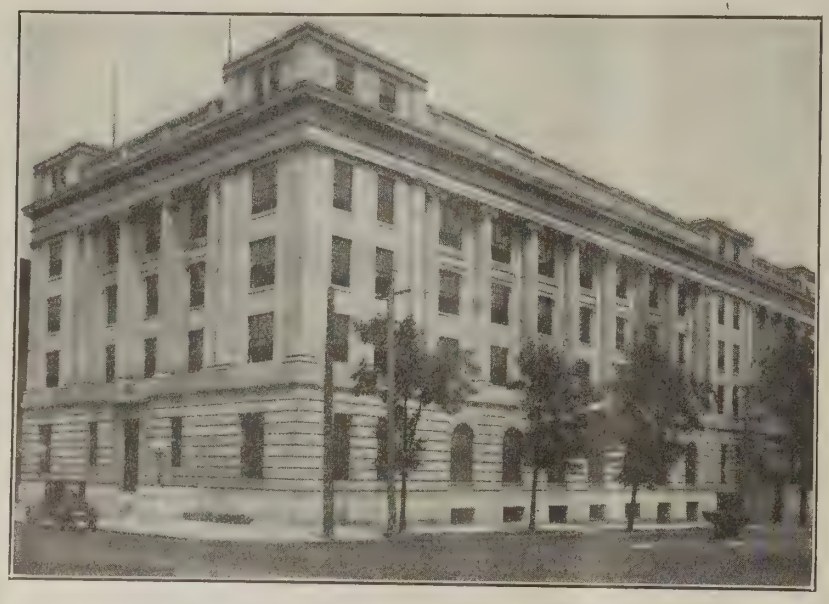
Southwest Georgia



A Richly Productive Area Now Open to Industry

ADVENT of the hydro-electric power lines of this company, through its subsidiary, the South Georgia Power Company, opens to industrial development an area of over ten thousand quare miles of the most productive section of Georgia, with uniform rates and contract requirements applying to all communities. Added to the industrial section north of Columbus and already served by this company, this gives us a territory of 12,000 square miles, approximately one-fourth of the state.

Characteristics of Southwest Georgia are raw materials related to textile, clay, wood and food products, dependable power, native labor, transportation, good government, friendliness to capital, tax exemption, good water and health conditions, good schools and churches, abundant food production and consequent low living costs.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The Progressive South, enormously rich in its growing possibilities of its famous timber lands, industrial centers and climatic conditions, promises to supply an extremely important solution of the highly vital and greatly complicated problem of paper pulp production.

This is a salient thought emphasized in an exhaustive report upon "The Suitability of American Woods for Paper Pulp" just completed by Sidney D. Wells, engineer in forest products, and John D. Rue, in charge of the section of pulp and paper, Forests Products Laboratory, U. S. Forest Service.

Advance proofs of this most illuminating study bearing extensively upon the entire newsprint and paper pulp situation in the United States were furnished to EDITOR & PUBLISHER today. The report is being prepared at the U. S. Government Printing Office for general distribution in the near future as Department of Agriculture Bulletin No. 1485.

The desirability of finding species to supplement the waning supplies of spruce, brought forcibly to public attention by the severe shortage of materials experienced by the paper industry in 1919, has been further emphasized by the large number of eastern mills that are facing eventual shut-down because of lack of raw materials, and by the relative immobility of paper mills generally. At present the spruces, firs, and hemlocks are drawn upon for 77 per cent of the wood consumed by the paper industry, spruce alone contributing about 55 per cent.

Of especial interest to timber owners in the South is the statement in this bulletin that the sulphate process applied to the Southern pines in combination with the gums and similar hardwoods of the South has been found to yield pulps which, bleached by proper methods, may be used in the manufacture of book, magazine, and similar high-grade printing papers at reasonable manufacturing cost. The South's advantageous situation in respect to publishing centers and availability of fuel, chemicals, and other raw materials, its enormous quantities of suitable woods, and the high growth rate of its forests, combine to make the possibility of a greatly expanded industry in that section very promising.

The bulletin describes standard pulping methods as related to wood properties and explains the suitability of 94 kinds of hardwoods and soft-woods for pulping by both chemical and mechanical processes, summarizing the results of research begun by the U. S. Forest Service in Boston in 1906 and carried on at the U. S. Forest Products Laboratory after the establishment of that institution at Madison, Wis., in 1910.

The informaion on pulping qualities of individual species, constituting the largest part of the bulletin, is presented in a convenient semi-tabular form, with a description of the behavior of each wood when pulped by the sulphite process, the sulphate process, the soda process, and the mechanical process.

Under the common name of each species is also given its botanical name, its range, a list of local names applied to the same wood in different parts of the country, its weight per cubic foot, and its fiber length.

In stressing the development of the South as a wide-awake industrial section from which adequate supplies of paper pulp can be obtained the bulletin points out that not only has the South "enormous quantities of suitable wood available, but owing to climatic conditions the amount of wood which can be grown in the south is from 35 to 40 per cent of the potential productivity of the entire area of forest land in the United States."

"The growing capacity of unit areas in the South is also very high," the bulletin adds, continuing at this point the bulletin states that on the other hand, for pulps which require spruce, hemlock, and fir, woods of established value in making paper, there are stands in Oregon, Washington, and Alaska sufficient, under proper timber growing methods, to supply approximately 5,000,000 cords a year.

It has been due largely to economic conditions that the extensive development of these pulp resources has so long been retarded. Up to recent years the only outlet for mills on the Pacific Coast has been the local consumption of paper and export to foreign countries. With the rapidly increasing cost of wood in the East greater margins will be created to allow for the cost of transporting pulp and paper from the Pacific Coast to other parts of the United States; and such shipments will continue to be an increasing factor in the general situation. Over 80 per cent of all pulp wood in the United States is consumed in mills situated in the New England, Lake, and Middle Atlantic states. The stand of spruce, fir and hemlock in this territory is estimated at three per cent of the total timber stand of the United States and at about 27 per cent of the total stand of the species mentioned.

As a result of these conditions, pulp wood is now being transported by land and water to many mills over distances of from 500 to 1,000 miles. Imports from the Dominion of Canada are very large. In 1922 Maine depended on Canada for 13 per cent of her spruce, New Hampshire for 35, New York for 64 and Pennsylvania for 99, and Michigan for 33 per cent. In addition, 53 per cent of the poplar used by United States mills was imported from Canada. On account of the limited supply and the increased influence of the transportation factor, the average cost of spruce pulp wood F.O.B. Mill in the Northeastern states in 1922 was between $15 and $28 a cord, depending on whether it was rough, peeled, or rossed.

With steadily rising pulp wood costs the less efficient mills, without their own timber supply, will eventually be forced out of business. It is only by improvement in operation, in processes, in the handling of timber lands, and by the use of other species, that even the better equipped and managed of the present mills can continue to operate. The use of hemlock by the Wisconsin mills is an example of what can be done with wood once considered unsuitable for pulp.

The necessity for the older mills to turn to other species and to grow their own pulp wood is indicated by United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin 1241, "How the United States Can Meet Its Present and Future Pulp Wood Requirements." It is there stated that because pulp wood use is confined so largely to a small group of species, over one half of the 9,138,000 cords required to manufacture the United States paper requirements in 1922 were imported as pulp wood, pulp, or paper. Many states are forced to rely upon wood from without their boundaries. In New England and the Lake states, where much of the industry is concentrated imports of pulp wood and wood pulp are being relied upon to a greater and greater extent to maintain production levels.

Copies of the new publication, while the supply lasts, may soon be obtained from the superintendent of public documents, Washington.

Good News~ from the SOUTH~

Reports are coming in from all sections of the South—that 1927 will be the banner year in industry and agriculture. Crops are being diversified. The Textile districts are working overtime. The iron and steel industry has been meeting increased demands for its products. There is considerable new building construction going on in new industrial plants and private dwellings.

With a 1927 appropriation of over $200,000,000 for highway construction and repairs—there is work for every one who needs it or wants to work.

All in all this is the time when every advertiser who wants to share in the South's progress—who is looking for a part of the new buying power—to step in and let the people know about the merits of his product.

Florida Leads

—in Motor Car Registration Increase —in Gasoline Consumption Increase

1925 1926

Evidences of the Buying Power of this Fast Growing Market

LAST year 401,562 motor vehicles were registered in Florida—40.2 per cent more than in 1925, and a greater percentage of increase than in any other state.

Last year the gasoline consumption of Florida showed an increase of 41 per cent over the consumption of 1925—the greatest increase recorded for any state in the Union.

These facts are merely indications of the high buying power of this great and fast growing market—a record breaking market for many kinds of manufactured products, food products, building materials and the like.

A large and important part of this market is the city of Jacksonville. This city alone has within its limits more than one-tenth of the total population of the state, and its trade territory includes many thousands more.

Jacksonville has 453 industrial plants with an annual production of 471 commodities valued at more than $100,000,000 and with a payroll of more than $20,000,000. It has more than 200 wholesalers and jobbers and 2,100 retail stores of all kinds.

The Florida Times-Union, the largest newspaper in this state, offers complete coverage in Jacksonville; in fact, its city circulation exceeds 27,941. In addition it has an almost equal circulation in suburban districts and throughout the state.

Let the Florida Times-Union help you reach this rich market. Write us for any further information you want.

Grocery Advertising Leadership

THE Chicago Daily News leads all Chicago newspapers in the advertising of grocery store products. Its volume of 472,806 agate lines in the first five months of 1927 surpassed by a margin of over 80,000 lines the nearest evening paper, as well as the nearest morning and Sunday paper combined.

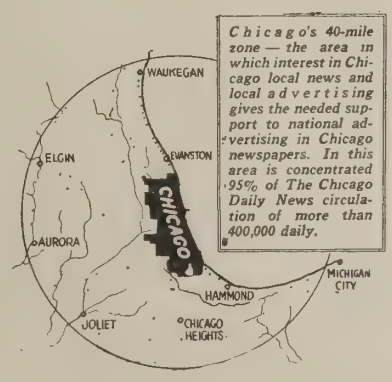
Chicago Market Facts

Chicago is a two-newspaper city —morning and evening.

For the most part its reading begins with the fifteen to thirty or forty minutes' ride to work; then halts; then is resumed on the homeward trip at close of business and continued at home in the evening.

All the advantage of time is with the evening newspaper and with the advertisers in it. The additional readers gained at home constitute gratis circulation for the advertiser, not reflected in the circulation figures, represented in morning circulation by duplication within the family.

By selecting a family newspaper, published for evening reading and properly confined in its distribution to the desired market, an advertiser buys space with his eyes open.



On the basis of these considerations and their proved value, advertisers place more business in The Daily News than in any other Chicago week-day paper.

As an acknowledgment of superior home selling influence by a group of advertisers who must sell to the home (including its women) this leadership emphasizes the similar status of The Daily News in the total of all advertising.

Food advertisers by use of The Daily News columns are able to confine their expenditures to the Chicago marketing area, thus holding strictly to the reasonable margin of profit from their operations. For The Daily News circulation is concentrated 95 per cent in Chicago and its suburbs.

This factor, appraised favorably by food advertisers, is worthy of the consideration of all who analyze advertising values in Chicago.

Chicago's 40-mile zone — the area in which interest in Chicago local news and local advertising gives the needed support to national advertising in Chicago newspapers. In this area is concentrated 95% of The Chicago Daily News circulation of more than 400,000 daily.

National Leadership

THE NEW YORK TIMES maintained in June its supremacy over all other New York newspapers, morning and evening, in total volume of national advertising. It published 635,228 agate lines, 114,746 lines more than any other newspaper, and 79,880 lines over its own record for June of 1926.

In daily editions alone, The Times leadership over another morning newspaper is indicated by the following:

	JUNE, 1927 Agate Lines	GAIN OVER 1926 Agate Lines
The New York Times	352,538	51,686
Second Newspaper	322,372	9,012
Times Excess	30,166	42,674

In the six months of this year The Times published a total volume of national advertising of 3,474,233 agate lines, 521,782 lines more than any other New York newspaper.

The total of all advertising published in The Times in six months this year was 14,954,094 agate lines, an excess over any other newspaper of 5,298,400 lines.

The Times censorship keeps its advertising columns at a high level and excludes hundreds of announcements that The Times does not deem advisable to place before its readers.

Store News Is The First News

¶ The woman who buys for herself or for a household picks up a newspaper. She reads the news—carefully if there is a story which interests her, less thoroughly if the daily grist of news items touches on no subject which seems important in her scale of news value.

¶ And then she turns to the ads—the news of the stores. No item there is too small to attract her attention—if it deserves it! For to the average woman, store news is the first news—the big news of the day.

¶ To a woman the newspaper which does not carry the complete advertisements of all the stores is not a complete newspaper. She might possibly forgive an editor who condenses his account of the latest divorce suit—but the omission of a bargain offering would be unforgivable.

¶ In Baltimore—only the Sunpapers carry the complete advertisements of every department store and specialty shop. If you want to reach the women of Baltimore—get in step with those advertisers who are best equipped to know how to reach them. And who do reach them through the Sunpapers!

Rich Rewards in Holding Public Faith in Retail Advertising Copy

L. L. Whitman, Who Spends $2,000,000 Yearly in Newspapers for J. C. Penney Company, Denounces Misleading Advertisements—Truth Brought His Firm 31 Per Cent Gain

MANY retail business concerns these days are finding that "times are not s good as they used to be." Late spring nd a cool summer doesn't help move oods made for these seasons off the deal-'s shelves.

In the face of these conditions there omes an announcement this week from ne J. C. Penney Company, operating 885 tores from coast to coast, that from an. 1 to June 1 of this year they have nade a sales gain of nearly 31 per cent.

Closely allied with the announcement as the address made last week in Den-er by R. L. Whitman, the J. C. Penney ompany's advertising director, who told ewspaper advertising executives meeting nere that his company was "extremely ell satisfied with the results it has at-ained through the use of your columns."

"Advertising alone will not sell goods," e said, "but systematic and consistently lanned advertising, coupled with com-lete sales honesty, education in salesman-hip, ability to create attractive displays, nd last, but not least, well-sustained mer-handising will go far toward building up ny business. This is an indisputable fact vhich a newspaper advertising executive an well impress upon every advertiser in is columns to the mutual advantage of ll concerned, including the buying public.

"The J. C. Penney Company entertains o fear for the future of newspaper ad-ertising, believing that its principle is undamentally sound and that this princi-le will be more and more safeguarded as ime goes on.

"We can all agree that the American ewspaper is a vital and growing force n the retailing world and the American ublisher can be depended upon, I am ure, to do much toward raising the tandards of retail advertising."

It was the appeal for co-operation of ublishers in "raising the standards of re-ail advertising" that Mr. Whitman tressed most in his Denver address. But ie also told a newspaper advertising suc-ess story that has few parallels in this ountry.

Advertising plans of the J. C. Penney Company were completely reorganized when Mr. Whitman was appointed adver-ising director in 1921. At that time was ffected a standardization of advertising which became one of the outstanding fea-ures in the sales building work of the rganization. Since then this chain store group has been a large and consistent user of newspaper space. Today this one re-ail business is regularly using upwards of 2,000 daily and weekly papers. This ear $2,250,000 will be spent, largely in ewspapers.

In 1921 the J. C. Penney Company had 97 stores in operation. In the same year ts sales were $46,641,982. Before the lose of 1927, the company will have 885 tores, located in cities in every state ex-ept Delaware and Florida, and the gross ales, it is estimated, will be in excess of $150,000,000.

This is an increase of more than 200 er cent over a period of six years. Last year the gain was approximately 27 per cent.

R. L. Whitman says:

"The newspaper publisher should be first to feel alarm over the wrong kind of advertising because if the structure of retail advertising totters he will be the first to feel the effects of the fall.

"Help the honest retailer curb what has been termed 'advertising hysteria'."

Because he had had such success with newspaper space, because he was speaking for the J. C. Penney Company, which has a 25-year history behind it, Mr. Whitman in his Denver address felt qualified to criticise and praise.

His two complaints regarding newspaper space were directed toward publishers who permit advertisers to use comparative prices in their copy and to advertise special sales without rhyme or reason, and against the "unattractive appearance of many advertising columns."

"A certain grocery company advertises that it sells 20 per cent cheaper than other retailers and then offers an additional 15 per cent discount to members of church societies," Mr. Whitman said. "This is a 32 per cent discount. Can it be done? Is it done? Should a newspaper accept that kind of copy? I leave the answers to you.

"Slowly but surely the great American public is becoming—to quote from the advertising of a prominent New York store—'more wisely critical of what it buys.' Dissatisfaction and resentment are the natural results of such advertising.

"Please understand I do not say that special sales are wholly out of the question—that a store should never hold them—for they may be permissible at times. But I do say—and I say it without fear of contradiction—that 90 per cent of the merchandise that is brought to the attention of the consuming public throughout the country by banners, streamers and a liberal supply of red ink and sensational headlines, should never be so designated.

"I believe that we are approaching very near the time when the confidence-building, service-rendering type of merchant will discontinue the practice and brand it as unethical.

"Newspaper publishers can do a constructive job in situations of this kind, if they wish. When the confidence of the readers is shaken, the influence and force of advertising in general is materially reduced and the newspaper suffers in proportion.

"A newspaper is primarily a news medium, and if a store's advertisement does not present an instructive and constructive news message, it has no place in a newspaper.

"The newspaper publisher should be the first to feel alarm over the wrong kind of advertising because, if the structure of retail advertising totters, he will be the first to feel the effects of the fall.

"Everywhere we go, we hear merchants complaining of the amount of space they must use—and the meager results obtained. In many cases those who cry the loudest are the ones who have abused space the most.

"In many cities merchants are turning to shopping supplements, and other publications—away from the newspaper, the value of which they never understood or appreciated and which they have helped to destroy.

"That is the reason for my appeal to you today, to help the honest retailer—and there are thousands of him—to curb what has been termed 'advertising hysteria.'

"Our organization this year will spend upwards of $2,250,000 for advertising and fully 85 per cent of this sum will go for newspaper space. It is quite natural that we should want to protect such an investment.

"Another evil which we feel that newspaper publishers can help to remedy is the unattractive appearance of many advertising columns. Beyond doubt the average publisher takes pride in making his newspaper present an attractive appearance. The exceptions to this rule are men who have, as yet, failed to realize the relation that appearance bears to their subscription list, advertising patronage and cash receipts.

"Attractive advertising columns, I am firmly convinced, play as important a part in a newspaper's success as do its news columns. But it is an unfortunate fact that in many cases they do not compare favorably with other sections of the paper. To determine this fact, it is not necessary to confine investigation to the comparatively small newspapers for a large percentage of the least effective advertising is to be seen in the larger city dailies.

"In most instances of this kind, I will admit, the fault lies with the inexperienced or indifferent copy-writer, rather than with the compositor who puts the copy in type. The easiest way suffices with many advertising writers. They have no idea of mechanical limitations. Their attitude may be summed up in the phrase, 'Let the printer do the worrying.' The compositor does the best he can with such copy, but, not possessing the selling instinct, he frequently misses the selling factor entirely and slows up the returns that should come from the investment.

"It hardly seems that it is good business for the publisher to permit such advertising to appear in his columns, although of course we recognize the fact that, in many cases, he may be powerless to prevent it. The result of such haphazard work reflects, not upon the copy-writer alone, but it has a great tendency to decrease the effectiveness of advertising in general, which, in turn, works harm to the publisher.

"A plan which has occurred to us, to remedy this, is for the newspaper advertising executive, assisted by one of his display compositors, to interest the merchants in his town in attending a series of meetings at which the mechanical limitations of advertising, as well as the importance of properly merchandising sales mesages, would be explained and discussed.

This would not only add much to the effectiveness of advertising in his columns, but it might do a good space-selling job for him as well.

"You may be interested to know something about our own advertising. Our methods, insofar as they relate to national and retail advertising, do not differ from those of any other modern, up-and-doing mercantile business.

"First of all, there is the plan, the program by which merchandising advertising, display and selling meet on a common co-operative basis. Unless this quartette

FAMOUS ATLANTA CONSTITUTION SOLD TO LUKE LEA AND ROGERS CALDWELL

Option Subject to Audit Has Been Exercised and Daily Expected to Change Hands Aug. 1—$2,000,000 Mentioned as Probable Price

LUKE LEA and Rogers Caldwell, owners of three other southern newspapers, this week purchased the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution from Clark Howell, subject to "verification of details."

These details are reported to include an audit to be made prior to Aug. 1.

The report was all over the South this week that the price under discussion was $2,000,000.

Mr. Lea and Mr. Caldwell united in the following statement: "Negotiations with Clark Howell, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, have been pursued for several weeks and subject to verification of details the sale of the Constitution has been made to Luke Lea and Rogers Caldwell, both of Nashville, Tenn., who recently acquired the Commercial Appeal. As a condition of the transfer of this property it is contractually agreed that Clark Howell, Sr., remains as publisher and editor of the Constitution and Clark Howell, Jr., as business manager. With the association the patrons of the Atlanta Constitution may be assured of the same high standards of journalism and the maintenance of the policies that have contributed so signally to the upbuilding of Georgia and all the territory the Constitution serves."

"The statement of Messrs. Lea and Caldwell covers the situation and there is nothing more to say," said Clark Howell, on being asked for a statement. "The chief significance of the deal lies in the fact that the Memphis Commercial Appeal, the Nashville Tennesseean and the Atlanta Constitution are brought into an intimate relationship that should add to the strength of each. As stated by Messrs. Lea and Caldwell, my relation with the Constitution as editor and publisher, and that of my son, Clark Howell, Jr., as business manager, will in no wise be affected. We thought it a good thing to tie up with Nashville and Memphis under the conditions offered, and the three newspapers will be in a better position than ever to serve their respective territories."

It is known that Mr. Howell was reluctant to sell the famous newspaper with which his family has been connected for three generations.

If the deal is finally consumated it will mean a highly important addition to the newspaper organization formed by former United States Senator Luke Lea in association with Rogers Caldwell, a Nashville financier well-known throughout the South, now owners and publishers of the Nashville Tennesseean, the Memphis Commercial-Appeal and the Memphis Evening Appeal.

Atlanta Constitution was founded in June, 1868, by Col. Carey W. Styles and other patriotic citizens who were at that time resisting the terrific disorganization incident to "Southern reconstruction." Col. Styles was a brilliant, fiery and reckless character who, despite the poverty of the new paper, kept it afloat and true to principle despite resistance that would have floored the average man. However, in the celebrated "Black Friday" panic, when gold reached 164 on Wall Street, Colonel Styles found that he could no longer finance the Constitution and he transferred his holdings to Col. J. H. Anderson, who was prompted by patriotic ideals to keep the paper in the field. Associated with him was Col. William A. Hemphill, who had been a gallant Confederate artillery officer and a school teacher of note. The paper was successfully tided over the dark days and Col. Hemphill retired, leaving Col. Anderson in control. Isaac W. Avery, who had been one of "Morgan's Men," then came in as editor. Edward Y. Clarke became managing editor.

The Constitution won many many gallant fights for the people of the community and was in great favor in the South. One of the contributing factors to its success was the advent of N. P. T. Finch, an able writer from New York, brother of the author of "The Blue and the Gray," who became part owner and editorial writer. Col. Clarke sold his interest to Capt. Evan P. Howell in 1876 and in the following year Col. Finch sold his interest to Henry W. Grady.

Capt. Howell who, returning from the war, had been city editor of Atlanta Intelligencer, took active management of the Constitution as president and editor-in-chief and reorganized the staff. Grady and Howell made a team that could not be excelled. The Constitution under them became nationally famous. Among its celebrated contributors were Joel Chandler Harris and Frank Stanton. Clark Howell, Sr., is the son of Evan P. Howell.

Having been graduated from the University of Georgia and studied journalism as a member of the staffs of the New York Times and Philadelphia Press, Clark Howell in 1884 became night editor of the Constitution. In 1897 he succeeded his famous father as editor-in-chief. He later bought the control of the publishing company and became its president. How well he has succeeded in building the Constitution, Atlanta's single morning paper, to its present metropolitan proportions and vast prestige is well-known.

COL. AMENT IN CHARGE OF N. Y. TELEGRAPH

Plan to Invest Money in Property and Enlarge Staff Announced — Mrs. Ament Remains in Charge of Editorial Departments

Col. Lytton Ament, who last February married Mrs. Edward R. Thomas, widow of the former owner of the New York Morning Telegraph, this week took over the active management of the business department of that newspaper.

Coincident with this announcement it was stated that Col. Ament intends to put a considerable sum of money into the newspaper property, to enlarge its staff and make other improvements. Mrs. Ament will retain the active direction of the editorial departments of the newspaper, which she took over last September.

MRS. LYDIG SUES FOR $250,000

Prominent N. Y. Woman Brings Libel Action Against Daily News

A suit for $250,000 damages against the News Syndicate Company, Inc., publishers of the New York Daily News, and against Joseph Cowan, a reporter for that paper, was filed Wednesday in the Supreme Court by Mrs. Rita H. De Alba Lydig.

The complainant claims that in an article published June 21, last, the defendants meant and intended to mean that she was a drug addict and was unchaste. She says that these statements were libelous and untrue.

MEDIATOR CALLED IN WIRE LABOR PARLEY

Both Machine and Morse Operators Want Increase in Wages — Press Associations Willing to Continue Contracts that Expired July 1

A mediator of the department of labor, Washington, had been called in a wage dispute now being argued between the news service division of the Commercial Telegraphers Union and the press associations.

The press associations are willing to continue contracts which expired July 1, but the operators are seeking to force through an identical contract for both Morse and machine tape punchers. The tape punchers are now receiving a minimum of $37.25 a week. Under the contract being asked for by the union the minimum would be $60.

The press associations are insisting that the punchers and Morse operators represent two distinctly different classes of labor, which should be treated separately.

Under the contract that ended July 1, Morse operators receive a minimum of $44.75 in cities under 150,000; $47.25 in cities of 150,000 to 500,000; and $49.75 for 500,000 or over. This is for an eight hour day and does not include overtime.

HEARST BACKS BERTAUD

Aviator Will Try Flight to Rome in Publisher's Plane

William Randolph Hearst is backing Lloyd Bertaud, air mail pilot, in a non-stop flight from New York to Rome and back in a giant Fokker monoplane.

Test flights are now under way, and it is expected the trans-Atlantic hop will start early in August.

The monoplane was purchased for Mr. Hearst recently by Philip A. Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror. When Commander Byrd crashed at Ver sur Mer, Mr. Payne immediately cabled him, offering the use of Mr. Hearst's machine. Byrd responded July 6 with the following cable:

"Extremely sorry not to have answered you sooner. Kindly convey to Mr. Hearst my deep appreciation of his offer and say to him that I shall have to think about his proposition a short while before sending him a definite answer. Regards."

F. G. BEACH PROMOTED

Frederick G. Beach, advertising manager of the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, and a member of its staff for 42 years, was honored at a testimonial dinner given by the newspaper's staff in the Hotel Rochester. At the dinner Mr. Beach was informed of his promotion to the position of assistant to Jerome D. Barnum, the new publisher of the Democrat and Chronicle. Frederick E. Hussey was promoted from assistant advertising manager to take the position formerly held by Mr. Beach.

STRIKE TIES UP TWO MONTANA CITIES

Printers Cause Fifteen Day Suspension of Daily Press of Butte and Anaconda—Finally Agree to Arbitrate

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

BUTTE, Mont., July 5.—The daily newspapers of this city and of Anaconda resumed publication today after 15 days complete suspension caused by a strike of the printing forces.

On June 20 the printers in the office of the Anaconda Standard walked out. The action was followed by the walkout of the printers from the offices of the Butte Miner and the Butte Post. The call for the strike was issued by the Anaconda Typographical Union and the object was to force the newspaper publishers to yield to the men their demands for higher wages. The publishers immediately offered to arbitrate the differences, under the expired code, but the printers refused even to discuss arbitration. Both sides stood pat and the two communities, with a combined population of more than 100,000, were deprived of their daily and Sunday papers.

Not only were the people without news, except as the newspaper men could pass it from lip to lip, but the business of the cities suffered a heavy blow. Merchants of Butte and Anaconda reported a marked falling off in retail sales due to their inability to advertise. Sales in many instances dropped off to half the record for the similar period of a year ago. Some stores issued daily circulars but this make-shift was not successful.

After many attempts to get together the printers and publishers met today and came to an agreement which enabled the newspapers to resume publication while the differences between the employes and employers are being arbitrated. The arbitration will be carried on under the expired code of procedure employed by the International Typographical Union and the American Newspaper Publishers Association. This is exactly what the publishers offered the printers 15 days ago.

The strike was called by the Anaconda Printers Union to enforce demands a wage increase of 75 cents a day. At the same time negotiations were being carried on between the publishers and the Butte Typographical Union, the latter having submitted a demand for a wage increase of $1.75 a day. The Butte and Anaconda scales are the same at present, $7.75 for seven and a half hours. The publishers, holding that the Butte and Anaconda field is one, sought to negotiate with both unions at the same time. The printers, however, insisted upon separate negotiations and when the demand of the Anaconda union was refused, that body served notice of a strike against the standard effective June 20. The publishers of the three papers thereupon announced an indefinite suspension which was terminated by the arbitration agreement reached. Not only did merchants of the two cities suffer a heavy loss in sales as a result of inability to advertise, but all lines of business experienced a slump during the period. Even the churches were affected, pastors reporting a marked decrease in attendance on the two Sundays the papers were suspended which they attributed to inability to publish their announcements of services and programs.

KANSAS DAILY BUYS PLANT

The Arkansas City (Kan.) Traveler recently purchased the building erected for it by Florin Trimper. The building was built by Mr. Trimper expressly for a newspaper office. The foundation was so constructed that three more floors can be added at any time more space is needed.

S. N. P. A. MOVES TO SETTLE TRADE BODY SUIT

Committee Named at Atlanta Meeting to Confer With Attorneys and Trade Commission—Col. Ewing of New Orleans Elected President—25th Anniversary Gay Affair

By ARTHUR ROBB

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

ATLANTA, GA., July 6.—The Southern Newspaper Publishers Association assembled in its twenty-fifth convention here authorized the appointment of a committee to confer with attorneys for the Federal Trade Commission with a view to obtaining a settlement of the Commission's suit against the S. N. P. A., the S. N. P. A. and other publishing and advertising associations.

The Trade Commission was expected to act this week on the S. N. P. A. petition that the evidence so far assembled by the Commission relative to the S. N. P. A. be summarized, a privilege which was recently accorded to the American Newspaper Publishers Association. Favorable action on this petition by the Federal body will be followed, it is expected, by a meeting of its attorneys with the following S. N. P. A. representatives:

John Stewart Bryan, Richmond News-Leader; Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News; Walter C. Johnson, Chattanooga News; H. C. Adler, Chattanooga Times; and A. G. Newmyer, New Orleans Item-Tribune.

The committee has full powers and it is hoped that it will succeed in ending, so far as Southern newspapers are concerned, the Trade Commission's effort to prove that publishers and advertising agencies conspired in restraint of trade by refusing commissions on advertising which was placed through other channels than recognized agencies.

The S. N. P. A. admits none of the wrongful practices charged by the Commission and has contended from the beginning that the Commission is without jurisdiction over advertising. The S. N. P. A. attitude on the agency system was officially expressed in this resolution adopted today: "Whereas the advertising agency method which was in existence many years before the organization of the S. N. P. A. has proven a valuable and economical method of obtaining national business for newspapers, therefore, be it resolved, that this Association express itself as approving the agency method, which is not to be construed as meaning that the Association recommends that any definite amount of commission be paid."

No other business of equal importance came before this gay and colorful meeting. Three sessions of three hours each handled the routine with commendable dispatch, leaving 63 of the 72 convention hours available for golf and birthday parties.

The birthday idea ran like a silver thread through the entire fabric, even to the election of officers.

Col. Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States and active in all S. N. P. A. affairs since 1903, was elected president by acclamation. He is the only survivor of the Association's first executive committee still in active service. The nominating committee, headed by M. E. Foster, editor of the Houston Press, named John A. Park, Raleigh Times and retiring president, as chairman of the board, and Walter C. Johnson, who retires from the latter post, as treasurer. The office of secretary was combined with that of manager, and Capt. Cranston Williams was reappointed by the directors to the new office.

The new board of directors follows:

Alabama—Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News.

Arkansas—J. S. Parks, Fort Smith Times-Record.

Florida—Herbert Felkel, St. Augustine Record.

Georgia—John A. Brice, Atlanta Journal.

Kentucky—H. Giovannoli, Lexington Leader.

Louisiana—L. K. Nicholson, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Mississippi—James H. Skewes, Meridian Star.

North Carolina—J. B. Sherrill, Concord Tribune.

Col. Robert Ewing, president Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

Oklahoma—E. K. Gaylord, Oklahoma City Oklahoman.

South Carolina—B. H. Peace, Greenville News.

Texas—M. E. Foster, Houston Press.

Virginia—J. P. Fishburn, Roanoke Times and World-News.

West Virginia—H. I. Schott, Bluefield Telegram.

Monday afternoon found the publishers, friends, families and guests at Stone Mountain. They inspected the great monument now being prepared for the heroes of the Confederacy, "ate barbecue," and heard Hon. Josephus Daniels, Raleigh News and Observer, in his address commemorating the Association's dead of the past year, make a stirring plea for the ideals of the old Southern journalism. His address is reported at length elsewhere.

Tuesday was golf day, of which there is more elsewhere, but it was also marked by the brief addresses by O. C. Harn, managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations; W. E. Wines, manager of the A. N. P. A. mechanical department, and Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the Special Standing Committee of the A. N. P. A.

Mr. Harn decried local circulation wars as being harmful to the entire newspaper business. He urged that publishers harboring suspicions of their competitors' claims and methods make no public criticism until after the regular audit by the A. B. C., giving the A. B. C. auditor newspaper circulations—"and the advertiser can find other channels for his appropriations," he added significantly.

Wednesday's speaker was W. A. Armistead, of N. W. Ayer & Son, Philadelphia, who urged that the South let the rest of the nation know that its cosmos is not entirely broiling sun and snowy cotton.

Postal rates received a brief discussion Monday. Following Col. Ewing's report as chairman of the postal committee, the Association again approved the committee's aims and methods in the following resolution:

"Resolved that the S. N. P. A. reaffirm its position that the wartime postal rates on second-class mail be repealed and reduced to the schedule of the 1920 rates and that this Association continue cooperation with the American Publishers Conference and all other organizations interested in the reduction of second-class rates."

Numerous resolutions were passed expressing the Association's gratitude to hospitable Atlanta, to the Stone Mountain Memorial Association, to the Atlanta Biltmore Hotel, to Wiley L. Morgan for his services as secretary-treasurer.

Walker Savory, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, was elected to the select group of honorary life members in recognition of his many years' service as chairman of the S. N. P. A. golf tournaments. His colleagues in this publishing Valhalla are Adolph S. Ochs, New York Times; Fred Seely, former publisher of the Atlanta Georgian and now proprietor of Grove Park Inn at Asheville, and M. E. Foster, who as editor of the Houston Press bounded back into active membership after a year off the list.

At the specific request of the directors, the text of the following resolution is given in full:

"Resolved that this Association express its grateful appreciation to James W. Brown, publisher of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and individually to the members of its staff, for the issuance of the handsome and complete edition in honor of the Silver Anniversary of this organization."

Another resolution commended for use as a textbook in schools of journalism, "Covering Washington," by J. Fred Essary, Baltimore Sun correspondent.

The president was directed to appoint a committee of three to arrange plans and procedure for the award of prizes to Southern editorial writers from the fund bequeathed by the late George Fort Milton. Chattanooga News. The fund now has $1,200 available.

Formal suspension of the Association's joint advertising campaign was made by a resolution, several directors expressing the hope that it would be resumed with an adequate budget.

Dues were increased for the larger papers, the maximum of $100 a year being replaced by a sliding scale ranging from $80 to $250. The schedule is based on circulation, and dues for papers having less than 20,000 circulation remain unchanged.

Mississippi Valley flood relief was urged in the following resolution: "Resolved, that the S. N. P. A. in convention assembled feels and wishes to convey to the people of the flood-stricken areas of the Mississippi Valley its profound sympathy and endorses fully the conclusions of the Chicago Flood Control Conference as expressed in its resolution calling for Federal control of the entire Mississippi river problem and pledges the support of its newspapers in obtaining from the next session of the United States Congress prompt action of the character petitioned by the said Chicago conference."

KELLY URGES CAUTION

A. N. P. A. Executive Warns Publishers of Union Contract "Traps"

ATLANTA, Ga., July 6—Legalistic traps for the publisher who is careless in negotiation of contracts with labor unions were described to the S. N. P. A. by Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

"Some unions make strenuous efforts," he said, "to enlarge the number of contracts containing a blanket provision that the publisher will observe and respect the laws of the local and international unions. A publisher signing such a contract relinquishes the right to share in determination of matters vitally affecting his business. He has no voice in the making of union law.

"Any laws which are to be a part of the contract should be stated therein. Some international unions will not underwrite a contract unless it provides that laws of that international union are exempt from arbitration. This is one-sided enough but if a publisher considers it expedient and desirable to have a contract, that should be the maximum reference in the contract to union laws."

JAMES L. EWING WITH AN 88 WINS ATLANTA S.N.P.A. GOLF TOURNAMENT

His Brother, John Ewing Takes Third Prize—Victor Hanson Low Net Winner with 75—Forty-two Prizes Awarded

CLARKSBURG DAILIES IN MERGER

New Company Formed to Publish Exponent, A. M., and Telegram, P. M.—W. Guy Tetrick General Manager

Announcement has been made of the merger of the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Exponent, morning Democratic paper, and the Clarksburg Telegram, evening Republican publication. A new corporation, the Clarksburg Publishing Company, was formed to publish both papers. Details of which have not been announced.

They will continue their separate political allegiance and maintain separate editorial staffs. Only one Sunday paper will be issued. It will be independent in politics.

W. Guy Tetrick, general manager of the Exponent, will be general manager of the combined papers.

A new publishing company known as the Clarksburg Publishing Company has been formed and has acquired all of the assets and good wil of the two former companies. The stockholders of the new company are the same as the two old publishing companies.

V. L. Highland, who was president of the Clarksburg Telegram Company, is president of the new company and W. Guy Tetrick, who was manager of the Exponent company, is general manager.

Advertising space will be sold to both local and national advertisers at a combination rate, copy to run in both morning and evening editios.

The Devine-Wallis Corporation, which has been national advertising representative of the Telegram, will represent the new combination in both the Eastern and Western fields.

BILOXI CALLS TO S. N. P. A. MEMBERS FOR 1928

ATLANTA, GA., July 6.—The Gulf Coast where pine trees grow to the water's edge and tarpon splash spray on their branches, has invited the 1928 S. N. P. A. convention to meet at Biloxi.

Other invitations were received from Memphis, Houston, Virginia Beach and Asheville. All were referred to the directors, for decision at the midyear meeting, which will probably be held at Biloxi.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 6.—Henry Grady, A. E. Gonzales, C. P. J. Mooney and other great editors of Southern history were held up before the press of today for emulation in the memorial address delivered at Stone Mountain by Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and former Secretary of the Navy.

Josephus Daniels

Mr. Daniels, standing on a bench under the shelter where a barbecue had just been concluded, found little to like in that class of journalism which thought of newspapers as "properties" gloried in billion-dollar annual turnovers or subordinated principles to dividends.

"These men of our profession," he said, "whose memories we today honor warmed their hearts at the fire of the broad and glowing patriotism of Henry Grady. That warmth and light gave them inspiration and at the same time steadied them and enabled them to reach heights of usefulness denied to their predecessors.

"The question in this industrial age is: Can an editor hold fast to ancient Southern ideals and lead in the larger commercial and industrial life essential to bring the comforts and enrich the life of the people?

"The answer is: Read the record of Bell, Gonzales, Mooney, Gillis, Moore, Humphrey, Harris, Willoughby and Hurt. Every great movement of progress felt their championship. They have trod the path of the Old South and the New South and made our way easier and brighter."

Some newspapers render their contribution in one city alone, Mr. Daniels continued. Some influence a whole commonwealth. Among these is the Columbia (S. C.) State, founded in 1891 by the three illustrious Gonzales brothers.

"Ambrose Gonzales and his brothers made the state respected abroad, but it was Palmetto to the core. Ambrose Gonzales fought hard; he gave hard blows; he made enemies. But he never struck below the belt, never had personal malice, was free from personal hate.

"And when C. P. J. Mooney died, the whole South stood stricken, for a mighty ruler in opinion had fallen. The country-at-large, which had rather slowly come to appraise him at his true worth, felt the shock. Such rare spirits do not often come to earth, therefore they fill a place peculiarly their own. Their editorials have a flavor found nowhere else. Their blossoms have a perfume no other flower fashions. It is for that reason the place of Mooney cannot be filled in Southern journalism.

"It is a great mistake to say that a man's place can be filled. The ordinary man passes and somebody does the work but it is not the work of the man fallen at his task, it is some other man's work. But when a creature soul passes, there is a void which cannot be filled. Nobody else can carry on the work of a superior man. Able men will do their work. The paper will go on as a useful institution but the peculiarly attractive, stimulating and convincing editorials from the brain and the heart of Mooney no longer illuminate the pages of that influential journal. Another soul will inhabit those columns, but those who had been charmed by the something indescribable about his productions will sigh for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still."

Names of the S. N. P. A. members who died during the past year, included in the memorial resolution, are: Frank G. Bell, Savannah News; Donald Gillis Asheville Citizen; James H. Moore Knoxville Sentinel; C. P. J. Mooney Memphis Commercial-Appeal; A. E. Gonzales, Columbia State; L. C. Humphrey, Louisville Herald-Post; Garrard Harris, Birmingham News; C. M. Willoughby, Hattiesburg American; Walter N. Hurt, Hattiesburg American; George M. Bailey, Houston Post-Dispatch.

CUP GIVEN CABANISS BY S. N. P. A.

First President of Southern Body Honored at Anniversary Banquet—Atlanta Hospitable Host to Vsiting Editors

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

ATLANTA, GA., July 6.—Atlanta's hospitality engine scarcely slowed for business, golf, or sleep for the Southern publishers and it attained full speed on Monday and Tuesday evenings. An outdoor banquet under lantern-hung trees at the Piedmont Driving Club celebrated the association's silver anniversary, with H. H. Cabiniss, the first president, and several of his successors a guests of honor. All made brief addresses, as did several present active members.

Mr. Cabaniss was given a silver loving cup by Walter C. Johnson, who has held every office in the gift of his colleagues. The cup bore this inscription: "To Henry H. Cabaniss, First President, April 14, 1903. With affectionate regards of the membership on its twenty-fifth anniversary meeting, Atlanta, Ga."

In a short address, Mr. Johnson Declared that "no man in the history of southern journalism has had a finer part than Henry Cabaniss. He did work that we can hardly appreciate today, because the problems faced then have been obliterated.

"He was a pioneer, a real old-school journalist, who knew what it was to escort a sheet of copy from pencil to press, writing it, reading it, and sometimes setting it."

Mr. Cabaniss recalled early S. N. P. A. days, and traced the great development of the press since 1903. He predicted war would be abolished through the growing public trust in newspapers.

Clark Howell, Sr., editor of the Atlanta Constitution, presided and was joined in extending Atlanta's welcome by Maj. John S. Cohen, editor of the Journal. James B. Nevin, editor of the Georgian, presided over a long table with several distinguished guests at his right and left.

Among the speakers were: Victor H. Hanson, Birmingham News; H. C. Adler, Chattanooga Times; George Morris, Memphis Commercial Appeal; J. C. Hemphill of Charleston; Josephus Daniels, Raleigh News and Observer; Sam W. Small, now of the Atlanta Constitution, who recalled his half century in southern journalism, Fred Sullens, Jackson (Miss.) News, who paid tribute to the late Robert T. Small, son of the previous speaker, as "The greatest reporter the South has ever produced"; and Col. Robert Ewing, New Orleans States, the new S. N. P. A. president. The banquet was followed by an outdoor dance.

"OFFICIAL" BYRD LANDING PROVED FALSE

mandant Misinforms Newspaper Men and Cables Carry False News to U. S.—Thrilling Flight to Ver Sur Mer by Correspondents Results in Correct Story of Channel Landing to the scientific data which Com-nder Richard Byrd collected for during his trans-Atlantic flight, iteration of journalism's oldest driven home to newspaper men here, when the gallant aviator s crew crashed into the icy waters channel at Ver-sur-mer.

maxim is: "Don't tell more than ow for a positive fact; if you've heard it, say so."

e Byrd was still in the air, headed the channel in rain and fog, some rs landed him at Issy les Mouli-near Paris. Based on a digest of orts received from Paris corre-its, the story behind this false was reconstructed in New York ws:

American reporters waiting at Le t field heard Commandant Ren-n charge of the field answer his ne shortly after two o'clock in the ig (Paris time), Friday, nine the evening of Thursday in New had had a long but exciting wait. nine o'clock in the evening, Paris ey had been receiving reports of progress. Over a private wire-ceiving set at the field they had Byrd's S. O. S. They knew he aring the end of his fuel supply; couldn't find Le Bourget; that he ome down somewhere, soon.

excitable Frenchman bubbled over telephone.

reporters, anxious to get their in, rushed messages to the cable "Landed at Issy les Mouli-' read the flash received by the ated Press in New York at 9:10 hursday evening.

ral "specials" also flashed similar es, and then contracted for auto-s to carry them to the deserted an airdrome.

h Turner, assistant general news er of United Press, said he re-a bulletin from Le Bourget at reading: "Rumored Byrd landed s Moulineaux and plane damaged; firmation."

minutes later the cable operator ut this message: "Bourget officials nformed Byrd landed Issy les heaux, but so far no direct con-on." Subsequently came: "Uni-s en route Issy."

ever it was, and inquiries are still made to discover the source, that e Paris prefect of police that Byrd was safely down, was almost the author of tragedy. Commandant Renvoise ordered the lights shut off at Le Bourget. Lights also were cut off at Havre. And Byrd thus was placed in complete darkness, even though clouds might have lifted and given him a pathway to a safer landing than in the salt waters of the channel.

All press associations, and all newspapers, spurred on by the urge to beat a rival, are making claim to the discovery that Byrd and his companions were at Ver-sur-mer. Who got there first is disputed. All are certain that their plane was first to approach this seaside village. Whoever was first, the following reached Byrd on Friday at Ver-sur-mer: Frederick Abbott, International News Service; Ralph Heimzen, United Press; John Angly, Associated Press, and Wilbur Forrest, New York Herald Tribune, who arrived at the resort by airplane after a hazardous journey from Paris, and also Percy Philip, Louis Kornfield and Harold Hinton, New York Times, who came over the rain washed pavements by auto driven at breakneck speed.

The best laid plans of press associations and special newspaper correspondents crashed with Byrd. The three big American services had functioned with 100 per cent accuracy until that devastating moment when the commandant at Le Bourget said "Issy les Moulineaux." Special correspondents had been assigned along the route the aviators were expected to take with instructions to look out for the "America." Elaborate preparations had been made with ships at sea. "Strain" is the excuse which drifts back to this country from Paris.

Edwin L. James, writing in the New York Times, said:

"The world knows what terrible strain the four airmen had during those hours of rain and dark. But certainly reporters waiting for them had a small part of the same strain."

The Associated Press would not talk for publication with EDITOR & PUBLISHER, although it was learned that a special message was put on the wire to members "regretting" the false flash. An inquiry was started in France immediately, the A. P. members were told, with Kent Cooper probably in charge. Kent Cooper was in Paris the wild night of the Byrd crash. But, according to the best available information on this side of the water, he was not out at Le Bourget when the prefect of police did his stuff.

Mr. Cooper had gone to bed early in Paris, because he had to be up, it was explained, to catch a train at 10 o'clock in the morning for Madrid.

The United Press explained the part it played in covering this important story.

Karl A. Bickel said that the reason United Press did not send an unqualified flash on Issy Les Moulineaux was because A. L. Bradford had become supercautious in airplane flight stories since he had been responsible for many airplane journeys that loomed large in U. P. client papers in South America.

Ralph Turner, assistant general news manager of the U. P., has explained it this way:

"Long before Lindbergh flew to Paris United Press men in the United States, Asia, South America and Europe had had an opportunity enjoyed by no other news agency to study and master the technique of handling long distance aerial voyages. Our men had reported the flight of the Spaniard, Ramon Franco, from Spain to Buenos Aires for our South American and European clients; they had covered the remarkable flights of that great Italian flyer, Col. de Pinedo on his recent four-continent voyage; they had recorded the progress of the French airman, Capt. D'Oisy, from Paris to Tokio, and they had followed the argosy of the five United States 'planes, commanded by Major Dargue, in the American good-will flight to South America."

To this, Mr. Bickel added the succinct statement:

"Bradford learned by experience never to report an airplane 'landed' until he could touch it with his own hands."

International News Service said in a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"Shortly after nine o'clock at night, however, I. N. S. with all other news services did carry a report from Le Bourget field stating that the America had landed at Issy les Moulineaux. This report was given to all correspondents waiting at the field by the commandant of the field, he stating that he had received it direct from Issy les Moulineaux and that it was official. It was not until an hour later that word was received—also official—that the report was incorrect and that the America was still in the air and still out of communication with land."

An earlier report had caused considerable worry to evening papers in east and west. It came after 7 o'clock in the evening and baldly stated that Byrd had landed at Le Bourget. The New York Sun printed it in its final crediting the Associated Press and apologized the next day, saying the A. P. was not responsible, but rather Western Union.

New York Telegram made a promotion feature out of it. The Telegram takes United Press only. Headlines of various evening papers were reproduced, including that of New York Evening Post.

To this, the Evening Post, in friendly spirit responded: "In its issue of June 30, the New York Telegram reproduced headlines from the Post and Sun in which it was announced that Byrd had safely landed in France. No such copy of the Post was put on sale or placed on a newsstand.

"We ran off such an extra on the A. P. Dispatch that Byrd had landed, confirmed by similar news from the Wanamaker field. But we became doubtful of the accuracy of the report and only permitted one bundle of 200 copies to get outside the building. This bundle was stopped by our circulation inspector at Times Square and returned to us by him without being opened and its contents then were counted and destroyed.

"The copy photostated by the Telegram went out of our office illicitly."

WINDSOR (ONT.) BORDER CITIES STAR MOVES TO HANDSOME NEW BUILDING

THE Windsor (Ont.) Border Cities Star, of which W. F. Herman is proprietor and publisher, has just moved into its modern new home at the corner of Pitt and Ferry streets, Windsor, where every facility for the production of a modern daily has been provided.

The new building, a Bedford stone structure of pleasing Grecian design, is next door to the former publishing plant of the Star and stands on a property purchased by Mr. Herman some five or six years ago in anticipation of future development. The old building, which is now to be known as the Star Annex, will house the job printing, engraving and photographic departments of Mr. Herman's business. The newspaper proper, however, is all housed in the new building which contains more than double the floor space of the old and is so constructed that it will carry several more stories.

The Star's new home is the last word in newspaper buildings and the mechanical equipment provided leaves nothing to be desired. An 80-page edition signalized the paper's occupancy of its new quarters, many leading firms purchasing space to convey their congratulations and best wishes to the paper and its proprietor.

One of the features of this special edition was a full-page advertisement inserted by the complete staff of the paper and signed, alphabetically, by everyone from the office boy up. This page was a personal tribute to Mr. Herman from those who work "for and with him" and expressed the highest regard and admiration for the "boss." The page was published by the staff at full transient rates and was inserted without Mr. Herman's knowledge.

In the same issue were generous cards of congratulation from the local typographical union and the Trades and Labor Council.

A further event of moving day was the presentation to Mr. Herman of a large oil painting of himself. This picture, a striking likeness, was executed by a member of the staff without Mr. Herman's knowledge.

The Border Cities Star was established in September, 1918, when Mr. Herman, then also the owner of the Saskatoon Star and the Regina Daily Post, purchased the old Windsor Record from John A. McKay and, overnight, transformed it into the Star. The new building that has just been occupied is the Star's third home in less than nine years.

COAST PAPERS PLAN TO "CONTROL" FREE PUBLICITY BY EMBRACING IT

Southern California Publishers to Hire Press Agents to Boost County Fair—Buy Space and You Get a Free Puff

AS their first step toward "controlling" the publicity evil the Southern California Publishers' Association has opened a publicity bureau of its own and has contracted to handle the publicity for the annual Orange County Fair.

The association represents 111 newspapers outside the metropolitan area of Los Angeles and in making the contract with the fair association promised the support of every member. The publishers expect to contract with all the major non-profit community undertakings of Southern California, and will provide a staff of expert writers for both the publicity and the advertising ends of the undertaking.

The move was started under direction of John King, Hemet News, and Ben Read, secretary of the Publishers' Association. These two called to their aid Harry Webster, San Bernardino Sun, president of the association, and E. O. Wickizer, South Pasadena News, and together they submitted the plan to the fair association.

Copy will be sent out on stationery marked with the name of the newspaper association, assuring it the immediate attention of each member paper.

No attempt will be made to publicise an event for which no advertising appropriation is made, the leaders in the scheme assert. Before undertaking their first contract they had assurance that a definite sum had been set aside for display advertising space in every member paper to which copy will be submitted.

"We believe we can get better crowds to the events we will handle and with less waste of space," said Ben Reed in announcing his plan. "In the past the press agent has depended on the generosity of the editor for his success in publicising his projects. Newspapers control the space and they have been giving away their only commodity to the press agent.

"Oftentimes publicity is poorly written. Because of loyalty to his community and his district the editor often is compelled to rewrite publicity. We expect to hire the best publicity men available for this class of work and can turn out first class copy.

"We believe we can accomplish more through our organization than the press agent can, and for less money. If there is money in publicity for the professional 'space grafter' there should be money in it for the publishers. We propose to eliminate the middleman and thus save money for the district we operate in, and make a little for the publishers."

H. A. Lake, president of the Orange County Fair Board, said in signing the contract that he has confidence in the ability of the publishers to spread news of the fair in a more efficient manner than can the ordinary publicity agent.

Mr. Wickizer said that he sees in the move the first step toward ultimate control of the publicity evil. The press agent, he said, is a necessary evil at present, but he hopes to see the necessity gradually eliminated.

The district served by the publishers' association comprises the five southern most counties of California. Virtually every community large enough for a newspaper conducts an annual fair, orange show, fruit show, flower show, or similar event appealing for public support. The publishers will seek the contracts to publicise each of these events. Headquarters will be maintained in the publishers' association offices in Los Angeles, and the work will be under direct supervision of Mr. Reed, the secretary.

RIGHT TO SUE QUESTIONED

Attorney Presents Argument in Chicago Tribune Suit Over Fees

The Chicago Tribune's right to bring suit against real estate experts employed by the city and paid exorbitant fees during the second Thompson administration was attacked by Attorney Michael Faherty, one of the defendants in the suit.

The attorney declared that the "rights of the taxpayer can rise no higher than the rights of the municipality itself." The real complainant is the city of Chicago, although properly brought in this case as a defendant in a taxpayer's suit brought on the theory that the city would not begin suit at all. And the recovery, to speak more accurately, is not the recovery of the taxpayers, but the recovery of the city."

The Tribune brought suit in behalf of itself as a taxpayer and other taxpayers to recover $1,763,000 for the city treasury from fees paid to the expert in an alleged conspiracy to divert public funds to the benefit of the political machine.

VAN LEAR BLACK RETURNING

Van Lear Black, publisher of the Baltimore Sun, was reported July 5 by the United Press as having abandoned his plan to continue his airplane flight from Batavia, Dutch East Indies, to Australia. Instead, it was said, he will leave Batavia on a return flight to Amsterdam, Holland.

N. Y. TELEGRAM IS 60

The New York Evening Telegram celebrated its 60th birthday on July 1, with a modest editorial, in which it compared the days when the paper started in 1867 with the present. The paper, according to the editorial, does not "feel" its years, and "since last February took on a new lease of life." Last February it was purchased from the Frank A. Munsey estate by the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

MAYNARD LEAVES NEWARK NEWS

Associate Editor Was M. E. of Newark Daily 15 Years

John W. Maynard, after a service of 33 years on the staff of the Newark (N. J.) Evening News, severed his connections with that newspaper June 30. After a short vacation, he will complete his plans for the future.

Since December, 1925, Mr. Maynard has been associate editor of the Evening News. Prior to that he had for fifteen years been its managing editor.

Mr. Maynard started work on the Evening News as a suburban correspondent. He was a city reporter for five years, and then served successively as suburban editor, city editor, news editor and managing editor.

NATIONAL PRESS HOME NEARING COMPLETION

Workmen Placing Steel on Top Floor of 14-Story Washington Structure —Coolidge to Officiate at Opening Oct. 1

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The Stars and Stripes were unfurled this week for the first time from a tall staff on the roof of the National Press Building a fourteen-story structure which is now approaching completion at the southeast corner of 14th and F streets N. W. Louis Ludlow, president of the National Press Club, and an equally energetic group of club members, climbed the fourteen stories to the roof, to fling the national colors to the summer air.

The building is expected to be ready for occupancy about Oct. 1. The press club quarters will be on the two upper floors. There will be more than 900 rooms for office purposes. The New York Herald Tribune, the Baltimore Sun, Buffalo Evening News, Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia Public Ledger and New York Evening Post are among the newspapers which have already engaged elaborate suites for their Washington bureaus in the new building. Many Washington correspondents have signed leases for rooms. The opening of the building will be attended by ceremonies at which President Coolidge has promised to preside.

DAILY REMODELING PLANT

The Winfield (Kan.) Daily Courier, W. G. Anderson, publisher, has started remodeling the Thompson block for its own use. The structure is three stories high, 50 by 140 feet. The Courier will occupy the basement and first floor while the second and third floors will be devoted to office rooms and for rental property. A fireproof vault will be installed where old files of the paper will be preserved.

EXPLOITATION OF PUBLIC CURBED BY DAILY

lt Lake City Telegram Exposed Building and Loan Companies Which Were "Cleaning Up" Under Liberal Provisions of State Law — Three States Revised Their Statutes

By FRED L. W. BENNETT

EGALIZED swindling of thousands of people who work long and hard their money was recently exposed the Telegram, an evening paper of t Lake City, Utah, in a campaign inst the stock-selling building and n companies operating in the inter- ntain states. So effective was the paign that three states last fall wit- sed their state legislatures pass laws iting these companies to smaller load- charges and in Utah, the hotbed of se concerns that were masquerading ler one of the finest types of Ameri- saving institutions, such a sales re- iance was built up that the high ssure agents of the stock-selling lding and loan companies are flocking more fertile fields, and the concerns mselves are finding it necessary to an house. The Utah state legislature ed to pass more stringent regulations the reason that the politicians in wer infested the building and loan npanies and were reaping the rich e-off at the expense of the investing blic.

t is difficult to estimate in dollars and nts the savings to investors of the ermountain country through the curb- of these high pressure building and n companies, but it could easily be million or more dollars a year.

Probably no campaign ever conducted a paper in the intermountain region ised such widespread attention and t with such general approval from the blic as did the Telegram's exposure the swindling building and loan con- ns. Letters were received from all ts of the country from investors who l been made the innocent victims of h-pressure salesmen. Official repre- tatives of foreign governments called the office of the paper to express their atitude and leave documentary evidence how their countrymen had been indled. Day laborers, widows, girl nographers, miners, housewives and en business executives and lawyers re taken in, and signed up on mis- ding and inequitable contracts to make g and tedious consecutive monthly yments for periods of from ten to teen years, the slip of one single pay- nt subjecting the investor to lose per cent of the matured value of his ntract, plus one half of all earnings, erest or dividends accrued. And all this was permitted under the state ws of Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Ari- na, Idaho and Colorado. The best ak the investor could get was to lose ven of the first monthly payments id into the concerns.

And here's how the fireworks got rted. The Telegram was running on editorial page a syndicate feature on Ioney At Work." One of the articles is headed "Building and loan associa- ns offer many advantages to the small vestor." In one of the points to prove argument the writer had stated Withdrawals, either of a part or all of e principal, can be made at will i st cases, together with distributed ofits."

But the writer did not know how the ck-selling building and loan companies th stock to sell the investing public, d inside stock for a few to make a big turn upon, operated in Utah and the rrounding states. One of the Tele- am's readers in McGill, Nev., read the t of advice and wrote to Arthur L. lsh, general manager of the paper, that was all "the bunk."

His letter revealed that he had made consecutive monthly payments of $25 ch, totalling $625, to a building and an company of Salt Lake with the derstanding that he could withdraw all his principal with interest at 6 per nt at the end of 24 months if he de- ed. After paying in his $625 this vestor found it necessary to meet some expenses brought about through sickness and wrote to the building and loan company's office in Salt Lake stating his desire to withdraw and get his money. He was penalized $297 plus interest. In other words, the building and loan company under the law grabbed $297 of this man's savings of $625 that he had made through 25 long and tedious consecutive monthly payments of $25 each.

Mr. Fish wrote him to send in all of his letters, contracts and documentary evidence with a view of getting back his $297 withheld, but he discovered that no agency of the state of Utah could get this money back for the McGill citizen. The collection was legal under the laws of Utah.

The Telegram then started its campaign against companies operating under this law.

Mr. Fish called in William Yeates, his financial editor, gave him the case of the McGill man and said "Go to it."

Yeates first went to the state bank commissioner of Utah and found that this official had been literally swamped with complaints from investors in building and loan contracts who had met a similar fate to that of the McGill investor. Yeates discovered, and the Telegram thereafter disclosed, that the law on the statute books had been placed there by the state legislature two years before at the suggestion of a lawyer of one of the largest building and loan companies. Building and loan companies had cropped up like mushrooms after a spring rain with no more assets than an office chair and table, the first month's office rent, and credit with a printing concern to get out their literature and certificates. They had sold hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of certificates and the rate of withdrawals were running as high as nine out of ten and many of those quitting were getting nothing back.

Of fifteen building and loan companies the Telegram investigated in Salt Lake, it was found that four were mutuals and the rest stock selling concerns. Of the latter class, only one was what could be considered financially sound.

It was found that the leading citizens of the city were listed on the literature of these stock-selling outfits, masquerading as building and loan companies, some as dupes, others as inside stock-holders. One company had the president of the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce; another a leading bank president; still another boasted leading business men, some lawyers, and there were leading educators, including some professors of the state university.

All excepting the mutual companies, and the one large stock company, were exacting from the unsuspecting investors all that the liberal and ridiculous laws of the state would permit. In California, one per cent was all that could be withheld upon withdrawal. In Utah it was 5 per cent plus one half of all earnings and in Wyoming, Nevada and some other states it was wide open for the building and loan companies.

Yeates got his data together and wrote a 20,000 word article exposing the situation. This was run serially every day, but so much new information and data accumulated once the exposé got under way, that the campaign ran for weeks and he wrote upward of 50,000 words.

Mr. Fish backed Yeates and turned a deaf ear to the protests and wailings of the building and loan company officials. The mutual companies supported and applauded the work.

One of the stock selling concerns sent out high pressure salesmen armed with literature with a written endorsement of President Coolidge, Secretary Herbert Hoover and Andrew W. Mellon. In great bold type at the top was "OVER FOUR AND ONE-HALF BILLION DOLLARS IN ASSETS." After a minute scrutiny of the circular, it could be found in small type off in one corner, that the billions referred to all of the building and loan companies of the United States. These letters had been sent to a convention of the national association of Building and Loan Companies.

The circular was more confusing, misleading and misrepresentative of the true facts that any oil promotion dodger ever sent out from Fort Worth in the heyday of the oil boom of Texas.

Some amazing facts were brought forth. It was found that an agent of one of these concerns had sold a contract of $10,000 to a Mexican section hand working on the Union Pacific R. R. in Wyoming. He was earning $3 a day and had saved $600 which was in a savings bank. The agent induced him to take this out and put it in the building and loan company, dating back the contract, and then pay $50 a month for ten more years. Of course the Mexican soon learned he coundn't stand the strain of $50 a month from a salary of $90 and he was forced to withdraw. The facts showed he lost his $600, which went to the agent as a commission, and all of his monthly payments. The Mexican could not understand English and had been sold through an interpreter.

There was a case of a widow and her daughter working as waitresses at a summer camp in Idaho. They lost all their savings and many long monthly payments. Cases were unearthed where widows had been induced to sink their dead husbands' life insurance policies into building and loan companies and had signed to pay ridiculously high monthly payments on the contract and, being unable to do so, lost the greater part of the principal.

Insurance companies reported that building and loan agents were inducing their insurance policy holders to borrow to the limit on their policies, and then put the money into building and loan stock. What followed, then, was that the individuals were forced to keep up large monthly payments in the building and loans and were subsequently forced to give up insurance and lost both.

So many angles were discovered that when the facts were disclosed by the Telegram it astounded everyone. It was learned that these loan concerns were exempt from paying federal income tax, which exemption is extended to mutual companies.

Complaints flooded in from every state in which these companies sent their high pressure agents. And demand was made for copies of the Telegram's campaign until all were exhausted.

The Telegram put up its fight for a law that would end the wholesale exploiting of the masses throughout the state legislature, but the bill was lost in Utah in the final shuffle. Politicians, smart lawyers, party leaders had seen the chance for the gigantic exploitation of people who worked long and hard for their money. When the bill came up that would partially remedy the situation, it was delayed, until when it finally was presented to the legislature, it was time to adjourn, leaving the building and loan bill as unfinished business, along with many other much needed pieces of legislation.

However, the Telegram did not feel deeply the loss of the bill, as it was more of an excuse than a remedy, and the fight will continue into the next legislature for a 1 per cent loading charge for building and loan companies. In the meantime, the Telegram is watching the action of these building and loan companies to see whether or not their reforms will be carried out and any extreme cases brought to light will be given publicity—the same sort of publicity that drove the swindling stock selling building and loan concerns to cover in the campaign of last year.

One of the interesting facts Yeates discovered was how some banks and trust companies refused to condemn the fraudulent building and loan companies. In the circulars of some of these concerns it was printed boldly: "For references, any bank or trust company in Salt Lake."

Yeates had a young girl reporter in the office call up an official of every bank and trust company in Salt Lake, stating she had been approached by a building and loan representative to buy stock and his bank or trust company had been given as reference. A few of the bank officials came out boldly and told her to be mighty careful or she would be buncoed. Others offered some sort of a caution, while another would say he didn't know. The president of one of the leading banks of the state said he thought the concern all right, although it was the same concern that had taken 25 consecutive monthly payments or $625 from the McGill, Nev., investor, and returned him only $328 when he was forced to withdraw.

So glaring were the facts that not a single building and loan official came to the defense of the concerns when the Telegram publicly invited them to do so. They ducked their heads and their only defense was to circulate insinuations as to what was behind the Telegram's campaign. But the people of the intermountain states were told the truth, and evidence points to the fact that the public is not now so gullible. A high pressure salesman for one of these concerns recently told Yeates that he had to quit, because the sales resistance was so great against building and loan companies that he couldn't sell any stock now, even though his company had cut the loading charge to 2 per cent.

Yeates also was told by a secretary of the leading mutual building and loan company in Salt Lake that requests for stock in their company had jumped tremendously since the stock-selling concerns was exposed. The mutual companies do not send out salesmen.

E. A. Carlock, publisher of the Paducah Post, has been elected president of the Texas Press Association by the Executive Committee meeting at Richardson, to succeed George Neu, publisher, Brenham Banner-Press, who died recently.

Sam E. Miller, editor, Mineral Wells Index, was elected vice-president. Emerson Edwards, editor, Troup Banner, was made an executive committeeman.

HARVEY INGHAM HONORED ON 25th YEAR WITH DES MOINES PAPERS

Veteran Editor of Register and Tribune-Capital Tendered Dinner July 1—J. N. Darling Toastmaster—Frank O. Lowden Chief Speaker

MOST of Iowa's notables and several of national prominence paid tribute to Harvey Ingham, July 1, at a banquet commemorating his twenty-fifth anniversary as editor of the Des Moines (Ia) Register and Tribune-Capital. Five hundred and fifty persons attended the banquet given by Gardner Cowles, Sr., publisher of the two papers.

Harvey Ingham

Seven principal speakers of the evening, recounting his editorial career and voicing estimate of his work and character, spoke of him as "a philosopher who loves the human race," and the possessor of a mentality that "goes always on a high and challenging level," while from a sheaf of telegrams of congratulations that poured in from all over the nation, Mark Sullivan's tribute to Mr. Ingham's career as "an epitome of the American Spirit" was outstanding in expression of the thought that directed the words of praise that were freely given in his honor.

Jay N. Darling, "Ding," noted Iowa cartoonist, was toastmaster at the event. Former Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, who will probably have the solid farm support in the Republican Presidential campaign, an alumnus of the University of Iowa and classmate of Mr. Ingham, was principal speaker at the banquet, and talks were also given by Congressman L. J. Dickinson, Gardner Cowles, Jr., managing editor of the Register and Tribune-Capital; H. W. Byers, former attorney-general of Iowa; W. W. Waymack, associate editor of the Cowles papers, and the Rev. Dr. C. S. Medbury.

Mr. Lowden, recounting college day reminiscences, spoke of the ideals of this government of democracy and the necessity of the return to the basic principles of that concept of civil authority.

"Harvey Ingham is one of the publicists of America who still believes in popular government," he said. "Do you realize that popular government is on the defensive as never before within our memory? Not only here in the United States, but everywhere, one after another of popular governments of Europe has fallen. You would think that the American people would feel some concern over that, but quite the contrary is true. Why I remember the time, not so long ago, when we in America hailed the rise of a republic, anywhere, as though it were our own, and we deplored the fall of self-government, anywhere, as though it were an injury which came very close to our hearts. Now most men returning from abroad hail any dictator, so long as he temporarily has increased prosperity. From the daughter of Burke, who have been managing the Bucyrus Telegraph-Forum, contemplate the publishing of a daily in the west.

praise to imitation is but a short step and so we in America must exercise vigilance, such as we have never exercised in the past if we are to avoid the fate which has overtaken nearly all of the self-governing nations of the whole world. Harvey Ingham—the Des Moines Register—are two of the agencies in the United States which are being employed most to sustain our old faith in the right of the people to govern themselves."

On behalf of Mr. Cowles, the publisher, and the Register and Tribune-Capital, Mr. Waymack welcomed the guests.

Mr. Darling, in introducing the guest of honor, with whom he had been closely associated, said: "We are gathered together, not in any spirit of unctuous solemnity, but rather for a gleeful and joyous participation in a living and affectionate regard for Harvey Ingham and his years of fruitful service as editor-in-chief, guiding counsellor and jovial companion of the Register and Tribune-Capital. They say the first 25 years are the hardest, and those of us who have labored by his side through most of that period are willing to let the memory of those earlier struggles be assuaged in the prospect of many more rich years of service and companionship stretching out before us."

Responding to these tributes of his associates and admirers, Mr. Ingham said: "It is pleasant to recall the last 25 years, but it is the coming 25 years we are really interested in. We meet tonight at the beginning of the most promising time in the history of the human race. Why should we not, on this occasion and on all occasions where we meet to recount the progress we have made, take a long look into the future, and estimate at their right values the forces that will make us and keep us great as a people?"

Mr. Ingham is 69 years old. After a year of law practice he gave up that profession in 1882 to edit his own paper in Algona, Iowa. Here he spent 20 years as a small town editor. At 44 years of age he was a widely known editor, had a wife and three children, a home in Algona, a farm, a newspaper, a postmastership and other interests, and apparently was settled for life. It was then in 1902 that George E. Roberts, Director of the Mint under President McKinley, bought and combined the Des Moines Leader and the Des Moines Register.

Mr. Ingham, three hours after receiving the invitation to become editor of the merged papers, accepted. On ten days' notice he sold his home and his newspaper and embarked on new and uncharted journalistic seas.

It was during his two decades as a small town editor, Mr. Ingham says, that he learned the application of what he later heard Glenn Frank, former editor of The Century, say:

"His warning to writers," Mr. Ingham says, "was 'the public is always interested, but the public is seldom informed.' I learned then to write so that I could be understood if I accomplished nothing else."

PITTSBURGH EXPLOSION VICTIM IMPROVING

Hatton of Press Not Seriously Injured in Blast That Kills One—Big Papers in Hot Springs, Ark., as Movie Stunt

Thomas Hatton, engineer, who was injured June 30 in a gasoline explosion at the Pittsburgh Press plant which killed one man and injured several others, has shown steady improvement at the Allegheny General Hospital this week. Hatton is suffering from burns of the hands and face but his condition is not serious.

The others injured in the blast were all able to leave the hospital after being treated. Some were cut by glass from the Press' windows which were blown out, others were overcome by fumes.

Officials of the Press found that the damage to the plant was restricted to the basement in which the explosion occurred and to the street floor of the building. Most of the damage was limited to the breaking of the plate glass windows. The presses were not harmed and publication of the paper continued within a short time after the blast. The explosion occurred while a tank was being stored with gasoline. It caught Hatton, engineer of the plant, and Glenn Day, electrician, inflicting injuries from which Day died.

Pressmen who had been swept from their posts as the released gas poured along the ground floor returned a short time later and ran the final edition of the paper almost on schedule time. The confusion had subsided almost as soon as it started. Many local firms called the Press soon after the explosion and tendered their services in any manner in which they might be used.

WINS ANOTHER RATE CUT

Worcester Gas Company Lowers Its Price Following Daily's Fight

Another signal victory for the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post in its fight for lower gas and electric rates for the public was won last week when the Massachusetts Public Utilities Commission ordered the Worcester Gas Light Company to make a reduction of five cents per thousand feet in its charges.

The announcement was the second of its kind as a result of a Post campaign. Only a few days before the commission ordered the Worcester Electric Light Company to make a substantial cut in its rate. Both reductions were the result of a long and expensive fight waged by the Post under John H. Fahey, publisher.

The reduction, in effect, means a saving of over $60,000 annually to Worcester gas consumers, and is precisely the figure which the Post sought from the commission.

In a Page 1 box announcement, following the commission's decision, the Post made a simple statement to the effect that it took up the work of securing the reductions merely to be of service to the public.

CAPTURES RUM SHIP

Former News Man, Single-Handed, Arrests Crew of Twenty-two

A former newspaper man had more than "a paper battle" with rum runners in the upper bay of New York early in the morning of July 4. Ensign Charles L. Duke, of the Coast Guard and formerly a reporter on the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star, jumped aboard a moving rum runner, seized her liquor cargo, worth $500,000, and then, to quote the story in the New York Times on July 5, "by an amazing display of bluff and cool daring, subdued and arrested her entire crew of 22 Nova Scotian seamen."

He served four years on the Star, joining the paper in 1921.

PRESS AGENT'S FAK[E] EXTRA A BOOMERAN[G]

He and His Boss Held for Grand J[ury] After Sale of "War With Chin[a]" Presses Were Uninjured—Editions Out On Time

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., July 6.—Explo[sion] of a motion picture feature [was] through the publication and sale o[f] purported newspaper extra announc[ing] that war had been declared on China, [re]sulted in Sidney M. Nutt, owner of th[e] local movie theatres, and Charles H[e]ley, his press agent, being held to aw[ait] the action of the grand jury by M[u]nicipal Judge V. S. Ledgerwood, Tu[es]day on respective charges of committ[ing] a fraud on the public and issuing fra[u]dulent advertising.

The "extra" was intended as a publ[ic]ity stunt for the Lon Chaney film "T[he] It To the Marines" being shown at [one] of Mr. Nutt's theatres. "Extra" w[as] printed twice in huge letters across [the] top of the page. Under this was a t[hree] line streamer saying "War Declared [on] China," and beneath this was anoth[er] streamer in smaller letters stating "20,[000] Marines on Way to China." A ser[ies] of drop heads followed over stor[ies] which revealed the real nature of t[he] "extra."

A small army of newsboys carryi[ng] large numbers of the papers descend[ed] upon the business district during t[he] rush hours of Saturday night. Crow[ds] thronging the streets were thrown into [a] frency of excitement until the hoax h[ad] came known. Pedestrians snatched [at] the papers and persons were running [in] of hotel and theatre lobbies and shops [to] get them. Mayor Leo P. McLaugh[lin] said he received twenty or more co[m]plaints from persons who had purchas[ed] the papers, while it was stated pol[ice] headquarters had received 80 or mo[re] telephone calls regarding the hoax.

Chief of Police Joe Wakelin stopp[ed] the sale of the papers and placed Hefl[ey] under arrest as soon as the nature of t[he] stunt became known. Local newspap[er] offices, none of which had anything to [do] with the printing of the "extra," we[re] bombarded with telephone inquiries a[nd] complaints.

Admitting that he instructed the new[s] boys to charge for the papers, Hefl[ey] explained "that the stunt would not ha[ve] gone over if the boys had given t[he] papers away as circulars." He claim[ed] he had used the same exploitation plan [in] a number of larger cities. Hefley sa[id] Mr. Nutt knew nothing of the details [of] the publicity stunt until the "extra" [s] were were on the streets.

Mr. Nutt declared that there had be[en] no intention on the part of the theat[re] management to take a cent from t[he] public without giving full value for t[he] amount received or returning the mone[y] He said the distribution of the pape[r] was only the beginning of the exploit[a]tion plan and that full explanations we[re] to have followed. He offered to refu[nd] money to those who bought papers.

NEW YORK GRAPHIC WAS "WITHIN THE LAW"

ırt Dismisses Case Brought Against Tabloid by Vice Crusader—Leaves Decision to "Judgment of City" and Other Newspaper Men—Paper's Attorney Admits Contravention of Good Taste

tices Ellsworth J. Healy, Albert Voorhees and James J. McInerney the case and Justice Healy wrote inion.

nmenting on the decision, Joseph tz, attorney for the Macfadden Pubons, told Mr. Sumner to take the nd leave such matters to the public. vice crusader retaliated by saying 0 per cent. of public sentiment was ed to such publications and threat- to take action against future pubons of a similar nature.

tice Healy's opinion follows:

his case of the Macfadden Publica- Inc., is on for decision today. The in the matter were not disputed. It practically submitted to the Court on acts. We read the briefs of both and Justices Voorhees, McInerney myself decided the matter and have to the conclusion that it would be sible under the facts and conditions d the defendant guilty.

e leave that publication to the good ent of this City of New York and fellows in the newspaper world. question, as far as this Court is rned, is not a violation of the law, r opinion, and that is the reason ur opinion is given and the decision is today."

Schultz said:

its decision the Court stated that nent upon a newspaper should be l only by the public.' Mr. Sumner take a hint from that and leave om it properly belongs the right ss upon the merits or demerits of they read."

en his attention was called to Mr. tz's statement, Mr. Sumner said: l Mr. Schultz has to do is to read ewspaper editorials that were pub- at the time this action was started, d out what the public sentiment is it. There is no question but that ntiment of 90 per cent. of the peo- New York, and of the Crime Com- n and of other public officials, is st such publications."

ed whether he intended to take any r action, Mr. Sumner replied:

e people, of course, have no right peal, so we will do nothing further unless another publication of a similar nature occurs. There is a law, of course, even though the Court decided that in this case the law was not violated."

On Feb. 4, summonses were obtained by Mr. Sumner against Bernarr Macfadden, publisher; Mr. Gauvreau, Otis A. Scattergood, circulation manager, and "Jane Doe" of the circulation department. Charges were dismissed on April 25 against all but Mr. Gauvreau and the Macfadden Publications, Inc.

When he argued the case, Mr. Schultz contended that the Graphic was following the rule that "newspapers must be a mirror to the society of their times."

"The press has at all times concerned itself with the doings of the race," he said. "The readers of the press have had only a momentary interest in the catastrophes of nature apart from their effect on man. Newspapers and their readers have been and should be primarily concerned with human lives and only secondarily with nature and that only to the extent of its relationship with man."

A generation ago, Mr. Schultz maintained, the "spectacle" afforded by the Browning case in the American courts might have been unusual and it was questionable whether or not it would have aroused the "storm of interest and public fancy."

"It is nevertheless true," he continued, "that in the light of the times the matter became one of great public interest. The press of the city and of the country as well, featured this trial, the testimony and the participants, and this story became the most prominent news item for at least that period of time which the modern generation accords 'the latest sensation.'

"That this was no new manifestation of the public mind is apparent from the fact that this case followed closely upon the heels of a number of similar matrimonial actions, the lurid testimony in which was literally devoured by the public."

Mr. Schultz admitted that in covering the Browning trial the Graphic "might have contravened good taste," but insisted that copies of the tabloid on exhibit were not, according to the statute, "newspapers devoted to the publication and principally made up of criminal news, police reports or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures, or stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust or crime."

"It cannot be seriously argued," he declared, "that this statute was intended to apply to a newspaper which included in its columns some accounts or pictures of crimes, or some reports of the happenings at the police court.

"Such news has always been a recognized and accepted part of every newspaper. As long as crimes are committed the press will report them. The more shocking the circumstances, the more prominence will be given to their story."

Mr. Schultz, taking up the various composite Browning pictures and stories Mr. Sumner and the prosecution complained of, sought to show that the Graphic's coverage of the trial was not within the prohibition of being criminal news or a police report or an account of criminal deeds or a story of bloodshed, lust or crime.

"On the contrary," he said, "the report of this trial and the pictures used in depicting scenes or episodes in the testimony seemed more in the nature of a burlesque, a Punch and Judy show. It became indeed a Grand Comedy—a comedy tinctured perhaps by some regret for a young girl and an old man who disported themselves in the manner described, entertained each other with queer animals and weird noises, a more or less fitting climax to a marriage solemnized in the presence of chauffeurs, gardeners and caretakers and fused in the warmth of early morn by a garage keeper at Cold Springs, a picture saddened still more by the grim figure of a mother-in-law hovering in the background, watching her youthful daughter and newly acquired, not-so-youthful son-in-law."

Referring to the composite picture that caused most of the discussion at the time of its publication, Mr. Schultz said:

"The composite picture on the cover of Exhibit 1 (Jan. 26) pretends to portray the aged Lothario—suitably garbed—his arms aloft and issuing from his lips the words 'Woof, woof, don't be a goof.' The youthful bride is similarly displayed—suitably garbed—in an attitude of 'anger' and 'disdain.' In the background sits a bed or couch, gorgeously covered and precariously perched upon it is the figure of a gander—a species of fowl which figured prominently in this rather extraordinary union. The bird has also been gifted with speech and his refrain is 'Honk, honk, It's the bonk!' The caption under this photograph states that 'Peaches' became highly indignant when 'Daddy' asked that she parade nude before him and that even the gander became temperamental.

"Although the practice is not to be commended, had the lady acceded to her husband's request it could hardly be said that a crime had been committed. As a matter of fact, women are nightly parading the boards of several theatres in this city, nude or semi-nude, before the eyes of thousands of men, who cannot even claim the sanctity of the marriage chamber as an excuse.

"In the composite picture which 'adorns' the front page of People's Exhibit 2 (Jan. 28) we again have the same Browning—again suitably though rather oddly garbed—the everlasting gander, the always present mother and the unfortunate bride. The scene shows Mr. Browning holding aloft a doll and telling his wife that she will have to be satisfied therewith. The caption under the picture is again in a humorous vein and describes the episode as 'Mad as a scene from The House of Usher.'

"The issue of Jan. 31 (Exhibit 3) pretends to depict 'Flaming Youth' and shows Mrs. Browning, again with her mother and two men and two ladies playing a game described as 'a strip poker party.' It is apparent from the photograph that the losses had, as yet, been very slight.

"Exhibit 4 (Feb. 1) is entitled 'A Smooth-Working Sheik.' Mr. Browning fully dressed, boots, turban and mantle, is seated on a chair, sandpapering his shoe-trees. Mrs. Browning is seated on a high-stool. The gander—wearing a hat—is perched nearby. The scene is apparently laid in a living-room. The caption is in keeping with the mental plane of the picture.

"Are any of these composite pictures pictures of deeds of 'bloodshed, lust or crime?' Do they tend to 'excite to crime?' As well call the mutual assaults of Punch and Judy or the horseplay of Weber and Fields or the custard pies of the movies 'pictures of bloodshed, lust or crime.'

In conclusion, Mr. Schultz said:

"Whether in bad taste or not, whether they can be claimed to be obscene or not is not the issue. Do the exhibits, or any of them, constitute a newspaper devoted to the publication, and principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures or stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust or crime is the issue.

"Even were the reports of the Browning trial, as the same appear in the exhibits, within the description of the statute, they comprise but a minute portion of defendants' newspaper, and the publication of such paper cannot be considered a violation of the law.

"In closing it might not be amiss to paraphrase the famous remark of Voltaire—'Though I thoroughly disapprove of what you do, I will defend to the death your right to do it.'"

LOSES BET—PLAYS GOLF WITH BASKETBALL

"Uncle Reg" Regan, sports editor of the Brockton (Mass.) Times, lost a bet that he could break 100 playing 18 holes of golf with a regular golfball. Losing his bet, he had to play the 18 holes over again, this time with a basketball. He made 130 with the basketball over the 18 holes, which is a record smasher of freak link events. STRONG SUGGESTS I.A.A. PUBLISH NEW ADVERTISING TEXT BOOK

Proposal by Chicago Daily News Publisher Made at Commission Meet in Denver—Is Part of $25,000 Research Plan

PREPARATION of a new advertising text book by the International Advertising Association was proposed last week in Denver by Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and chairman of the committee on advertising economics of the advertising commission.

In a report by Mr. Strong read before the commission it was suggested that the text book should contain "the conclusions of your committee on the standards and economic value in advertising as they exist today."

Text of the report follows:

"The Committee on the Economics of Advertising appointed by the International Advertising Commission has considered the character of the work contemplated for it as stated in the memorandum presented to the Baltimore meeting and is willing to undertake a careful analysis of the problem and the responsibility for the development of a program which will be submitted in detail to the meeting of the International Commission at Boston in October. For the purpose of this meeting the Committee desires to make the following statements and recommendations for your adoption.

1. "The Committee proposes to divide its work into three distinct phases, the adoption of an organization plan, adoption of analytical research plan and adoption of a promotion plan by which the information and standards adopted can be sold to the advertisers and to the public.

"Organization Plan. It is the opinion of your Committee that it should be authorized to engage a paid executive secretary immediately. It is proposed that the International Advertising Commission establish a tentative budget of not less than $25,000.00 for the work of this Committee during the succeeding six months on the theory that your Committee does not want to be handicapped by insufficient funds to do the work adequately.

"Your Committee desires to have it understood that they will not make themselves responsible for the raising of funds but that any request coming from this Committee for a budget in an amount in excess of the above will be based upon the importance of the work and evidence of the effectiveness of its plan to justify the expenditure requested.

"Analytical Research.

"No definite conclusions have been reached in regard to the method of procedure under this head but it is the opinion of your Committee that the recommendation of Mr. Clark's Committee should be adopted by the Committee on the Economics of Advertising and the work contemplated in research taken over. It is recommended that the work of the proposed universities and colleges departmental be joined with the work of the Committee on the Economics of Advertising and an attempt be made to have advertising taught as an economic subject. This department could be made extraordinarily valuable in research work. It is proposed that the Committee's first effort be directed, after a very careful survey of the information from all departmentals now available and such further study as can be made, to the preparation of a text book which shall contain the conclusions of your Committee on the standards and economic value in advertising as they exist today as agreed unanimously by your Committee. From that point on the conclusions of your Committee as they affect different departmentals should proceed along most cautious lines in order that the acceptance of the conclusions of the Committee shall be 100%. The text book and the periodical publication can be made the basis for the promotion program which should be indefinitely postponed until the fundamentals have been well established and accepted by the Commission.

"Promotion Plan. Under the heading of promotion your Committee does not feel competent at this time to make any announcement of its purpose inasmuch as the plan as it may finally develop will have to be adjusted to the basis determined in the work proceeding. It is thought possible, however. that your Committee, if the proper evidence of the value of its work is shown, may call upon all of the media represented in the Commission to join in a presentation of the subject to the public. It is thought possible that given the means to do it with the advertising profession the subject of the economics of advertising can be made worthy of the most careful consideration of the public in associations of commerce, commercial clubs, women's clubs, schools and governmental departments. In the end we must answer the question, 'Can advertising justify its existence as an economic factor serving the best interest of the public and the permanent and successful development of the resources of the nation?' 'Can the advertising industry control its own activities in such a manner as to eliminate waste and to improve the effectiveness of advertising as it may be adjusted to the demands of the advertiser and the public, and can it take a permanent place in the selling and distribution problems in the economic organization of the industries of the United States?' 'Can advertising sell better goods at lower costs?' 'Does advertising standardize merchandising values and contribute to the raising of a standard of living on economic lines?'

"Your Committee feels that it cannot exaggerate the importance and necessity of its work and is willing to face the issue squarely and undertake to determine if possible by the process outlined above the relative importance of all of the factors that enter into the effective use of advertising. Your Committee does not intend to enter into the question of the relative value of one advertising medium against another but the work of the Committee if carried on successfully will show advertising specifically as its value is gauged by its usefulness to the advertiser and to the public."

JOURNALISM STUDENTS START ON NEWS TOUR

Group of Eight from University of Missouri Visiting Lower Mississippi Area on Writing Trip—Prof. Martin in Charge

What in reality constitutes a "roving assignment" on the Mississippi and Tennessee Rivers was undertaken June 27 by eight members of the University of Missouri School of Journalism under the direction of Professor Frank L. Martin on the fifth annual field trip.

Each year a class from the University is given an assignment to "cover a part of the Middle West or Southern states. Three years ago a party from the University visited the Black Hills. Nine members of the 1925 trip went through Texas into Old Mexico, visiting more than a week in Mexico City. Last year members of the field trip visited in the states of Missouri and Kansas.

Each member of the party is given an assignment to furnish newspaper stories to different papers in the Middle West. Besides their regular assignments members of the class will gather special feature stories for magazine and Sunday newspapers.

On Monday the class visited the daily newspaper offices in St. Louis.

The trip down the Mississippi and Tennessee Rivers will take three weeks. Stops will be made at Cairo, Ill., Cape Girardeau, Mo., Paducah, Ky., Johnsville, Tenn., Nashville, Tenn., Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., with Florence, Ala., the ultimate goal of the trip. While in Florence the class will visit the Wilson Dam and the Muscle Shoals project.

ELECTRIC SIGN BANNED

As a result of adverse action on the renewal of a permit for a large electric sign on Beacon Hill, Boston, Mass., advertising the Chevrolet motor car, open warfare is expected in Boston against any and all signs. The State Department of Public Works recently decided not to renew the permit, following strenuous opposition to the sign. Commissioner William F. Williams, of the State Department, has refused to give the reasons for the refusal to renew the permit. The sign cost approximately $35,000.

Virginia's Greatest Newspaper hangs up a new record

The Richmond News Leader's average daily circulation during the month of May was

69,041

This is the largest circulation ever attained by any Virginia newspaper

There are only three newspapers in the United States with as intensive coverage of their market as The Richmond News Leader—and The News Leader keeps on growing.

Richmond has 550,000 people in its trading area—and these people can be better reached through the Richmond News Leader than through any other medium.

The News Leader carries more advertising than any other Virginia paper. In 1926 it gained 581,826 lines of advertising, while the other Richmond paper lost. This proves that local and national advertisers recognize The News Leader's supremacy.

PRICES IN ADS MERELY OFFERS, NOT CONTRACTS TO SELL, DAILIES TOLD

Publisher Is Liable Only for Cost of Space Not Losses on Merchandise When an Error Occurs, Chicago Tribune Attorneys Inform Inland Members

AN opinion on the liability of a newspaper publisher for errors in advertising has been prepared for the Inland Daily Press Association by Kirkland, Patterson and Fleming, attorneys for the Chicago Tribune, and printed in the Association's current bulletin.

The opinion, which was asked following an inconclusive discussion of the subject at the Inland May meeting, follows:

"The answer to this question seems to turn upon two propositions.

"1. Would the advertiser whose price had been erroneously quoted by the publisher be legally bound to sell to a member of the public at the erroneous price, i.e., is the advertisement an offer or is it a mere solicitation for offers?

"2. Even if the advertiser would not be legally bound to sell to a member of the public at the erroneous price quoted, could the advertiser recover the difference between the price quoted and the price intended to be quoted, on the theory that he had been compelled to sell at the erroneous price in order to protect his good will which had been endangered by the publisher's mistake?

"These two propositions will now be discussed in the above order.

"1. It seems to be well settled that under ordinary circumstances an advertisement in a newspaper to the effect that an advertiser has certain goods to sell at a certain price is not an offer but is a mere solicitation for offers. If the advertisement were to be considered as an offer a binding contract would be entered into as soon as a member of the public came to the advertiser's place of business and announced himself ready to purchase a certain amount of the goods so advertised.

"For example, suppose that dates were advertised by a grocery concern to be sold at 20 cents a pound. If this mere advertisement is to be considered as an offer, a contract would be entered into as soon as a member of the public tendered 20 cents and demanded a pound of dates. However, if this advertisement is merely to be considered as a solicitation for offers, or a statement of a willingness to bargain, the tender by the member of the public of 20 cents would itself be the offer which might or might not be accepted by the advertiser at the latter's option. It seems to be well settled that business advertisements published in newspapers and circulars sent out by mail or distributed by hand, stating that the advertiser has a certain quantity or quality of goods which he wants to dispose of at certain prices, are not offers which become contracts as soon as any person signifies his acceptance by notifying the other that he will take a certain quantity of the goods. They are simply invitations to all persons who may read them that the advertiser is ready to receive offers for the goods at the prices stated.

"The construction is rather favored that such an advertisement is a mere invitation to enter into a bargain rather than an offer. Of course, it must be borne in mind that the question in all such cases is one of intention and that whether or not advertisements are to be construed as offers rather than as mere solicitations for offers, depends on the intention of the parties as collected from the language used and the nature of the transaction.

"Although we have no specific advertisements to serve as a guide in this opinion it is probably safe to say that under the above authorities the average advertisement inserted by a merchant quoting prices on goods in a newspaper today would be construed as a mere solicitation for offers rather than as an offer.

"Now, since the advertiser is not legally bound to sell at the erroneously quoted price, he cannot sell at such price and charge the publisher with the difference, because the damage (the difference between the erroneously quoted price and the price intended to be quoted) would be the result of the advertiser's own act and not the proximate result of the publisher's breach of contract. Consequently, in an action brought against the publisher by the advertiser for such erroneous quotation of price, the advertiser could not claim, as a measure of the damages, the difference between the price intended to be quoted and the erroneous price.

"2. Even if the advertiser would not be legally bound to sell to a member of the public at the erroneous price quoted, could the advertiser recover the difference between the price quoted and the price intended to be quoted, on the theory that he had been compelled to sell at the erroneous price in order to protect his good will which had been endangered by the publisher's mistake?

"This situation can perhaps be made clearer by the use of a hypothetical case. Suppose that the advertiser paid ten dollars for an advertisement and that in the copy submitted to the publisher the advertiser stated that he had a quantity of dates for sale which were quoted at 20 cents a pound. Suppose that the publisher erroneously stated in the advertisement that the price of dates was 10 cents a pound. Suppose, further, that numerous members of the public, scenting a bargain, presented themselves at the place of business of the advertiser and offered to purchase dates at 10 cents a pound. The advertiser, in order to protect his good will and to prevent dissatisfaction among his buyers, sells one thousand pounds of dates at 10 cents a pound, although, as pointed out above, he was not legally bound to do so. The advertiser has thus lost one hundred dollars and thereupon brings suit against the publisher. What is his measure of damages? Is it ten dollars, the price of the advertisement, or is it the one hundred dollars which the advertiser lost by reason of the sales? It seems to be well settled that the maximum measure of damage is the price of the advertising contract.

"This situation seems to have arisen in only one case that of Georgian Company vs. Bloom, which was decided in the Court of Appeals of Georgia in October, 1921. In that case a Georgian Company sued Jennie Bloom on an open account for a certain advertisement printed in a newspaper published by the plaintiff. This indebtedness was admitted by the defendant who, however, filed a counter-claim alleging that she conducted a retail ladies' wear shop and that on June 9, 1920, she contracted with plaintiff to run an advertisement on that date as follows: 'Special in furs. Large animal scarfs, taupe, brown and black, satin lined into brush. For three days only. Special price $15.00.' The defendant in her counter claim further alleged that the plaintiff breached this advertising contract and in place of it inserted the advertisement as follows: 'Special in furs. Large animal scarfs, taupe, brown and black, satin lined into long brush. For three days only. Special price $5.00.' The defendant stated that because of this wrongful advertisement she was compelled to sell forty-eight scarfs at a loss of ten dollars each, that is, to sell them at $5.00 instead of $15.00 to customers who accepted her offer as made in said advertisement. Defendant further alleged that the plaintiff well knew that the purpose of the advertisement was to sell the scarfs at $15.00. The trial court struck this counter-claim as invalid. This ruling was affirmed.

"Any other damages would be special damages which could not be recovered unless before such breach such damages were called to the attention of the party breaching. Neither could the advertiser recover any prospective profit which he might have made had the price been quoted, for it is uniformly held that the loss of profit following a breach of contract to publish an advertisement is incapable of being ascertained.

"It would seem the true measure of damages in such a case as the one under discussion could not, in ordinary circumstances, exceed the price paid for the advertising.

"None of the above questions could arise between the Tribune Company and an advertiser under the Tribune Company's contract for general display advertising because of the provision contained in Clause 6 which is as follows:

"'The Company will not be liable for any error in any advertisement published hereinunder unless a proof of such advertisement is requested in writing by the Advertiser and returned to the Company's office with such error or correction plainly noted in writing thereon, and in that case, if any error so noted is not corrected by the Company, its liability shall not exceed such a proposition of the entire cost of such advertisement as the space occupied by the noted error bears to the whole space occupied by such advertisement.'

"This is true for the reason that even if the advertiser would have a cause of action against the publisher for a mistake in publishing the advertisement, no reason is perceived why such claim could not be abrogated by contract, which is the result effected by the above quoted clause. The only occasion on which the principles discussed in 1 and 2, supra, could be applied would be one in which a contract for advertising was er into without the insertion of such a as Clause 6.

ANSWERED

Dear Mr. Katz:

Mr. Hughes, our Business Manager, called my attention today to the fact that our first contract with you was about to expire, and I have signed the document which binds us together for another term.

I want to tell you how keenly I appreciate the intelligent interest you have taken in the Gazette. You have increased our business, have given us the kind of business we like--that is to say, clean high class advertising which our local subscribers and advertisers demand, and you have made it possible for us to maintain our standard and make more money on foreign advertising than we ever made in any other similar period since I bought the Gazette thirty-two years ago. You have outrun all expectations. You have overkept every promise. You have made good.

Yours gratefully,

KEY TO CONSUMER BUYING ABILITY

Statistical Rating of New York Counties and Cities for Products of General Appeal, Graded in S Major Classes of Quality and Cost—An Original Simplified and Tested Formula from Basic Data

By NELSON H. SEUBERT

Copyright 1927 by Editor & Publisher Company, All rights are reserved and warning is given that reproduction of these results, in whole or in part, without written permission of Editor & Publisher Co., will constitute copyright infringement.

TEN million people, uncounted and almost countable millions of dollars, and desires which are given a freer rein here than anywhere else in the world make New York State a magnet whose lines of force have an irresistible pull for those who sell goods of general public appeal. It is this market which is described in word, tabulation and graphic line on this and the next pages in the eighth article in the current EDITOR & PUBISHER series on the "Key to Consumer Buying Ability."

The figures for New York State tell a distinctive story. With slightly less than 10 per cent of the population of the United States living within its boundaries, the figures indicate that this tenth has the ability to purchase almost a quarter of the high-priced luxuries that are sold in the United States. The index figure of this purchasing power appears in the first line of the accompanying table in the sixth column, headed Class VI. The figure is 223514, which, as will be explained below, indicates that this community has the power of absorbing 22.3514 per cent of the commodities in this class for sale in the entire United States market.

In the tabulation and on the graphic chart, we see that its middle class is approximately 61 per cent above the average for the entire country in its buying ability and that its moneyed folks have a purchasing ability 127 per cent above the national average. Taking all the cities in the state having 10,000 or more population as a unit, it is seen that they show a progressively increasing per capita ability to buy in all of the six merchandising classes, reaching a peak in the fancy-priced luxury (Class VI) group, where their ability is 163 per cent above the average. The cities of less than 10,000 population and the rural communities taken as a unit show a slightly lower than average middle group, but above the average in the classes covering the highest-priced merchandise and service. Undoubtedly this reflects prevalence of suburban and rural estates of the many well-to-do urban residents.

Close inspection of the index numbers for the separate cities listed shows that only one city of the 64 listed which does not reflect buying ability better than the average for the country and this exception is so slightly off the line that it can be regarded as normal for all practical purposes. It is a consistent picture, indeed, of well distributed prosperity and purchasing ability that appears from the statistics of New York.

It goes without saying that the focus of interest for most manufacturers and their sales and advertising managers in this week's survey is the section covering New York City. The figures show that while slightly more than 5 per cent of the nation's population resides in the metropolis, the residents of its five boroughs have the ability to purchase 16 per cent of the total volume for the country of high-priced luxuries (Class VI).

A manufacturer whose product lies within this class obviously is doing neither his product nor his prospective market justice if his purchase of advertising space and other sales efforts are based upon a per capita count. His is a high-priced economic unit, facing the sales resistance inherent in its price as well as the competitive obstacles met by commodities of lower price and more general utility. This price-resistance is one of the main blockades to be passed by his advertising, the mission of which it is to convince the consumer in advance that the article, despite its cost, will give the purchaser co-ordinate, or extraordinary value. It is a kind of advertising that fails when it is haphazardly or insufficiently exploited. It is advertising that cannot be placed upon a per capita basis, in direct and unequal competition with the space announcements of products which do not demand quality and price exposition. It is advertising which should be purchased and placed in direct relation to the ability of the selected market to consume a given proportion of the particular advertised product. The company making and selling an article which can be placed in Class VI of this segregation should appropriate for advertising in New York City thrice the amount that is indicated by a per capita count.

Here arises the other old question: Does a national advertising campaign carried exclusively in a group of general magazines give the proper emphasis to New York City? The answer is definitely negative.

Let us consider a hypothetical case. A manufacturer of a nationally distributed product is spending all of his appropriation in magazines, including the following: Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, Pictorial Review, Woman's Home Companion, The American Magazine, Colliers, Good Housekeeping, Delineator, McCalls, Literary Digest, Red Book, Cosmopolitan, and Liberty.

The total circulation afforded him by these magazines is 22,712,988 copies, of which only 1,107,672, or 4.88 per cent would be distributed in New York City. It is hardly necessary to emphasize the lack of adequate coverage that this advertising gives the manufacturer of a quality product. The greatest individual market in America will yield to no such assault.

Comparison of this percentage of magazine coverage with the index percentages shown in the tabulation indicates that if the product is in Class I, the manufacturer should be putting 17 per cent more of his advertising effort [illegible] the New York market; If it is in C II, 41 per cent more effort; Class III, [illegible] per cent more effort; Class IV, 87 [illegible] cent more effort; Class V, 110 per c[illegible] more effort, and Class VI, 223 per c[illegible] more effort.

Again, if you increase the list of m[illegible] azines to 30 by including the followi[illegible] Needlecraft, Household, Woman's Wo[illegible] People's Home Journal, Modern Pris[illegible] la, Country Gentleman, Farm Jour[illegible] Farm Life, Farm & Fireside, Success Farming, and Capper's Farmer, the [illegible] deremphasis upon New York City cov[illegible] age would be even more marked. [illegible] combined total U. S. circulation of th[illegible] 30 magazines is 33,302,568 copies [illegible] issue, of which only 1,169,801 cop[illegible] enter New York City. This is o[illegible] 3.51 per cent of the total circulation.

A national campaign in these magazi[illegible] would, it is apparent, be wholly ina[illegible] quate for making a dominating app[illegible] to the New York market. Nor wo[illegible] additional magazine circulation, with [illegible] small New York City quota reinforci[illegible] the coverage just cited, be sufficient. T[illegible] inhabitants of the city present such [illegible] tremendous potential market that eve[illegible] avenue of approach should be used. T[illegible] English-language daily newspapers w[illegible] a total circulation in excess of 4,000,0[illegible] daily are essential to the introducti[illegible] to and maintenance of a product in t[illegible]

NEW YORK ~ CHICAGO ~ SAN FRANCISCO

New York market. The dailies, in English and foreign languages, reach every stratum of the city's life and, if selected carefully after analysis of their circulation, distribution and the purchasing power of the group which they serve, their ability to create a favorable atmosphere for a commodity of demonstrable value can easily be proven.

In a market the size of New York, the analysis should be carried down to smaller units than the five boroughs, which is the limit of the present survey. The same formula that has been used in computing these index figures cannot be applied so easily to these smaller and less definite units since the income tax figures are not yet made available in such form. It is, I believe, practical and quite possible to substitute for the number of income tax returns the factor of average rentals for the given locality. This information is easily obtained and in my opinion should be more often used in getting a picture of the dim and frequently unseen corners of the New York City territory.

One New York City newspaper has made surveys of localities, with factors somewhat similar to these as a basis and, in addition, has advertised in its promotion literature a comparison of the buying power index with its circulation in the analysed area. The idea is capable of minor modification to fit peculiar community conditions and its employment by newspapers would doubtless give many advertising managers and salesmen a new viewpoint on the community whose purchasing power is their reason for existence. It is certain to produce material that will be welcome to the space-buyer, whose appetite now appears insatiable for definite information on the purchasing power of a territory and the distribution of newspaper circulation in the same area.

It was in consideration of this desire of the advertising buyers and sales managers for definite information on consumer buying ability that that this service was initiated by EDITOR & PUBLISHER in its issue of May 21. To date, surveys have been published for the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Jersey. Only one criticism has so far been received and that will be stated and answered in a few words below.

When a manufacturer has checked off every element that seems likely to affect the sale of his product in a given territory, his salesmen can usually name half a dozen or more elements that have not even been considered. The vexing problem is usually not solved by the use of one or more of the general indices of buying power. The manufacturer of kitchenware finds that the index he is using to determine a city or state's buying power is also being used by his neighbor as a guide to the same community's buying power for expensive period furniture. Both cannot be right and both may be appallingly wrong.

Reduced to their lowest terms, the elements which enter into an index of buying power are two—population and income. A study of these two elements properly related will give a close approximation of the potential ability of a community to absorb products of mass appeal. Certain products common to the needs or desires of practically all people and within reach of the poorest flow evenly over the country, practically paralleling the distribution of population. Other products, much desired by all, would have a similar flow provided everyone enjoyed an equal meed of prosperity. Unfortunately, prosperity is not so evenly spread. In some communities, densely populated, lack of education, inadequate transportation, unfavorable climate, etc., may prevent the gainful employment of a large section of the population. A low income level would prevail and while such a community might consume its proportion of low-priced necessities it might not be a promising market for a medium-priced or expensive specialty or luxury.

This condition, frequently overlooked or minimized in studies of buying power, is delineated in this survey to a degree never before attempted. An arbitrary weighting which checks fairly accurately with known facts is given to various classes, as follows:

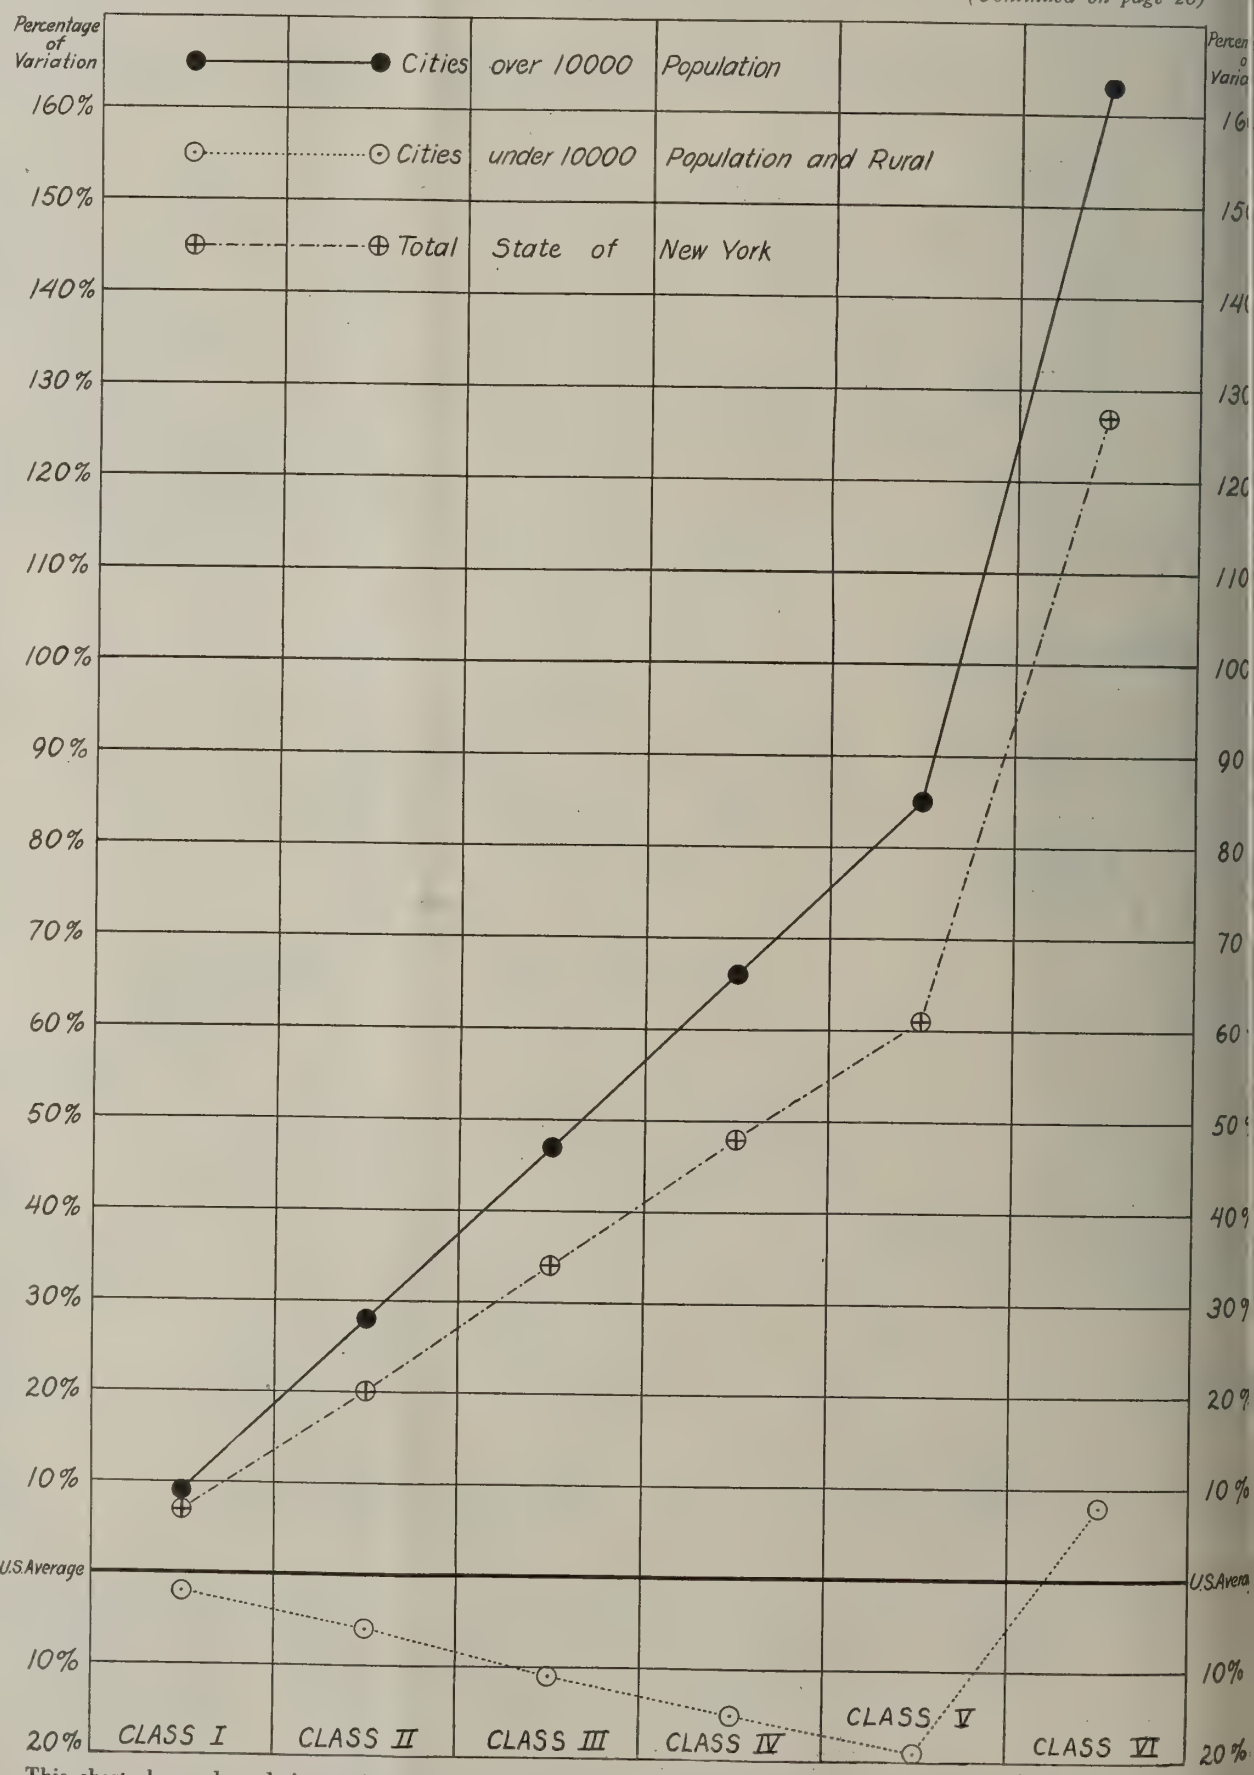
In Class I, the class for cheap necessities and bulk staples, percentage distribution of population counts 90 per cent and percentage distribution of income 10 per cent. No matter how much of a necessity an article may be, the money available for its purchase has some influence and should be considered with the population figures. In the same way, high-priced luxuries and non-staples of mass appeal should fall under Group V, which is given a weighting of 10 per cent for population and 90 per cent for income. Class VI is devoted to fancy-priced luxuries of high unit value and the weighting is the same as for Class V, except that incomes of $10,000 and more are substituted for the statistics of incomes of all classes. Following are a description of the six classes and the weightings according to each factor in each class:

Class I Cheap necessities and bulk staples. Population 90 per cent. Number of incomes 10 per cent.

Class II Moderate priced necessities and packaged staples. Population 70 per cent. Number of incomes 30 per cent.

Class III Quality priced necessities and staples. Cheap luxuries and low priced non-staples. Population 50 per cent. Number of incomes 50 per cent.

Class IV Fancy priced necessities and staples. Moderate priced luxuries and non-staples. Population 30 per cent. Number of incomes 70 per cent.



Class V Quality priced luxuries and non-staples. Population 10 per cent. Number of incomes 90 per cent.

Class VI Fancy priced exclusive uries of high unit v Population 10 per cent. N ber of incomes over $10,00 per cent.

The computation of the Index num was done in the following manner:

The population of the United Stat represented as 100 per cent (1925 mates) the percentage of populatio each State, County and City over 1(population was figured and carried four places beyond the decimal poin order to have a figure for the sma communities. The same process was lowed with the "number of all income returns" (1924 returns) the total for United States was represented as 100 cent, or, carried out four places be the decimal point 100.0000 per cent.

same process was also followed with the "number of income tax returns over $10,000" (1924 returns).

The proportion of increase or decrease in these index numbers from Class I to Class VI will give a fairly accurate picture of how far above or below average the county or city is in middle or upper classes.

If the index number in class I is the largest number of the six classes the city can be roughly classed as a lower class city or county.

If Class V is the highest number the city or county can be classed as middle class.

But if the largest number is in Class VI then it should be classed as an upper class locality.

The criticism of this system, referred to above, was voiced by a Vermont publisher and since it is likely to arise again, though not in New York State, the writer begs the privilege of stating both the criticism and his argument in rebuttal. Both were printed in the issue of June 18, in substance as follows:

An interesting and not unexpected, criticism, was expressed against the use of income tax returns as a factor to reflect the buying ability of the rural dairy farmer of Vermont. It was objected that due to a 10-20 per cent exemption for depreciation of machinery, 20 per cent for depreciation of live-stock, 5-10 per cent for house rent, milk, butter, eggs, meats, vegetables, etc., the cash income of a Vermont farmer should be increased by amounts ranging from $500 to $1,700 to approximate his real annual income.

There is no doubt that this is true regarding Vermont, a predominantly rural state, and that it prevails also in most rural farming regions. The question as to whether this condition tends toward underestimating the buying ability of the farmer in comparison with that of the city or suburban resident is not new—it has been under discussion for many years in political and economic circles and it probably never will be settled to the complete satisfaction of both sides.

However, since these index numbers are primarily designed for the use of manufacturers and sales organizations selling consumer merchandise of mass appeal, and not farm specialties, it seems reasonable to urge that the following points be kept in mind.

1. The $500 or $1,700 which the critic of this theory proposed should be added to the cash income of Vermont farmers is a book value, set aside to take care of depreciation, of machinery, live-stock, farm building, fences, etc., and hence it is not available for the purchase of consumer merchandise.

2. That the farmer's cost of doing business is balanced and offset in the city by similar stuations in the cost of doing business paid by the retail grocer, the retail druggist, the lawyer and the doctor who maintain their own offices and also by thousands of other small shops and retail stores in the cities.

3. That tax exempt securities, which are largely held in the cities and their suburbs, also help to balance this apparent statistical injustice against the farmer.

4. The big factor of social and business competition in the cities keeps this buying ability active and increases the probability of selling merchandise. For instance, the writer knows of a very wealthy man who maintains a luxurious apartment on Park avenue, New York City, where he lives four or five months a year. The rest of the time he spends on his 3,000-acre farm in the Middle West. It is stated that it costs him more than twice as much to live in New York and keep up his apartment during four or five months as it does to live on and maintain the farm for the rest of the year.

The exemptions that the city man makes in his income returns are not so emphasized as are those of the farmer, but they exist and with the growing preponderance of urban over rural population, it is possible that they offset in the balance the farmer's well known and justified privileges.

Birmingham

The South's Greatest Industrial Center!

PICTURE, if you will, a city embodying 52 square miles of territory. Now let your imaginative vision sweep a bit further—and there comes into view over 750 factories, furnaces, mills and various kinds of industries. That—is industrial Birmingham.

Within this city there are 247,548 people. Their bank resources total $110,546,888. They have $94,304,928 on deposit. During 1926 their bank clearings amounted to $1,447,643. The 60% assessed value of their property is $193,004,518. In 1926 their building permits totaled $22,263,116. They own over 39,000 automobiles. They have 49,000 children in school.

It takes 36,000 telephones to serve this busy, thriving city. Over 48,000 water connections indicate the number of homes. This is a busy city and many of the industries run night and day — and produced during 1926—1,600,000 tons of steel; 2,881,000 tons of iron; 20,400,000 tons of coal and 4,700,000 tons of coke.

Nine trunk railway lines give adequate receiving and shipping facilities in every direction. The street railways carried 70,775,375 passengers in 1926. And remember if you please—that the land upon which this expansive and tremendously busy city is now situated, was virgin soil and wooded land just 56 years ago.

Today Birmingham is the South's greatest industrial city—and is the largest city for its age in the world. It is also known as one of the most responsive markets in the United States.

HUGE INCREASE IN SALMON SALES FOLLOWS YEAR'S NEWSPAPER DRIVE

1,150,000 More Cases Sold by Northwest Packers Last Year During $200,000 Campaign—Industry Pleased and Planning to Increase Budget

SALMON sales aided by national advertising and improved marketing methods will show an increase over the preceding year of 1,150,000 cases, according to a report issued this week by Strang & Prosser, Seattle advertising agency handling the advertising program of the industry.

The salmon year ended June 30, and reports of salmon shipments indicated that the industry had on hand 800,000 cases of all grades. This is 150,000 cases more than on that date last year, when advertising was first started, but is considered remarkable since the 1926 pack was 1,800,000 cases more than the pack for 1925, and 2,000,000 cases more than the average for the previous four years.

Incidentally the agency estimated that publishers of newspapers and magazines presented the packers with a quarter of a million dollars worth of free publicity while the $200,000 campaign was being run.

The report follows in part:

"The salmon industry, by adopting these modern sales methods indicates increased sales of from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000 over 1925, and this in the face of declines in the foreign demand. Domestic consumption has been increased steadily to offset not only the great increase in pack, but as well the slump in foreign shipments. Figures compiled by the Association of Pacific Fisheries indicate that the per capita consumption of salmon in the United States has been brought up steadily from 1.13 pounds in 1921 to 2.61 pounds in 1925, the great increase being coincident with advertising.

"On July 1, last year, the visible supply of salmon, all grades, in first hands was 650,000 cases. With one month to go, on June 1 of this year, the Association of Pacific Fisheries' statement showed 1,142,301 cases unsold. Assuming that June's sales this year equal the 4-year average they would be 350,000 cases.

"This should bring the new pack in upon a healthy market—self-evidently a market that can easily be sustained by the same methods of orderly marketing and advertising.

"Shipments of salmon from Pacific Coast ports from January 1 to June 1 this year have been 35% greater than in the same period last year and 40% better than the four-year average.

"National advertising has not only well justified itself in the salmon industry, but it has paid substantial profits. At first the industry was skeptical and had to be shown the benefits. Today there is a better spirit of co-operation, there is more unity than before, and those who were lagging behind while others took the initiative are feeling more willing to do their share and support the common cause.

"These latter feel they are decidedly indebted to the advertising leaders and are expressing a desire in all fairness to co-operate for the benefit of themselves and for the industry.

The advertising committee of the Associated Salmon Packers has worked hard and earnestly to make the advertising program a great success. More and more are their efforts being recognized.

"If advertising had done nothing else—had not sold an additional can of salmon—had not had the effect of stabilizing the market—it has more than paid for itself in its benefits to the industry in many other direct and indirect ways. For the salmon industry has come to have more respect for itself, for its own members, and certainly has gained infinitely more respect from the banking and business world.

"Advertising was launched in March, 1926, with a $200,000 drive covering a 90-day period just before the new pack came in. Because of the success of that campaign it has been maintained consistently ever since, though more money would have made it much wider in scope and more effective.

"With new and adequate funds available from the great majority of the packers—on a lower basis of assessment per case—large advertisements can soon again be stimulating salmon sales throughout the entire country. Getting the 1927 pack quickly into consumption means many times the cost of the advertising in lowered carrying charges, insurance, warehousing, interest on the investment and general grief."

Free salmon publicity totaling a quarter of a million dollars was obtained during the year from newspapers and magazines, the report stated.

This "generous" attitude is described as follows:

"Newspapers, magazines and other avenues of publicity have contribut fully a quarter of a million dollars m in generous use of their pages for f salmon publicity—tens of thousands salmon recipes have been printed throu organized publicity plans worked out this office; beautiful colored pictures salmon dishes, and countless articles a illustrations of the industry have a peared far and wide, and all without c to the Associated Salmon Packers.

"Half a page in one chain of ne papers represented a cash value of $7,5 if the space had been bought. The l issue of one magazine contained $1,2 worth of space featuring salmon dish and another current magazine has a 2 page article on salmon, the equivale space being worth $10,000.

"Other advertisers have helped featuring salmon dishes in their own a vertisements—for instance, Mazola. S mon recipes so featured represent a go $5,000 in one Mazola ad alone."

ORGE M. BAILEY, NOTED HOUSTON POST-DISPATCH EDITOR, DIES AT 63

ical Writings and Brilliant Paragraphs Spread His Fame —Started Career on Danville (Va.) News—Served Houston Paper Twenty-three Years

GEORGE M. BAILEY, editor the Houston Post-Dispatch and known journalist, died at his home iston, July 4, of cancer. He had l for many months. He was 63 ld.

death ended a remarkably varied per career and wrote the last chap- he development of a rare personal- olonel Bailey attained national rec- n by the force and clarity of his al writings, the rare humor and satire of his epigrams and the ering flame of his patriotism and n to the public good.

was born in Wiscasset, Me., on 28, 1864. Upon the death of his in the following year, he moved is mother to North Carolina. In after a number of years spent in he entered an apprenticeship in nville (Va.) News. During the w years he worked on newspapers ham and Raleigh, N. C., and Co- s, Ga. He moved to Texas in 1883 nt to work on the Dallas Herald. later he became co-founder of the do Graphic, a small weekly in a cattle region of West Texas.

sold this paper in 1887 and re- to Dallas, working on the Times ter serving as manager of the Dal- reau of the Fort Worth Gazette. 90 he became associated with the News and held various important ns, city editor, political writer at exas capital and, for five years, nt correspondent in Washington, m 1904 until 1924 he was chief edi- writer of the Houston Post, from o 1925 editor of the Houston Dis- which has been purchased by R. S. g and associates, and from 1925 his death, editor of the Post-Dis- under Mr. Sterling's ownership. 1911 this noted journalist and para- grapher was chosen to the military staff of Governor Ben V. Hooper of Tennessee. This honorary position, carrying the rank of colonel, he held until 1915. He held the same rank on the staff of General Julian S. Carr when the latter was commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans.

A few months ago Col. Bailey was selected as one of 30 outstanding editors to make a two months' tour of Europe for the purpose of studying political and economic conditions. The tour is sponsored by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Peace. Admirers of Col. Bailey seized this occasion to give him a testimonial dinner. More than a thousand leaders of Texas life were present, and a wonderful tribute was paid to the honor guest.

Col. Bailey's work combined a pleasing style and a wide range of expression with a lofty sense of ethics and a patriot's zeal for service. His Early Morning Observations, a daily feature of the Houston Post and the Post-Dispatch for more than two decades were quoted more frequently perhaps than the remarks of any other newspaper writer. His personality found free expression through this medium. His editorials were lucid, faultless from the standpoint of master craftsmanship and at times remarkably eloquent. Critics say some of them deserve to rank with the choicest essays of the English language. His tribute to Abraham Lincoln, reprinted on the first page of the Congressional Record and included in all Lincoln anthologies of recent date, is called the finest brief eulogy ever written about the emancipator.

Col. Bailey's influence in journalism and in public life was always on the side of cleanliness, fairness and tolerance. He hated sham and fraud and he was an unrelenting foe of corruption. Personally he was modest and unassuming to a fault.

mbers of the board are Joseph Ur- architect; Murray Hulbert, lawyer; Schluter, banker; Mr. Howie, Mr. er, Mr. Rosencranz and another to amed.

r. Howie said that the last six hs he has been engaged in negotia- which have culminated in the pres- consolidation. Prior to that, since ng the Mirror, he was reported in ust, 1925, as planning a tabloid for Chicago, a plan he later abandoned. His present plans in the trade field are ambitious.

"We hope to be the biggest trade group in the field," he stated. "I am calling this new work constructive journalism. It certainly is more refreshing work than to dash out and get the picture of the flashly woman who is suing her husband for divorce."

In connection with the consolidation, Shields & Co., who recently handled the financing in connection with the merger of the New York Journal of Commerce and the New York Commercial, will soon make a public offering of ten-year 6½ per cent gold bonds of Trade Publications, Inc., which will carry warrants for the purchase of common stock.

"Our little issue was sold immediately," Mr. Howie declared, "and we are now looking for a resale. We only placed one advertisement to comply with the law.

"It may interest newspaper men thus to know that the American public is beginning to look upon investments in publications with favor as the public abroad, particularly in Great Britain, has for many years."

Mr. Howie was for many years in the Hearst service. At various times he was city editor of the Chicago Tribune, editor of the Chicago Herald & Examiner, and city editor of the Boston American.

A CHALLENGE

WHY should any advertising agency traffic in free publicity?

Dozens of them are engaged in the practice, or are operating with press agents and the public relations advisory ilk. They are up to all the tricks to graft space in news columns and in such magazines as dare thus to deceive their readers. Why is this? Can it be justified on the ground of economics? Can it be defended as ethical? Is it even efficient or justifying the expense involved? Is it fair either to the client or to the publisher? Above all things, is it honest to publicly represent advertising as a part of the editorial content of a publication?

EDITOR & PUBLISHER's views on free publicity are well known. We believe most of the agency men agree with us regarding press agentry, not only as uneconomic and unethical, but as an unmitigated nuisance. They continue to practice it because they feel tied to the bull's tail. However, there may be some sincere defenders of the free publicity system among the agency men. If so, we should like to have their point of view. Nothing would please us more than full discussion of this matter from the angle of the advertising agent. If free publicity has a defender, will he kindly step forward and present his argument? EDITOR & PUBLISHER will gladly give a page to any recognized agency man for an exposition of views contrary to ours. If desirable, we may even undertake to arrange a forum for a joint debate, publishing a stenographic report of the proceedings. Is there an agency man in New York who will take either side of this issue, in written or spoken debate? It is a big question. It is a question that must be solved. Discussion of it is a contribution of great value both to advertising and publishing.

Our hat is off again to Thomas H. Adams, fighting editor of Indiana, and his newspaper associates, who are gradually loosening the lid from what appears to be the vilest political pot in this country.

HEADLINESE

AN overwhelming majority of the discriminating readers of the United States Daily, published at Washington, recently answered a questionnaire expressing satisfaction that that newspaper had adopted a policy prohibiting the use of "headlinese," especially in its grosser forms.

Franklin P. Adams, pioneer headline reformer, this week quoted from New York Evening Post the headline "Spurns Dayton Reception" and demonstrated to our satisfaction that all that Mr. Lindbergh had done to merit this spurning reputation was to fail to attend a reception at Dayton that he did not know about.

The evidence against headlinese continues to accumulate and the day may come when editors in general will give it the boot. But there is something to be said for it, when intelligently done. Long words do not make good headlines, even if they fit the space. The swift-moving, attractive line is composed of a half dozen short words. Certainly no one objects to short words, even if coined, when they make good sense, tell the story and do not jar on the language nerve. Do you dislike "pact" for compact, "tilt" for quarrel, "flu" for influenza, "slain" for murdered? You do object to "grab" for acquire when the act is passive, but not when it is violent. "Spurn" is a badly misused word, no doubt, but has its proper place. On another page of this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER will be found a story that cites horrible examples of headlines with double-meaning, always most obnoxious. In general, we think it is not the use but the abuse of headlinese that is under criticism. Perfect headline writing in short and snappy English is, of course, a large order in literature.

How often are newspaper stories satisfactory to you when you happen to know from personal experience what the exact facts are? Making the story good is one of the great evils of our writing men.

Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.—Isaiah, LV; 13.

CLEAN UP!

THERE is smoke enough to indicate a lively blaze in the sporting department and if there is bribery of sports writers the scandal should be cleaned up from within, not from without. The situation is in the hands of the managing editors of the newspapers and the heads of the press services and syndicates. Today it is but a rumor; tomorrow it may be a subject of conversation among the readers of sports columns across this country.

Journalism is sufficiently well organized to tackle a proposition of this sort. There are organized bodies which have been created in large measure for the purpose of defending the press in such matters. It seems to EDITOR & PUBLISHER that forehanded action is called for and without delay.

It is our own opinion that there are some scurvy panhandlers hanging to the fringes of sport pages. We do not believe that sports writers who have public followings are grafting but we must say that they appear very indifferent to the dirty stories that are floating about regarding their trade. That there are sporting interests that would pass money to newspaper men we do not doubt. Sport stuff, by and large, is not notable for its regard of the cardinal rules of good journalism but is, on the other hand, editorial, assertive and often more in the nature of a tip-sheet than an independent observer and reporter of the news. It is, of course, this laxity that permits the skate who would take money from a sport promoter to get in his dangerous lick. Are the managing editors of the country going to permit this smoldering fire to blaze up into the face of journalism? What is the matter with a clean-up? For a starter consider the ballyhoo nature of the stuff now running from prize fight training camps.

The way to be run out of the newspaper business is to run out of ideas.

SIR THOMAS' "PRESS"

SIR THOMAS LIPTON is known as a jolly type of Englishman. Thrice in 20 years we have seen him smile through his tears as his Shamrock cup challengers were beaten by superior American yachts. As a good sport and a fine fellow American hands have always been outstretched to greet him.

But on Sunday we saw Sir Thomas in an unbecoming pose. Opening the gravure section of our newspaper we came on a three-column picture of the tea merchant standing by the grave of David Kennison, the last survivor of the Boston Tea Party. Sir Thomas obviously had permitted a press agent to lure him to New England, place a dinky wreath on a tomb that had been lovingly erected by the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution and there frame up a "news photograph" for publicity purposes. This was its impertinent caption: "No wonder he smiles! Sir Thomas Lipton, one of the world's greatest tea merchants, has just placed a wreath on the grave of the last survivor of the Boston Tea Party."

Yes, he is smiling—or is it a smirk on his salty countenance? A three-column tea advertisement in free news space! Triumph of thrift and advertising ingenuity! A little sport, in the name of "business," at the grave of David Kennison.

Perhaps our sense of humor needs honing, but the picture was not funny to us. It may be good advertising, but a young lady of our acquaintance blazed up patriotically: "I think that picture is an insult and I wouldn't drink his old tea."

THE CRITICAL FUNCTION

THAT the people of many cities are loc the newspaper for improved critical on plays, motion pictures, radio and b the confident belief of EDITOR & PUBLISHE public needs the information and the theatre, exhibitor, broadcaster and book-publishing need the stimulus of independent thought thus expressed. The critical phase of journalism i cities has been all but stamped out by short box-office folk and newspaper men who, to advertising coming easily, are willing to sacri critical function of the newspaper. It is a r

For a large percentage of subscribers ther better reading than soundly constructive an descriptive columns of criticism of public en ments or books. The press agent material many editors are using cannot possibly inte in any real way serve the reading public. It i a vile imposition. We know of nothing t discredits a newspaper as gushing bestowal of on a poor public performance. Good and ba formances, so far as the newspaper is con fall to a mean level and columns that should b with lively interest become boresome and are ignored.

Oh, yes, there is grief in it—but it is worth of trouble and any other necessary sacrifice able to advise your public on the matter of tainment. Criticism need not be very troub if sensible and capable writers are entrusted wi work.

Wonderful newspapers these days—stories adventure that pale the wildest flights of tion!

GOOD BUSINESS

THE triumph of advertising in the salmo dustry is even greater than we had been believe. A few years ago we recall the di that plagued the great packing business which offering a wonderful food product in large qua to a public that did not understand or apprecia value. According to an official report for the year ending June 30 the per capita consumpti salmon in the United States has in five years incr from 1.13 pounds to 2.61 pounds. Last year's increased some eight million dollars over those of and the report says this was "coincident with a tising."

It was more than that, gentlemen. It was and effect in operation. It was an application o old, but ever young, policy of telling the public meritorious article and then supplying the public' mand. What has happened in the salmon ind can happen in other neglected industries when operation is perfected.

Journalism grieves at the loss of Col. Georg M. Bailey, editor of Houston Post-Dispatc editor to his finger tips, humorous paragraphe of rare skill, leader of men and good citize His like is uncommon in this world.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

ON July 3, 1887, F. A. Miller joined the staff of the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune as a reporter. Previously he had served as a newsboy for the Tribune and also as a compositor in the old hand-set days.

F. A. MILLER

Now he is the president and editor of the paper he joined 40 years ago. He has probably been continuously connected with one newspaper longer than any other Indiana newspaper man.

Mr. Miller is the son of Alfred B. Miller, one of the founders of the Tribune, who died Dec. 10, 1892. Since his death the son has been the directing force of this Indiana newspaper.

Martin J. Kunkel, staff photographer of the Brooklyn Eagle, is a patient at the Samaritan Hospital in that borough, where he is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

THE ST. LOUIS STAR

FIRST IN ST. LOUIS with the NEW EYE-SAVING TYPE

Another Service to Newspaper Readers That Directly Benefits Newspaper Advertisers

For several years typographical experts, in collaboration with psychologists and oculists, have been experimenting with small type faces, to develop a design which would be artistic, more easy to read and less tiring to the eye. As a result of careful study, the 7-point Ionic No. 5 on an 8-point slug, was developed.

The St. Louis Star watched these research activities with a great deal of interest and as soon as the new type was available, took steps to discard the old type used for many years, junked thousands of dollars worth of old equipment and at a great cost, substituted the new. On Monday, April 18th, The Star made its first appearance in its new costume—instituting a great service to St. Louis newspaper readers which undoubtedly will be adopted later by other St. Louis newspapers.

What does this mean to the advertiser? It means briefly that readers of The St. Louis Star will suffer little or no fatigue from the "fine print" of their favorite newspaper. They will, therefore, be more inclined to peruse this newspaper at greater length. In short, they will have a keener desire and more time to read ADVERTISEMENTS.

To appreciate fully the significance of this innovation, get a copy of The Star today, read it and note the legibility and eye-soothing style of The St. Louis Star's new body type.

A newspaper that has reached an enviable position for great news achievements and for editorial attitude that protects and benefits the people of this city; the attainment of the greatest sustained average daily circulation in its history; and now, from a physical standpoint, a more "humane" newspaper—those are a few of the things that are making a more productive advertising medium of - - - -

THE ST. LOUIS STAR

"Nothing Counts but RESULTS"

Compare These Type Faces

OUR OLD TYPE

You are reading this in the size of type used by The Star for many years, but which was discarded with Saturday's issue to give way to the newly designed and far superior type face in the adjoining column.

The average reader of The Star has grown accustomed to the type you are now reading, and for that reason presentation is made in this manner of the two type faces, side by side, to emphasize the improvement made by The Star's investment in the new equipment to print a better paper.

As in all progress, the old gives way to the new and better. With these few words the type that has been known in the printing world as 7-point No. 2 on an 8-point slug bids you farewell.

OUR NEW TYPE

Here is the new type The Star has bought to make your daily issue of this newspaper easier to read, as well as worth reading.

In this face of type you have placed before you the last word in the art of newspaper research on type subjects. By comparing this new type with the old in the left-hand column, it readily will be seen that the improvement is little short of marvelous.

This new type face you are now reading is known as 7-point Ionic No. 5 on an 8-point slug. Old persons will find it a delight to read, and anyone troubled with visional defects or handicaps will welcome this innovation as a boon.

It is hoped that if you are pleased with the new type you will tell your friends and neighbors.

A Few Comments on the New Type Face From Readers of THE ST. LOUIS STAR:

The new type, known technically as 7-point Ionic No. 5, on an 8-point slug, created a great deal of interest Monday, April 18, at the convention of the Missouri Optometric Association at Hotel Statler. The delegates, who come in daily contact with newspaper readers and their eye complaints, hailed the change in The Star's appearance as a distinct improvement over other type faces.

Dr. Lawrence S. Geiger of Sedalia, president of the association, lauded The Star for making the change.

"Printing as clear and distinct as that presented by The Star's new type face should not result in any eyestrain at all," he said. "The new type is clearer, bolder and therefore much easier to read than other styles of print."

Louis P. Aloe, president of A. S. Aloe & Co., opticians: "The Star should be complimented on the change in type faces. The new type is much easier to read. It is clear and distinct. I notice The Star's sp[illegible] carefully the results of the new print type in The Star on the eyes of our patients.

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

O'Rourke Obtains Figures Showing Relationship Between Circualtion Revenue and Expense—Method of Preventing Carrier Turn-Over —Brooklyn Times Tour Contest

OF 33 newspapers circularized by Clem D. O'Rourke, circulation manager of the Indianapolis Times, only one stated that their circulation department did not show any net earnings. The average net earnings of the 33 dailies when circulation expense included maintenance, promotion, mailing room, and transportation, was 45 per cent, with their expenditures listed as 34 per cent for maintenance, 18 per cent for promotion, 16 per cent for mailing room, and 32 per cent for transportation.

Mr. O'Rourke supplied these figures to members of the International Circulation Managers Association at the recent convention held at Atlanta, Ga.

"I have made," he explained "five territorial divisions, placing seven of the 33 papers who furnished me figures in the east, seventeen in the central west, five in the south, two on the Pacific coast, and two in Canada.

"An average of eastern papers show 46 per cent net earnings with their expenses divided as 39 per cent for circulation maintenance, 19 per cent for circulation promotion, 12 per cent for mailing room, and 30 per cent for transportation.

"The central west papers showed an average net earning of 45 per cent, with expenses divided as 31½ per cent for maintenance, 19 per cent for promotion, 17½ per cent for mailing room and 32 per cent for transportation. Five papers reporting from the south showed a net earning of 40 per cent, with circulation maintenance costing 31 per cent, promotion, 22 per cent, mailing room 13½ per cent and transportation 33½ per cent. The Pacific coast papers showed 47½ per cent net earnings, while spending 31½ for maintenance, 26½ for promotion, 21½ for mailing room and 20½ for transportation. The two Canadian papers showed an average of 55½ per cent earnings while their expenses were divided as 45 per cent for maintenance, 17 per cent for promotion, 17 per cent for mailing room, and 21 per cent for transportation."

Carrier turnover was analyzed this week for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by H. Fenton general circulation manager of the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union, in an effort to discover causes and a possible cure for this continual circulation department worry.

"One of the chief causes of this turnover," he decided, "is the fact that carrier boys do not make as much money as the number of papers they carry entitles them to. This is chiefly due to two things: first, the boys do not collect regularly; secondly, they do not keep books.

"We remedied the bookkeeping situation by requiring each boy to turn in his collection book each week to be audited by the district manager. This is a simple system of bookkeeping and has worked well on our paper.

"To remedy the main trouble, irregular collections, W. C. Worcester, our city circulation manager, now requires each carrier without exception to pay his bill each Saturday. The people know when to expect him and have his money ready.

"For the last three months there has not been a Saturday when our carrier collections were not in to the cashier 100 per cent, because of this rule. The carriers are making more money, and turnover has virtually ended among Rochester Times-Union carriers."

Sixty carriers of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Daily Times who receive the highest number of votes during the 10 weeks period between May 31 and Aug. 8 inclusive will be taken on a trip to Niagara Falls, Aug. 30 to Sept. 2, by E. S. Dobson, circulation manager. Mr. Dobson explained this week how he conducted this tour contest.

"The contest is divided into three periods," he said, "with a distribution of nearly $700 in cash prizes at the end of the fourth, seventh and tenth weeks. Each carrier is being credited with 34 votes on each new subscriber, obtained during the first period, 25 votes during the second period, and 20 votes during the third period.

"In the spring of 1925 and 1926, we ran similar contests through which the same number of boys and men were taken on a three-day trip to Washington, and last summer 40 boys were taken to the Sesquicentennial at Philadelphia and to Valley Forge. We have found that these contests have a big appeal to the boys. Their school teachers and parents also approve of them and we have had no difficulty in getting a boy excused from school to go on these trips."

John H. J. Kuntz, circulation manager of the Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer and News Journal, was married June 30, to Miss Lillie Mae Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Kuntz will leave July 20 on a honeymoon trip to Chicago, the Great Lakes, Niagara Falls and Canada. Mr. Kuntz is secretary and treasurer of the Interstate Circulation Managers Association. He was formerly circulation manager of the Altoona (Pa.) Tribune.

George Kernek has been made circulation manager of the Shawnee Morning News at Holdenville, Okla., for that territory. Kernek was formerly a carrier at Holdenville.

Dr. E. L. Karnes has closed his office in Carlinville, Ill., to join the circulation staff of the Springfield (Ill.) State Register, and succeeds K. W. Moody in charge of the Carlinville circulation. Mr. Moody becomes district circulation manager in two counties.

Approximately 200 newsboys were the guests of the Newburgh (N. Y.) News at a recent outing at Orange Lake Park, in which the boys of the recently combined Beacon (N. Y.) Journal-Herald participated. The Beacon carriers were under the care of Joseph Lynch, circulation manager. The News' force was led by Prestley McLaughlin, circulation manager, assisted by Irving Knox, Joseph Smith and Harold Rehrey.

Improves Appearance of Owosso Argus-Press

Mr. J. E. Campbell, Managing Editor of the Owosso (Mich.) Argus-Press, says: "Since the installation of our Ludlow we have made great improvements in the typographic appearance of our paper and we receive frequent favorable comments from readers and advertisers to that effect.

"The Ludlow has also put us almost entirely upon a non-distribution basis. This eliminates the constant annoyance of a tie-up in type. And the Elrod gives us a fresh supply of leads, slugs, and strip material daily.

"We are very well pleased with the purchase and feel that the installation of both the Ludlow and Elrod has afforded us a material saving in time and money."

Benson & Gamble and Johnson, Read & Co. Merge in Chicago—World Wide Buys Finch Agency—Former M. E. Starts Buffalo Advertising Firm

CONSOLIDATION of Benson & Gamble and Johnson, Read & Co., both Chicago advertising agencies, was announced this week. The merged firm will be known as Benson, Gamble, Johnson & Read. Headquarters are at 222 West Adams street, Chicago. Partners are John Benson, Thomas S. Gamble, Carl P. Johnson and George H. Read.

Mr. Benson is past president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and chairman of its finance committee. Mr. Johnson is the Chicago advertising agency representative in Rotary International. Arthur T. Lewis, head of the plan and copy department, served in that capacity for ten years with Johnson, Read & Co. and conducted the course in advertising copy at Northwestern University.

Clients of the newly consolidated agency include the Book House for Children, Conover Dishwashing Machine, Finnell System, Inc.; Halsey-Stuart & Co., Harper & Kirschten Shoe Company, Herrick Refrigerator Company, Jenny Wren Company, Little Corporal Company, National Association of Ice Industries, Northern Trust Company, Peck & Hills Furniture Company, Pfanstiehl Radio Company, W. F. Quarrie & Co., John Rudin & Co. and John Sexton & Co.

World Wide Advertising Corporation, New York, has absorbed the L. J. Finch Agency, also of New York. Mr. Finch has joined the World Wide staff in an executive capacity.

C. R. De Bevoise, formerly of the Charles R. De Bevoise Company, has joined the staff of the Paul Cornell Company, Inc., New York.

David S. Taylor, who resigned as managing editor of the Buffalo Courier after having been with the Conners' publications for 25 years, is one of the organizers of the new Taylor-Preston Advertising Corporation, which will do a general publishing, research and advertising business, with principal offices at Buffalo. ANNOUNCE THE APPOINTMENT OF

THE JOHN BUDD COMPANY

NATIONAL ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES

Effective August First, 1927

Why Intertype Ideal News Face Stereotypes Better

[1] Because the hairlines and serifs have been thickened. Less chance of breaking down and smudging.

[2] Because the side walls of the matrices are of normal strength—not weakened by too-close spacing between the letters.

[3] Because certain letters have been opened up as compared with older news faces.

The Intertype Ideal News Series will give you better stereotyping, greater legibility, and larger word count. Made with wide combination teeth, which make all matrices hang straight in the transfers and in the distributor, thus insuring better distribution, longer wear.

Send for illustrated broadside containing full-size newspaper specimens of the Intertype Ideal News Series.

Intertype matrices will run in other slug-casting machines

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Dempsey and Mencke Merge and New Feature Results—Ullman Issues Review on U. S. Road Construction—Cartoonist Smith Leaves NEA Service, Inc.

DORMAN H. SMITH, for the last six and a half years cartoonist for NEA Service, Inc., is now a cartoonist for the New York American.

DORMAN H. SMITH

When his contract with NEA expired June 20, he severed his connections with that organization, assuming his new duties on the American immediately.

On NEA he has been succeeded by Don Wooton. Mr. Smith joined the artists' staff of NEA after experience on the old Des Moines News.

His cartoons have been widely reproduced in American and foreign reviews.

Frank Mencke, widely known sports writer, is at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., "ghosting" for William Harrison Dempsey, the ex-heavyweight champion who this week was knocking out unknown middleweights for the benefit of enthusiastic sports correspondents visiting his training camp. Daily articles by Mencke, under the by-line of Dempsey, are being offered by King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York.

A review of the road construction program under way for the National Parks of the United States has been written by William Ullman, editor of the Ullman Feature Service, Washington, D. C.

On the theory that men need a "big brother" just as Dorothy Dix is the "big sister" of troubled and perplexed women, Addington Bruce has been chosen by the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia, to conduct a daily question box feature.

Arthur J. Palmer, former associate of Thomas A. Edison, is writing the inventor's authorized life story for King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York. Frank Kuchenmeister is drawing the illustrations.

Herman E. Mootz is author of "Pawnee Bill," a frontier days' story being offered by the Graphic Syndicate, New York.

J. V. Connolly of the King Features Syndicate board of management, has returned to work after several weeks illness.

Leslie Fulenwider, president, and W. L. Wardell, vice-president in charge of sales for Famous Features Syndicate, New York, sailed on the Mauretania Wednesday for a business trip to London and Paris.

V. V. McNitt, president of the McNaught Syndicate and the Central Press Association, was in Cleveland this week taking over control of Editors' Feature Service and Johnson Features, Inc., the syndicates he acquired recently.

King Features Syndicate has purchased the serial rights to "Where's Emily," by Carolyn Wells.

Rube Goldberg, celebrated his 44th birthday in Paris with a party on July 4. His syndicate, McNaught, cabled him congratulations.

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

Frank Harwood Made Director of American Tobacco Company—Germany Taking Up American Advertising Methods—One Advertiser Cannot Keep Another Out of a Medium, Court Rules

FRANK HARWOOD, for the last six years advertising director of the American Tobacco Company, was this week appointed a member of the board of directors of that firm.

FRANK HARWOOD

Mr. Harwood is widely known in advertising circles. He is a member of the board of the Audit Bureau of Circulations and only recently resigned after several years' service as vice-president of the Advertising Club of New York. Before becoming associated with the American Tobacco Company, Mr. Harwood was for 12 years with the General Cigar Company, starting work for this concern and working up to the position of advertising manager.

The American Tobacco Company is one of the country's biggest users of newspaper space. Campaigns for many of its brands appear in the dailies. The biggest campaign now under way is that of Lucky Strike, copy in which is appearing in a list of some 700 papers.

American advertising methods are being used in Germany with notable success, particularly in the newer industries, according to Wilhelm Ohlhaver, advertising manager for the Revalo wheat-coffee factories of Hamburg, who is in Chicago studying merchandising and publicity.

"We are using American methods and have demonstrated our product in northern Germany," Mr. Ohlhaver declared, "and have tripled our output in a year.

"We increased our capacity from 70,000 pounds of wheat-coffee to 300,000 pounds. Now we find that by adopting American factory methods we can manufacture a million pounds a day with the same number of employes we now have, because of greater efficiency."

Mr. Ohlhaver is negotiating for the sale of the American manufacturing rights to an American firm, since it is difficult to export the German product, which is made of American wheat.

One advertiser cannot order another advertiser out of the same medium, it was ruled in a New York court this week, when Supreme Court Justice Ingraham granted the application of the Sanka Coffee Corporation for an injunction restraining the Broadway Subway Advertising Company from removing its advertising cards from subway cars.

The court said the defendant gave no reason why it alleged the Sanka cards were objectionable, except that another advertiser "protested against the continued display of plaintiff's cards." The court directed the redisplay of the cards already removed.

The Sanka Company is also suing for $1,000,000 damages, alleging that the defendant removed its cards and broke the contract with the plaintiff because of the influence of another advertiser.

S. E. Conybeare, president of the Association of National Advertisers, and Arthur H. Ogle, secertary-treasurer, will address the annual convention of the American Photo-Engravers' Association in Washington July 14-16.

Norman E. Olds, advertising ma of the Perfection Stove Company been appointed a director of the As tion of National Advertisers, succe P. B. Zimmerman of the General E Company, resigned.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Jane Eads Writes Story Flying from Chicago to San Francisco—Edith Abbott Elected Theta Sigma Phi Secretary—Change on Albany Times-Union

MISS JANE EADS, a Chicago Herald and Examiner reporter, was the first passenger to undertake the flight in the first plane in the Chicago-San Francisco passenger and air-mail line, a contract service operated by the Boeing Air Transport Company. In making her hop, Miss Eads transferred three times. She wrote the hour-by-hour narrative of her journey for the Herald and Examiner while lounging in the passenger cabin en route.

Juanita Hooper of Asher, Okla joined the staff of the Shawnee (Morning News as a reporter.

Marjorie Lawrence, formerly tician for the Illinois State Depa of Labor, has joined the Business vey of the Chicago Tribune as as to R. D. Cahn, editor of the "C Tribune Survey."

CHICAGO GROUP ON FLIGHT

Staff Members of Herald and Examiner Go by Air to Madison, Wis.

Several members of the staff of the Chicago Herald and Examiner were included in a party which this week flew from Chicago to Madison, Wis., and back in the giant air cruiser Stanolind, owned by the Standard Oil Company. The party took off from the airport at Lansing, Ill., on the outskirts of Chicago, and flew to Madison, 175 miles away, in 85 minutes. They were greeted by several hundred persons, including A. M. Brayton, publisher of the Wisconsin State Journal, and were guests at luncheon, after which they started back to Chicago.

Those in the party were: James W. Irwin, day city editor, Herald and Examiner; David Mann, photographer; E. N. Quinn, president of the Madison Airways, Inc.; Paul F. Irwin, of Madison, father of James W. Irwin; Earl Avkroid, Herald and Examiner reporter; Mrs. Paul F. Irwin, of Madison; Mrs. G. A. Who said New England was losing out?

Diminish the thought that New England is slipping. These facts and figures tell the true story of New Engand's continued growth and expansion.

The latest available census figures disclose an increase of $4,759,627,465 or 286% for the last quarter century. Actual increase reduced to value of the dollar at beginning of comparative period is 155%.

Increase in annual wages, $1,105,315,000 or 301%; reduced to original value of the dollar, 165%.

Increase in number of industrial employees—47%.

These facts should convince even the most skeptical that this territory will not only continue to hold its own in industrial leadership, but will always rank among the first as a highly profitable market for nationally advertised products.

Remember, you have a small compact area, densely populated by a class of people whose earning power has increased 165% during the past decade. Where then can you concentrate your advertising effort on a more desirable and more profitable market?

ROTOGRAVURE ASSOCIATION IS FORMED AT DENVER I. A. A. CONVENTION

Walton Holmes, Jr., Named to Head Group of Forty Which Plans National Organization—Would Serve as Clearing House for Ideas

PRELIMINARY steps looking towards the forming of a national association of rotogravure men were taken at a breakfast at the Cosmopolitan Hotel, Denver, June 28, during the annual convention of the International Advertising Association.

Forty men and women, delegates to the I. A. A. interested in rotogravure, attended the breakfast as guests of the Denver Rocky Mountain News. The gathering had been arranged through the efforts of Walton Holmes, Jr., rotogravure manager, and J. Howard Alexander, promotion manager, of the Rocky Mountain News.

After preliminaries consisting of a true western breakfast of cantaloupe, oatmeal, scrambled eggs, bacon and coffee, the delegates "got down to brass tacks" with a discussion of roto problems that proved interesting and beneficial.

Will Haskell, of the New York Herald Tribune, described a new process in the preparation of the brass cylinders used on roto presses, which he predicted would at some future date make roto as easily handled as black and white.

E. M. Claypool of the Kimberly-Clark Rotogravure Company, gave an interesting resumé of the roto situation, which, with the figures he quoted, was a very optimistic forecast for the future of this feature of Sunday newspapers.

Walton Holmes welcomed the visitors in behalf of the Rocky Mountain News and outlined the purpose of the meeting. He emphasized the need of an organization of roto men and women; an organization which would serve as a clearing house for ideas and information of benefit to the men and women who are selling roto space, preparing copy and printing rotogravure sections.

His plan for an organization of this sort was indorsed by several speakers, including Leland Wooters of the Des Moines Register; Will Haskell, New York Herald Tribune; L. M. Barton, Chicago Daily News; George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and O. F. Wiley of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

It was felt that the best thing to do at this stage was to form a temporary organization which would work out plans which delegates hoped would develop an association that could seek affiliation with the I. A. A. This thought was put in the form of a motion and unanimously that the nominations be declared closed. His motion carried, Will Haskell and George M. Burbach were nominated as secretary-treasurer in turn, but both declined, pleading extended trips away from their offices during the ensuing year. L. B. Barton of the Chicago Daily News then nominated J. H. Alexander, and the election was ended.

The meeting closed with an understanding that a second meeting would be called early in January in some centrally located city, probably Chicago or St. Louis.

Those who attended the breakfast were: Leland Wooters, Des Moines Register; E. M. Claypool, Kimberly-Clark Rotogravure Company; Will Haskell, new York Herald Tribune; John F. McConnell, Indianapolis Star; L. B. Barton, Chicago Daily News; George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; O. S. Wespe, Louisville Courier Journal and Times; O. F. Wiley, Cincinnati Enquirer; Paul Gasser, Phoenix Republican; L. M. Hughes, New York Evening Post; P. M. Hughes, Minneapolis Tribune.

A. E. Vincent, Minneapolis Journal; O. B. Myers, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican; Henry J. Moehlman, Baltimore Sun; Frank L. Tate, Toronto Daily Star, Toronto Star Weekly; Hildegarde Glover, Milwaukee Journal; F. P. Clatworthy, Estes Park; John H. Clyne, New Haven Journal-Courier; Earl M. Dempsey, St. Paul Dispatch; Early H. Maloney, Peoria Journal-Transcript; J. T. Barrons, Kansas City Star; J. S. and J. Richards, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; J. C. Gamble, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; Alma Reise Joseph, New York Morning Telegraph; Kenneth Gayce, Nashville Banner; Martin Clark, Nashville Banner; F. L. Galle, Wichita Eagle; Walton Holmes, Jr., John C. Ross, Lowell L. Leake and J. H. Alexander, Denver Rocky Mountain News.

COAST DAILY CHANGES HANDS

Luther E. Gibson and Capt. Leonard M. Cox, U. S. N., retired, have purchased the Vallejo (Cal.) Chronicle, an afternoon daily, from R. D. Pennycook. Mr. Gibson is also owner of the Vallejo (Cal.) Times Herald, a morning paper.

GRAPHIC ARTS EXHIBIT

Publishers, printers and advertisers are now submitting entries for the fourth annual Educational Graphic Arts Exposition, which will be held in the Grand Central Palace, Sept. 5 to 17. The entries must reach the committee in charge at 461 Eighth ave., New York, by Aug. 1. Work to be shown will include advertising typography, books and bookbinding, commercial printing, design and illustration, process and color work offset, lithographic printing, and rotogravure.

LEE SUCCEEDS MAUGER

Named National Manager of Des Moines Register and Tribune-Capital

Hugh B. Lee, for the past four years assistant national advertising manager of the Des Moines (Ia.) Register and Tribune-Capital, has been named national advertising manager, to succeed Martin M. Mauger, who has resigned to join the Minneapolis Tribune Aug. 1, as head of the national department.

HUGH B. LEE

Mr. Mauger had been with the Des Moines dailies for several years, working with manufacturers' representatives and advertising agencies in promoting sales campaigns in the city. Mr. Lee came to Des Moines from the Fort Dodge Messenger, where he served as advertising manager.

Don Whitmer succeeds Lee as assistant national manager. He has been with the Register and Tribune-Capital national advertising staff for several years.

The promotions were announced by Harry T. Watts, business manager, this week.

NEWS MAN IS KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

Capt. Curtis Wheeler of N. Y. Herald Tribune Served in War and Received Several Medals for Bravery—Companion Also Killed

Capt. Curtis Wheeler, 36, associate editor of the New York Herald Tribune Sunday section, was killed instantly Wednesday when the Curtis NJ-4 plane in which he and Lieut. Carl J. Sack, chemical engineer for the Pennsylvania Railroad, were flying crashed on Pine Plains during an observation flight. Lieut. Sack was also killed. Both were in summer training as members of the New York National Guard.

Engine failure or jammed controls are believed responsible for the accident, as the machine was so completely wrecked that inspection of broken parts revealed little. No one saw the plane fall.

Capt. Wheeler was graduated from Yale in the class of 1912. His father, Dr. Edward J. Wheeler, was formerly editor of World's Work and founded Literary Digest. Capt. Wheeler served in the field artillery on the Mexican border in 1915 and was transferred to the aviation service in 1917. He served with the Air Corps in France, brought down five German planes and won the Distinguished Service Cross, the Croix de Guerre and the Belgian Order of Leopold.

Capt. Wheeler joined the Sunday section of the Herald Tribune last October. Previous to that he was assistant editor of Everybody's Magazine, and had been at one time associate editor of the Literary Digest. He was the author of "Letters from an American Soldier to His Father," published after the war. He had spent four years in Chicago as Western manager for Current Opinion, returning to New York in 1916 to take the position of assistant general manager of the Current Literature Publishing Company.

Capt. Wheeler was born at Staten Island in 1891. He was not married.

Several members of the Herald Tribune staff served as honorary pall bearers in the funeral services held Friday morning at 7:30 at Pine Camp. He will be buried with full military honors.

NEW LONG ISLAND DAILY

The Lynbrook (L. I.) Daily Pilot will start publication about Aug. 1, according to present plans of the Huntover Press, publishers of several Long Island weeklies, including the Lynbrook New Era. The New Era will be continued as a weekly. Owners of the Huntover Press are E. J. Smith and Lloyd C. Grisco.

MIDWEST GROUP VISITS WINNIPEG

Newspaper men from the Middle West meet Canadian journalists at Winnipeg. Upper row (left to right) A. L. Sloan, Chicago American; Jeff Jones, Minneapolis Journal; Fred Logan, Chicago Journal; J. H. Todd, Minneapolis Tribune; E. C. Norlander, Chicago News; M. Turnbull, Minneapolis Star; S. A. A PRESS meeting of an informal character took place at Winnipeg last week when a number of newspaper men from Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth met with working newspaper men from several Canadian cities. A contingent from Ontario cities met the Americans at Winnipeg and traveled with them to Minaki, a summer resort in Western Ontario, for a two-day visit. While in Canada the U. S. writers and editors were the guests of Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways.

The American contingent traveled in a special car from Duluth to Winnipeg. There they were the guests of the Winnipeg Press club at luncheon and later were taken for a drive around the city. At the luncheon brief addresses were made by representatives of the American and Canadian parties.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Big Men Needed in Classified, Says Harry Gwaltney, Milwaukee Journal —Fenner Joins Des Moines Register and Tribune— Harrison with 'Frisco Chronicle

"WHAT Classified Advertising Needs Most," declared Harry Gwaltney, of the Milwaukee Journal in a talk last week before the Denver convention of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers, "is a realization of its possibilities."

"The utility of classified is limited only by the utility of man. The limit of its possible service is measured only by the dependence of men upon their fellowmen. Its usefulness is as broad as the varying needs of our people. As a business proposition, we have no idea of its bigness, and its proper development is a direct challenge, not to the classified worker alone, but to the best advertising brains of the nation.

"Classified, however, has not attracted the brilliant minds. It needs big men. It needs some Woolworth's men who can see fortunes in five and ten cent sales. It needs architects—men who can build great structures out of small brick. It needs men who can conceive the needs of the millions and who realize that whatever 'one man wants another man has, and what one man has another man wants,' and who can sell the idea that classified is the medium through which to deliver the message to Garcia.

"National advertisers can reach more people per dollar through classified advertising than in any other way in the world. That is not a supposition or a theorem! It is a fact that for a dollar 'Crisco' can be placed before the eyes of more women who will fry eggs for breakfast tomorrow morning, through classified than in any other way."

H. D. Fenner has joined the credit department of the Des Moines (Ia.) Register and Tribune as classified credit manager.

For the last two years Mr. Fenner has been assistant credit manager of the Standard Oil company. Prior to locating in Des Moines he was cashier of the bank at Union, Ia., for six years.

H. J. Harrison who has for the past seven months been with the Sacramento Union classified department, has been named classified manager of the San Francisco Chronicle, it was announced this week.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

PLAYFUL MR. MENCKEN

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER:—I have been reading my copy of the current EDITOR & PUBLISHER today and, when I progressed to the editorial page, read each editorial in the order of its presentation on the page. Every one was for me a distinct pleasure. On the spur of the moment I determined to tell you how fine I found that editorial page this week. I always find things of interest there, but this one seems exceptionally fine.

As I started to write this note I recalled Mr. Mencken's syndicated article of a week ago which perhaps you did not see. I enclose it for your amusement in case it has not been called to your attention. Very apparently Mr. Mencken does not have the pleasure of being a subscriber to EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has been of inestimable value to the journalism of the United States. Particularly in the last few years it has been a forceful critic and intelligent adviser. By its publication of honest criticism from within and without the profession, by wise editorial comment and original research, it has been a constant force for higher standards, better papers, and the discouragement of unsound business procedure.

If you have read Mencken's rollicking diatribes at all regularly you know that they cannot be taken too seriously.

His style of writing requires a playful sacrifice of the judicial qualities of mind and the ignoring of any facts which interfere with freedom of denunciation in ringing generalities. So do not lose heart. A humorist of the Mencken school cannot be bothered with facts.

GEORGE B. ARMSTEAD,

OUR "GOOEY" FLAVOR

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER:—Mencken's allusion to the disgusting regularity of newspaper journals, in his Hiring a Hall column last Sunday, strikes a responsive chord in the soul of every intelligent newspaper man who knows the gooey flavor of your publication. I suppose that while E. & P. continues, first, as a medium for the numerical blahs of publishers, readers may look for little from it in the way of critical truth or the character it needs to tell it. Those whose mental stomachs can't stand your diet of glucose and saccharine do not, in the end, have to take it. You're sitting pretty enough. As the opulently flowered button-hole makers now ensconced in Hollywood say, "Those who go to the movies don't criticize; those who criticize don't go." Your story on the Miami disaster, a few numbers after the hurricane, was an especially sad piece of Brass Checking. With a few other observers in the newspaper business, I shall watch your progress along the trail of the gentlemen from Zenith with interest. Speculation upon your attitude, when the point of de tion to which that befezed path mus is reached, makes a fair thought.

CHINESE SUBS

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER:—Wha worth to advertisers are the major subscribers obtained through con was the question that arose in my when the other day I overheard a g a "salesmanship contest" for a Vi weekly tell the campaign manager she hoped to land a Chinese for subscriptions. "Do it and you wil tainly win the bonus prize for this w he exclaimed, and then added to stander: "I can't imagine what he do with the papers. He cannot read lish, but his three subscriptions wil tainly help her in the contest."

Personal, immediate monetary gai pears to be the manager's and the man's" deepest interest. Financial o tion placed on the publisher to furnis paper for a given number of year the non-benefit to an advertiser of u cated non-reading subscribers recei consideration. What's your though

ALLEN RANDALL, 48 formerly managing editor of the Brockton (Mass.) Times and prior to that city editor of the same paper died at his home in Brockton recently from heart disease. At the time of his death he was advertising agent for a firm in Chicago, and just before taking that position he was managing editor of the Fall River (Mass.) Herald.

OREN HUCKABY, 23, a member of the stereotyping force of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, died suddenly last Tuesday after he had hit a home run in baseball game. As he started to sit down, he fell and was dead before a physician could be called.

LFRED H. COLLINS, founder of the Macedonia (N. Y.) Advertiser, died July at his home in that village after a long illness. Mr. Collins founded the Advertiser in 1878, continuing its publication under that name until 1920 when the newspaper was merged with the Herald of the same village under the name Advertiser-Era, Mr. Collins and R. A. Fee becoming the editors and publishers. They disposed of their interests to Gordon L. King in 1926 when Mr. Collins retired.

UGH A. SUTHERLAND, 74, the oldest printer in Beaver county, died at his home in Rochester, Pa., on June 26 after a long illness. In early life he learned the printing trade and was connected both as reporter and printer in the Beaver Argus and the Beaver Valley News at New Brighton. Later he started a printing shop which he operated until 7 years ago when he retired.

JACOB SHALLENBERGER, 78, a veteran newspaper man died at his home at Youngstown, O., on June 24. He was employed by the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times for 21 years and by the Youngstown Telegram for six years, retiring 7 years ago.

An inventory filed at Elizabeth, N. J., today, of the personal estate of the late Charles Hamilton Frost, for many years publisher of the Plainfield Courier-News, places the total value at $1,263,213. Shares of the newspaper, numbering 3,900, which since his death were sold to the Sennett Newspapers, are valued at $1,-950,015. Other securities are valued at $313,000.

The estate is placed in trust by the will, one-half of the income being payable to the widow, Mrs. Charles W. Frost, and the other half divided equally between his daughters, Mrs. Marian L. Williard and Mrs. Frances D. Dods.

JOHN MARKEY

Widely Known Canadian Editor Dies Following Operation

John Markey, 61, editor-in-chief of the Woodstock (Ont.) Sentinel-Review and one of Canada's outstanding editorial writers, died Wednesday, June 27, in a Battle Creek hospital, following an operation performed Tuesday.

In 1886 he came to Woodstock to join the staff of the Sentinel-Review and had served that paper almost continuously since. For a brief period he was with the Detroit News and the Toronto World. He was editor-in-chief of the Sentinel-Review for more than 20 years.

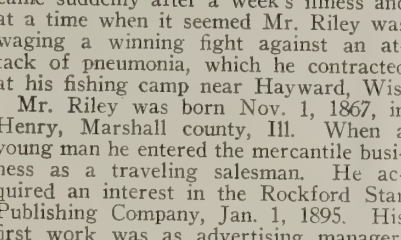
JOHN VICTOR RILEY

Part Owner of Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star Dies at 59

John Victor Riley, 59, for 31 years one of the owners of the Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star, its advertising manager 20 years and since 1915 its managing editor, died July 2 at his home. Death came suddenly after a week's illness and at a time when it seemed Mr. Riley was waging a winning fight against an attack of pneumonia, which he contracted at his fishing camp near Hayward, Wis.

Mr. Riley was born Nov. 1, 1867, in Henry, Marshall county, Ill. When a young man he entered the mercantile business as a traveling salesman. He acquired an interest in the Rockford Star Publishing Company, Jan. 1, 1895. His first work was as advertising manager. Upon the death of Col. J. S. Browne, editor of the paper in 1915, he became managing editor.



CURTIS STOCK OFFERED

14,000 Shares of Cumulative $7 Preferred on Market

J. A. Sisto & Co. and the Old Colony Corporation this week offered 14,000 shares of cumulative dividend preferred stock, no par value, of the Curtis Publishing Company, publishers of the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentleman.

The offering price is $114 a share, carrying dividend from July 1, 1927, to yield about 6.14 per cent. The shares were purchased privately and do not represent new financing.

The capitalization of the Curtis Publishing Company consists of 900,000 shares of $7 cumulative dividend preferred stock of no par value and 900,000 shares of common stock without par value. The company has no funded or other debt except current monthly accounts. Among its assets at the close of 1926 were $27,000,000 in cash, United States Government bonds and other investments.

Knoxville Also Makes It Imperial!

WHETHER it's the Governor's latest speech, recent news of "Lindy" or any other item of current interest, citizens of Knoxville know they'll find the story well handled in the News-Sentinel and the Journal. These two up-to-the-minute papers are excellently adapted to a beautiful and progressive southern city.

While the News-Sentinel and the Journal are serving the capital city, Imperial, in its turn, is serving the publishers with reliable type metal, cared for by the economical Plus Plan. It's safe to say these shops will be using the same good supply of metal, years from now. Adding years of working life is the advantage of the Plus Plan. It's one reason Imperial service is used by thousands of other leading newspapers.

RICH REWARDS IN HOLDING PUBLIC FAITH

functions perfectly as a single unit, any kind of advertising can only scratch the surface of possibilities.

"In our own operations, we do not attempt to compete with other stores in the size of our advertisements. We are content to lead them, if we can, in the kind of values we talk about in each newspaper column inch we use.

"Stores holding sales all the time need to advertise daily, for with them each day brings a new price appeal. Generally speaking, we advertise twice a week, as we regard one comparatively small advertisement appearing in a given newspaper on the same days of the week, in every week of the year, worth more in cumulative value than a large, hit-or-miss advertisement run now and then in the hope of getting some 'extra business.'

"It is not logical to expect readers of newspapers to hunt for a merchant's advertisement, as of course they must if there is no schedule of specific insertion days. We endeavor to educate the reader that our advertisements can always be found in the newspaper on a certain specific day, or days, and not on other days. This avoids disappointment and builds confidence in our selling program.

"While systematic insertions are extremely important, they are not more so than making each advertisement convey a timely and readable news message of seasonal, wanted merchandise, a message that rings true, carries conviction, builds confidence and creates desire and action.

"The appearance or typographical display used by our 885 stores in their newspaper advertisements has become as much of a national trademark with us as our name-cut or the sign over our door. We regard the standardization of the mechanics of advertising by any individual store, as necessary to doing a good job. It identifies the merchant's message the moment the reader turns the page. If the message itself is invariably snappy, newsy, fresh, truthful and timely—and no merchant can afford to have his message other than that—it helps to get it across.

"We endeavor to teach our managers the fundamentals of advertising layout so that they can at least do a job that the printer will understand, and so that they will get the best results out of the space used. It may interest you to realize that this teaching is not as simple as it sounds. Our managers are scattered over 885 cities and towns, from Maine to California. I meet them once a year, in convention, and in the brief space of two or three days such counsel, advice and instruction as I have to give them, must be conveyed. In addition, we have prepared for our stores, advertising instruction: a series of lessons which every male employe is expected to work out and by which he becomes more or less familiar with the simpler fundamentals of copy-writing and layouts.

"Each store has an advertising allotment which guides the manager in planning his local campaign. Advertising expenditures, as shown by his monthly trial balance sheet, are checked against the store's allotment and further expenditures adjusted to it if deemed advisable.

"You will appreciate that we keep close tabs on our advertising, leaving as little as possible to 'guess.'

"The best advertising work of our organization dates from Jan. 1, 1926. More thought, planning and better execution is being put into the job and the results have been extremely gratifying. While the percentage cost of our advertising to our gross sales has varied but a small fraction from year to year, our sales in 1926 increased 27 per cent. From Jan. 1 to June 1 of this year, we made a sales gain of nearly 31 per cent. This year's gain we regard as rather remarkable, considering weather conditions and a tendency on the part of many people to find that times are not as good as they were.

"A point that every publisher would do well to emphasize to the retail merchant is the importance to the merchant's selling program of a definite tie-up with nationally advertised merchandise. Of course, he must be posted in advance by the national advertiser on publications and insertion dates, so that he can plan ahead for his local advertising and displays.

"This brings me to a point upon which I should like to ask your co-operation. Strange as it may seem, some publishers often make it difficult for a merchant to use his space profitably. Of course, this reacts unfavorably against both. I refer to the fixed space contract. We regard it as a serious handicap to a good merchandising and selling job, for the reason that the news importance of a given advertisement must depend on several things: weather conditions, seasons, holidays, arrival of new stock and the general preparedness of the store to support the advertisement.

"All these things call for a variation in the amount of space used and, unless compelled to do so by the rate card, we never use the same size of advertisement week after week. Instead we use the number of column inches, whether 12 inches double column or a full page, as required attractively to convey the particular merchandise message we desire to send to the public.

"When a merchant cannot buy newspaper space just as he buys merchandise, so that he can handle it at a profit, he is unable to do a good job, either for himself or for the publisher. We heartily endorse a flat rate for large and small advertisers, come and go at will. But in order that the publisher may determine his labor requirements, the advertiser should furnish a schedule of his insertion days and a tentative average of lines or column inches, month by month.

"We tell the people through our advertisements that they do not need to respond today, tomorrow or any particular day to our message, but that they can come at any time. Our merchandise and our prices will be the same next week, or next month as today.

"Neither price, quality, style nor service is the outstanding feature of our storekeeping, but all these factors sold collectively and inventoried as 'good-will reserve.' Good will and confidence in our operations are to us what comparative prices are to other stores, the basis by which we wish people to judge our values. We use thousands of columns of space for institutional or good-will advertising with very satisfactory results."

"IT'S BUNK," SAYS F. P. A. OF "GOOD OLD DAYS"

Acid Test Is to Look Over Papers of Quarter Century Ago, Says N. Y. World Columnist Answering Mencken's "Holler"

When the gag is pulled about the "good old reporters in the good old days" just classify it as bunk was the advice this week of Franklin P. Adams, who, from his perch on "The Conning Tower," column in the New York World, frequently criticizes newspapers and newspaper men.

The latest man to wag his hoary head and mourn the dear departed past was H. L. Mencken, the Baltimore politician and former newspaper man, and F.P.A. was answering Henry when he said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"I know the good old days as well as he does, and I know that there is better stuff being written in newspapers today than there ever was.

"One trouble with Mr. Mencken is that you can't hear him some of the time, he yells so loud."

On the fingers of one hand the Aged Bard recalled a few of the "good old reporters of the good old days." There was Samuel Hopkins Adams; Will Irwin, who, said F.P.A., "wrote news stories like a breeze"; Irvin S. Cobb, Ed Hill; and the columnist's own boss, Herbert Bayard Swope, executive editor of the World, who "got to know everybody and got the news and also gave ideas to the city editor."

"If you talk to any of these fellows they will tell you that they really were not super-reporters," F.P.A. continued, stroking his black mustache. "They will say that the really good reporters are still on the job pounding out really good news stories. Such a man, they will say, as Lindsey Denison, a reporter on the New York Evening World.

"The real test of the good old days is to go to the morgue of any new and read over the stale, embalme of yesterday's reporters."

Mr. Adams was asked to critici ent day newspapers practices, an paper practices, but declines the j "I write my criticisms in my c said he.

BROADCASTS 42 HOURS

ston Herald-Traveler Radioed Byrd Bulletins Every Half Hour

Broadcast of half-hour bulletins over NAC, Boston, by members of the Bos-n Herald and Traveler news staff for 4 hours during the flight of Commander rd and his companions last week tablished a record for continuous broad-sting in Boston and probably New Eng-nd.

The first bulletin to go on the air was gen at 10:45 a. m., June 29, followed b half-hour bulletins throughout the ht, the next day and the next night, cluding the following morning, when word of the fliers' landing at Ver-Sur-Mer, France, was received.

John Shepard, 3d, of the Shepard Stores, Boston, owner of the station, made the broadcast possible.

Among those who received news of the progress of the flight was Mrs. Byrd, wife of the commander, who sat through most of the continual broadcast of the flight before her radio in her Boston home.

COOPERATIVE GROCERY DRIVE IN SEATTLE

200 Stores Fighting Chain Competition with $30,000 Budget for Institutional Copy Exclusively in Newspapers

To ward off further invasion by the chain stores, two hundred Seattle grocers have formed a cooperative group and will spend $30,000 this year in advertising in the dailies of the city.

The grocers have chosen the slogan, "All Over Seattle, All for Seattle," and have adopted an identifying emblem containing a Greek triangle symbolizing grocery virtues: "Quality, Economy, Service."

The idea of neighborliness, friendliness of personal and delivery service is stressed in the campaign, which has been turned over by the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association to the Western Agency, Inc., and which is said to be the largest single food campaign in the city, as well as the large cooperative movement of independent grocers in the United States.

The campaign is strictly institutional. One-half page is the smallest amount of newspaper space being used, and newspaper space is the only medium that has been chosen for this campaign. The movement is financially backed and assisted by a large number of the wholesalers and food jobbers of Seattle, as well as the food manufacturers themselves.

BENNETT HOME SOLD

The historic Brooklyn home of the late George C. Bennett, founder of the Brooklyn Times, was auctioned off on Thursday, June 30, for $650,000. Bennett de Beixedon, grandson of the original owner, was the highest bidder.

CO-OPERATIVE PAGES IN UTICA

Stores Take Paid Space to Tell Saturday Closing Hours

Stores in Utica, N. Y., which will remain open on Saturday afternoons all summer recently took a co-operative page in the Utica Observer-Dispatch and the Press to tell that fact to the public.

The Observer-Dispatch had a full-page signed by 33 merchants, while the Press ran a double truck containing 64 boxes, each box carrying the name, address and line of business of the advertiser. Then the merchants who were going to close Saturday afternoons demanded some recognition. The Press carried a page for these firms signed by 25 firms and the Obeserver-Dispatch had six full columns signed by 21 firms.

"A Notable Example of Service"

"While to you this is an old story, we cannot refrain from expressing our appreciation of the particularly efficient service which you maintain for the users of your machines.

"A notable example of this service has recently come to our attention. On Thursday afternoon of this week we discovered that we needed at once a 7 point right hand liner. At 2.30 that afternoon we sent to the factory a telegram ordering the liner, and on Friday night at 5:30, in almost 24 hours, that liner was in town! How could service between New York City and Central Maine be any better than that?

"And what should not be overlooked in this connection is this fact: We were not the "Boston Herald," perchance, placing a large emergency order and by our prestige and the volume of business done with your company commanding respect and attention; we were simply a country newspaper up in Maine, sending in a very small order, but one, nevertheless, peculiarly important to us at that time, and receiving exactly the same attention as would the largest newspaper in the country."

OHIO'S GREATEST HOME DAILY

By MARLEN PEW

IN his syndicated newspaper column H. L. Mencken turns his attention to journalism's need of alert and competent criticism, saying that whereas lawyers and doctors have trade journals that are always sharply critical of professional practices journalism has only trade papers, EDITOR & PUBLISHER being one, which are "filled with mushy and feeble stuff, most of them indistinguishable from the bilge emitted by Rotary and Kiwanis." Some time ago, says Mr. Mencken, he stopped reading journalism trade papers. This was probably years ago. He is therefore prepared to discuss without encumbrances those that are now being published, and he does it with his usual rush of epithets and generalities.

WE shall not quarrel with Mr. Mencken on the proposition that journalism in America requires, for its health and development, intelligent criticism. For our part in the scheme, criticism is nothing that we shrink from. If our stuff is feeble and mushy we would lack good sense to resent being informed of the fact, as we have normal ambition to get on. We shall now spruce up a bit and get onto the job. Of course, we would prefer to have the criticism come from someone who reads our paper and would find specific rather than general fault. But even Mr. Mencken's thrust in the dark is not unwelcome. Mr. Mencken's often expressed view of American journalism is that it is dead, body and soul, because the spirit has been whipped out of the old-time reporter. Speed and greed are all that is left. The newspapers did a rotten job in reporting the Miami hurricane, proprietors take orders from Wall Street and the stuff that was cabled to America from Paris on the Lindbergh flight was "puerile slush." The news from China and Russia is all faked. Washington correspondents are all imbeciles. There is nothing left for an honest and capable newspaper man to do except go into the press agent business. So says Mr. Mencken, naively adding that when he was in the newspaper business, prior to his career in the magazine trade, journalism in America was quite all right, reporters and editors knew something and were honest to the last penny. The man rattles on, making copy by the yard and newspapers print it and pay more for it in a single week, no doubt, than The American Mercury earns in a year. Mr. Mencken, to be fair, might at least admit that his syndicated newspaper column is good stuff, honest, decent and intelligent. Surely the newspapers that print it are not wholly in "decay."

A FAIR proposition, we think, would be to look into American Mercury for the secret of Mr. Mencken's ideal journalism. He is the editor of it and has a rich and care-free book publisher to back him up. What does he do with the tools of the trade in the way of expressing great truths which shall set us free? Will he thank us for a little candid criticism of his own brand of stuff? We have read the contents of his Paris-green covers, and however feeble-minded he may think us nevertheless we have an opinion based on evidence. Mr. Mencken plays a very safe game in his journalism. He is the cagiest editor of the horn-blowing type the country has seen since Elbert Hubbard. His specialty is in attacking groups that cannot, or will not, fight back. His shield is the festive generality. He bawls for "freedom," but persecutes those who do not subscribe to his views. He is the least tolerant of any American writer. For simple faults he boils in oil the objects of his scorn, but carefully selects these objects. For instance, he is unwilling that in free America the Holy Rollers should roll, or the Methodists should shout, or the Baptists baptize, but he is extremely careful about ridiculing Catholics for their faith, since Catholics notoriously do not stand that sort of treatment without a kick-back. Religious freedom in this country is something that Mr. Mencken will not permit, but he was right there to demand freedom of the press when the police seized his books on Boston news-stands because they contained a story about an old prostitute that, in our opinion, was the cheapest bid any publication has made to the prurient-minded in this country in a generation.

ONE looks in vain in American Mercury for anything that is really vital even when you would think the subject was on Mr. Mencken's beat. There is no end of slurs on American customs and habits. The simple enjoyments of the plain people and the boasts of the pretentious, all very right in their way and place, are described by Mr. Mencken in about the same terms and tone that one hears at the snobbish Mrs. Frothingame's Sunday night soirees in Greenwich Village. "Those people are so damned, rotten vulgar, you know, m'dear." But if you are looking for a piece of good, red literary meat, such as a Professor Ripley expose of the latest stock-swindling device in Wall Street, or the low-down on the talk about the Pope and Al Smith, you do not find satisfaction in Mr. Mencken's magazine. Indeed, you learn to look there for nothing that required any research or investigation. It is, in the main, an elbow grease and gall product. We do not say that the American Mercury has not printed some good stuff. Some contributors have written well, when not venting their personal spite. Mr. Mencken has art, but his understanding has its limits and his product often seems shy on points that most folks call honor. By and large, his muck-raking has been cowardly, only half true and rarely directed at the great evils. He is in his element as a sharp-tongued gossip. The editor, of course, has to get a half dollar for a copy and naturally thinks he must put some "dynamite" into the publication to get that high price. But his bombs are more noisy than dangerous.

SO much fishy dope has appeared in American Mercury in recent months that some of Mr. Mencken's admirers have wondered if he had not lost his punch. The editing has been atrocious in spots, with such thin and ignorant stories in lead positions as that silly yarn concerning the A. P. which started everywhere and ended nowhere. The A. P. is always an easy mark for any able muck-raker. Mr. Mencken may possibly need one of the modern journalistic imbeciles to hold things together while he grinds his grist of words, words, words.

AMERICAN MERCURY as a radical magazine has throughout its existence been of the lightest pastel shade of pink and its editor no regular devil, at least compared with such masters of invective and such penetrating political economists and sociologists as "Bill" Reedy, Frank Harris, Gaylord Wilshire, Max Eastman, Upton Sinclair, Haldeman-Julius, Brand of Iconoclast fame and dozens of other able publicists in the field of advanced thought. To our knowledge nothing that Mencken has ever done has involved any personal sacrifice. He has never been fired, arrested, egged, framed-up in a hotel, spat upon, stoned in the street, booed, shot, kicked in the stomach, ostracized or had his notes called at the bank. Life has been both sweet and easy. If he will, for just one issue, cut out generalities and deal with the facts of life as newspaper men must face them, together with the consequences, he may come to a realization of what the journalism that he scorns means to men like Carl Magee and Don Mellett and scores more who bleed and die for causes which mean something to the people of their communities.

IN a recent number Mr. Mencken printed something which, in our opinion, is a tip-off on his journalistic integrity. It was his lead story and concerned J. Pierpont Morgan. As the practices of the House of Morgan have for 30 years been our particular antipathy we opened to this article with some excitement. The writer, we presently found, had about as much understanding of the menace in the trade of Morgan, and his father before him, as has a moron of higher mathematics. He had nothing to spill but surface small-talk and took a couple of thousand words to prove it. But he wound up his afternoon's typewriter exercise by uttering one of the most impudent libels that has ever come to our notice, in newspaper or magazine. By direct inference this writer gave the reader to understand that the insane man who shot Morgan a few years ago was deliberately done to death in a prison cell after his arrest because of Morgan's power.

WE quote from the article: "Mr. Morgan was severly injured but his usual vitality, and the high-pressure prayers of the Episcopal clergy in the New York diocese, pulled him through. Holt (the assailant) never lived to stand trial amid the hysteria of patriotic indignation following his attack on a man suddenly grown popular. He was confined in a Long Island jail and 'fell or jumped' to his death from an upper tier of cells a few days later. At any rate, he was found with a crushed skull one morning sprawled in a wide pool of blood on the concrete floor. In such fashion end the lives, oftener economic than physical, of those who dare flout a Bourbon."

OF all the weasel-worded scurrilities that we have ever seen, this takes the blue ribbon. The inference is as plain as a pikestaff that Holt did not commit suicide. The quotes do the trick. In such fashion die those who flout a Bourbon. Of course Morgan could not, or would not, sue. It was safe enough!

This writer is prepared to tell Mr. Mencken something he might have learned for himself by stirring the foot for only ten minutes. Coroner W. R. Jones' verdict was that Holt "died of a compound fracture of the skull and cerebral hemorrhage caused by leaping headlong from the cell grating to the cement floor of the jail." If the Mercury writer had evidence to the contrary he would have printed it. He was merely content to throw the acid of his hatred on a chance that the infamy would not be called.

BUT, let's have plenty of criticism in our profession, and all in good humor. It is balm for the soul and makes for better ways. Mr. Mencken thinks we are dead from the heels up and we thank him for the spur. We think that in some respects his journalism is cowardly, cheap, blatant, crooked and horribly wordy and that he is steeped in egotism and suffers from a complaint of hateful language that continues both in summer and in winter. Some day somebody with guts may shut his mouth, or at least an eye, if he fails to heed our gentle advice and reform the practice of printing any old thing that comes into his mind, whether true or false, fair or foul. That would be too bad, and we would not want to see it happen. Mr. Mencken owes us nothing for this sincere criticism and we, in turn, thank him for his draft of oxygen.

Nevertheless I wished many a time that I was on the quarter deck of a bucking broncho plunging into the crisp, fresh mountain air of the old home town."

STILL WORKING AT 80

Rockford (O.) Press Editor Has Spent 62 Years on Newspapers

DeWitt Clinton Kinder is nearing 80, but is on the job every day as editor of the Rockford Press, Rockford, O., a small town near Celina.

He is perhaps the oldest newspaper man in active service in northwestern Ohio. He has a record of 62 years in the printing and publishing business.

He was born in Franklin, O., October 9, 1847, and began his long newspaper career in Hamilton, O., January 1, 1866, in the office of the Hamilton True-Telegraph.

Kinder's independent venture was at Ladoga, Ind., where he owned and published the Ladoga Ledger. He sold this paper in June, 1883, and went to Shanes Crossing, O., and established the Free Press, which, in later years, became the Rockford Press.

PLAN $100,000 AD FUND FOR NORTHERN N. Y.

Development Association Being Organized with $100,000 Fund as Goal to Advertise Industrial Advantages

Thousands of dollars will be spent for newspaper space annually to advertise the pleasure and commercial resources of the Adirondack mountain region under a program tentatively adopted by the newly organized New York Development Association, Inc.

Several publishers in northern New York have already allied themselves with the association and virtually 100 per cent newspaper representation is expected. Among the charter members of the association are: Byron G. Seamans, editor of the Pulaski (N. Y.) Democrat; Douglas H. Callander, of the Malone Evening Telegram; Ernest C. Gould, of the Gould Publishing Company of Watertown; Edwin W. Waterbury, business manager of the Oswego Palladium-Times, and F. Dudley Corse, of the Sandy Creek News.

Formal organization of the New York Development Association was effected at a meeting at Ogdensburg last week, attended by more than 100 business leaders of northern New York. The large water power and paper mill interests are in the majority among the organizers, one of the prime movers of the association being John N. Carlisle, of the Northern Utilities Corporation and St. Regis Paper Company.

The association will create a fund of $100,000 from voluntary contributions. The major portion of this sum will be spent in advertising, principally in newspapers. The "copy" will make a special appeal to industries to locate plants in the Adirondack territory to avail themselves of the vast water-power facilities at cheap rates.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

CRADLE DAYS of the newspaper press have frequently received attention, both in books and also inmagazine articles. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has, as a matter of fact, published two articles on this topic.

The cradle days of the periodical press, however, have been overlooked, though strangely enough one would have thought that this field, which so long has lain fallow, would have been one of the first to be tilled by research students in English universities. Walter Graham, Associate Professor of English at Western Reserve University, has made a detailed study of periodical literature from 1665-1715 and has published his results in "The Beginnings of English Literary Periodicals" (The Oxford University Press).

This volume, dealing, as it does, with ephemeral and peripatetic periodicals, can best be mentioned in "Our Own World of Letters" by picking out sentences which might be suggestions for headlines in individual stories about these precursors of the modern magazine. Professor Graham divides these early periodicals into two groups—those of a learned nature and those published only for the entertainment of the reader.

The first literary periodical—and, the terms "first" and "literary" are used in a very limited sense only—to be published in England was The Mercurius Librarius which appeared in 1668. The title was unquestionably borrowed from that so frequently given to the news books, MERCURIUS. The earliest English news book, or news pamphlet, to have that word in its title was Mercurius Britannicus of which Thomas Archer was the editor. Mercurius Librarius was really a trade journal or a house organ for some twenty odd London booksellers whose productions were described under such headings as "Physick," "Divinity," "Histories," "Players," etc. Its chief interest today lies in the fact that it was the great-grandfather of the present literary periodicals of Great Britain.

In January, 1682, appeared The Weekly Memorials for the Ingenious, a small quarto of eight pages, which in modern terminology might be called a near magazine. Its contents consisted of abstracts from foreign books, translations from foreign journals and a few original articles. It soon had a competitor with the same title with the result that there was cut-throat competition in which the conductor of each weekly warned his innocent readers to beware of the counterfeit of the other publisher.

The father of the literary periodical in England may safely be said to be John Dunton, who began his Athenian Gazette on March 17, 1691. Its contents consisted chiefly of questions and answers. Associated with Dunton was Richard Sault, a teacher of mathematics, and a little later Samuel Wesley, a famous British divine better known as the father of John and Charles Wesley, who in turn were the founders of Methodism. This editorial trio met weekly for consultation over the questions to be answered in the periodical. Much of the contents consisted of answers to serious questions, but the editorial council did not lack a sense of humor as the following quotation will show:

> Question. When had angels their first existence? Answer. Who but an angel knows?
> Question. Whether a public or private courtship is better? Answer. The private is more safe and pleasant.

Other questions were:

> Where is the likeliest place to get a husband in? Whether virtue does not consist in intention? Whether Adam was a giant? Whether negroes shall rise at the last day? Where extinguished fire goes? Whither went the ten tribes?

Dunton soon changed the title, however, from The Athenian Gazette to The Athenian Mercury.

Professor Graham brings out this important point, that the newspapers borrowed their entertainment features from the periodical press. As a matter of fact, so he points out, the first really good example of a newspaper with features was one put out by this same John Dunton, Pegasus, with news, an Observator, and a Jacobite Courant—a long name for the newsboys to shout if the paper were marketed that way.

Of the periodicals designed purely to amuse and to entertain the most important was The Gentleman's Journal, the first number of which appeared in January, 1692—a sort of Town Topics of London. Considerable space is devoted to Defoe's Weekly Review, "the most celebrated periodical before The Tatler of Addison and Steele."

Professor Graham does not overlook the periodicals that featured sex stuff. These will be found in Part III. The first to be mentioned is Dunton's Night Walker, or Evening Rambles in Search after Lewd Women, "with conferences held with them." Professor Graham admits that the title is a trifle intriguing but informs the reader looking for questionable entertainment that disappointment may be found in these rambles for the said conferences had as their object the reformation of the women. He then adds:

> Dunton's declaration of war on the "chief prostitutes in England, from the pensionary miss down to the common strumpet," and his expressed purpose "to expose vice monthly in lively colors and describe the dismal consequences, so as to frighten and shame women out of that life," whether dictated by religious or mercenary motives, added another impulse to the wave of reform.

Part IV of the volume limits itself to the Addisonian trio—The Tatler, The Spectator, and The Guardian. For the students of English literature possibly this chapter is the most important in the volume, but for the newspaper man the earlier chapters have the chief interest because they show the connection between the pamphlet of news and the pamphlet of entertainment. News about the precursors of the periodical press is of course more interesting to newspaper people than news about Steele, Addison, Swift, Defoe, etc.

IN "A Near Century of Public Service" Hugh Mercer Blain, formerly Director of the School of Journalism at Louisiana State University and Secretary of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism, has produced a well written and interesting book which shows the value of newspaper files for research purposes. This volume, telling the story of the origins and progress of the gas, street railway and electric service of New Orleans, reflects credit upon the newspapers of that city for the way in which they covered the history in the making. Proper credit, of course, is given by Mr. Blain to the newspapers for the help he has received. The volume has some interesting sketches that are almost worth special stories in the Sunday supplement as evidently New Orleans was the tryout point for such innovations as the "walking car" and the "fireless engine."

THE Unknown Soldier produced an editorial that won a Pulitzer prize. "The Unsung Reporter," an editorial in The Bookman for July, is also worth a Pulitzer prize for the praise it gives to "the anonymous souls who give us our daily news." It goes on to say that the time was of course when the newspapers were written poorly enough to create the impression that they were written impersonally, but the time has changed. To quote direct:

> One cannot read a newspaper today without the feeling that the thing has been done by some fellow who ought to be rewarded, who deserves more of an ovation than he probably gets from a thousand widely distributed readers each moment for two hours after the paper is out.

The explanation given is that newspapers today "are being written by men and women of unmistakable ability." By strange coincidence the next editorial deals with the Pulitzer prizes.

WILLARD E. Yager, who used to be connected with the Oneonta (N. Y.) Herald, has of late been devoting more than his leisure moments to the natural history of the Indian tribes in America. His latest volume is "Non-Combatants" and is a comparison of Christian custom and that of the Red World. The volume, the result of careful research work and painstaking study, sheds new light on Indian practices in war times. It deserves a place in the newspaper library for the chapters in early American history that previously had been unrecorded. It comes from the press of the Oneonta Daily Star.

ISABEL M. PATERSON, who writes "Turns With a Bookworm" for the Book Section of the Sunday New York Herald Tribune, calls attention to the fact that the author of the forthcoming novel, "Not For Publication," (The Century Company), Clara Sharp Hough, is a graduate of the Pulitzer School of Journalism—as are her husband and her brother-in-law. In commenting on the fact that this novel is a story of newspaper people, Miss Paterson says, "There has never yet been a good story of newspaper people. But maybe this will be."

Can it be possible that Miss Paterson has never read "Deadlines" by Henry Justin Smith of the Chicago Daily News?

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & CO., recently had a garden party out at its home in Garden City. To many it seemed like a gathering of ex-newspaper people, from ex-managing editors down to ex-columnists. One of the chief topics of conversation at this party was the prize which The Nomad Magazine is offering newspaper men and women for the best "story of a story." Such a story must be an authentic adventure in journalism while covering an assignment.

Details about the prize contest may be obtained from Albert Steven Crockett at 50 Lafayette Street, New York City. Mr. Crockett, it will be remembered, is the author of "When James Gordon Bennett Was Caliph of Bagdad." (Funk & Wagnalls).

WHAT is success? H. V. Kaltenborn, associate editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, gives his answer to this question in the May issue of The Brooklyn Central, the house organ of the Central Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association of Brooklyn.

Mr. Kaltenborn says success is easiest where one is in work that he likes. Laziness and cowardice have a hard time defeating the man who is interested in his work.

The general trend of this editorial which is headed "As I See It" cated by the following quotation:

> When I read the life stories of "successful" men, or read the advertise those who pretend to help others to s sometimes wonder whether our Americ of worshipping material success is n more harm than good. There is a di content which drives men on to great ments, and there is another kind of d which drives men on to failure. If w more from a man than he can possibly persuade him to undertake a task for is not fitted, we doom him to disapp dissatisfaction and failure.

The concluding thought is tha are "many successful men on th rungs of fame's ladder."

WHO reads the tabloids? T Republic answered this in its issue for May 25. Louis business manager of the New Times, corrects the reply in t Republic for July 6. Mr. Wiley that a truer statement than tha by the New Republic is that the have made none of their gains at pense of better or the best jour He insists that the standard si York newspapers which have i their news service and have app intelligent readers "have steadi forward."

Another correction listed by M follows:

> A correct statement of the situatio mit, is that modern journalism has pl ends against the middle. The better n have grown better and stronger in the tion of their public; the other kind hav grown worse, reached down and ta sources of newspaper purchasers in t had hitherto bought none.

Mr. Wiley then takes up the of the New Republic of the ad significance of the large mass tion of the tabloids and conclu the following:

> The better newspapers, far fr "alarmed by their (the tabloids') growth," are in a stronger position in circulation and advertising. The o papers to be alarmed are those w offered their readers almost the sam journalism. They alone will feel the c of the newscomers which do their way which we will not term better, energetic.

be it from the writer of this article er at the writers of the nation's nes. It is no easy task to tell im- nt and perhaps involved facts in to fit a pattern which cannot vary than a few letters in each line. If riter takes refuge in generalities mmonplaces, there is a rebuke from itors that the paper looks dull and resting. On the other hand, if the he writer strains a point to get in nal facts, he is sending in a hurry r the imp whose particular business slip in double meanings where they belong.

casionally a clever copy reader can this imp and make deliberate use ible meanings to brighten a page. is a specimen:

UNS TO BEAT THE BAND

man Captures Saxophones and Cornets, but Drummers Beat It may even suspect this one of having eliberately done:

HARRIS SUMMONS DR. PEASE IN MILK

Asks Visit by Head of Laboratory Cited by Mills in Adulteration Charges

Proper names like that of Dr. Pease gives lots of trouble, by the way. "Work to Succeed Fall" said one headline. If that puzzles you, remember that it was only a few years ago when the President's Cabinet included men named Work and Fall. "King Under Fire" wrote another copy reader, but the king was a home-town boy named King. Even such a headline as "Wide Eyes Two-Mile Mark" is confusing at first, because we think more naturally of "Wide eyes" than of a Swedish runner named Wide.

Perhaps the reader of this article thinks that almost anyone ought to be able to write good headlines without making blunders in print. Pardon us if we doubt it. One editor used to say, when complaint was made about what had been printed in his paper, "Well, you ought to see what doesn't get in." Copy readers and editors wage a war of extermination against the ludicrous blunder, and kill a score for every one that they miss. But so long as men are fallible we shall see occasionally such heads as:

MANY DISABLED IN SCHOOL

(over an item about the education of crippled children).

Ohio Court Finds for R. C. Hoiles in Mansfield Journal Case

The Supreme Court of Ohio has reversed the judgment of the lower courts of Richland county in the case of R. C. Hoiles against William E. Watkins involving the control of the Mansfield (O.) Journal.

Hoiles, a stockholder in the Mansfield Daily News, purchased a majority interest in Journal last August. A week later, Watkins and others, claiming interest as minority stockholders, caused a receiver to be appointed for the Journal and Holles enjoined from interfering.

The court of appeals affirmed the action but the supreme court found for Hoiles thus disqualifying the receiver.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

THE Los Angeles (Cal.) News runs a half-page "Saving Stamp Directory" listing the local stores and those in nearby towns and cities which give trading stamps with cash purchases.—Frank H. Williams.

To stimulate interest in the classified columns during the warm weather the Boston American prints each day among the classified advertisements 100 names and addresses of persons picked at random from the city and telephone directories. Persons finding their names in print are presented a free round trip ticket for a steamboat ride to nearby beaches, upon properly identifying themselves at the Boston American business office. This could be worked in inland cities by substituting street car rides for those of the steamboat.—Clarence L. Moody, Quincy, Mass.

Now is the ideal time to spring a "Buy Your Coal Now" page. More prompt deliveries are assured and with troubles in the various fields, the consumer avoids the possibility of higher prices in the fall. A page built up on this thought should sell itself to a group of your dealers.—B. A. T.

The Citizen Publishing Company of La Grange, Ill., publishers of nine weekly newspapers in the Chicago suburban field, doesn't wait for legal notices to come in as many papers do. They go get 'em. At every meeting of the various town boards, a representative of the organization is present to cover the news and also to see that the legals find their way to the "proper" place.—D. O. V.

Summer is the favorite season of the camera enthusiast. Camera advertising comes in fairly brisk during this season. It can be greatly increased by adding to your pages a section of advertising that specializes in camera accessories not the camera itself. Thousands of people own cameras and many know little or nothing about the fun they could have and the increase in better photos that would result if various accessories were used. Get the dealer to advertise, the tripod, the developing, printing and enlarging outfits, the color filters, the self-timer and the many other accessories. This idea will appeal to them.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

A full page of ads can be obtained from each of the many groups of stores located at junctions of street car lines, at prominent outlying corners, and other points, usually named "Five Corners," "Spicertown" or some such term by nearby residents. Every city has a group of these, each containing a drug store, a tailor shop, a clothing store, a recreational center, several garages and filling stations, etc. Use a writeup of the district in the center and arrange the ads around it.—U. S. V.

"News About Foods" is the title of a column advertisement a Milwaukee wholesale grocer company publishes in the Milwaukee newspapers daily. Each day a new, well known food article is described in the column.—R.L., Milwaukee, Wis.

A Lawrence, Mass., paper recently ran a two-page section headed "Baby's Needs." Subject matter about little tots is always interesting reading—especially to women. The paper carried instructive matter about caring for babies and the whole was flanked about with advertisements of photographers, furniture dealers, milk concerns and many others who supply baby needs.—F.S., Salem, Mass.

BISHOP EDITS DAILY

Coast Clergyman Picks Newsy Front Page for Sacramento Union

Rt. Rev. William H. Moreland, bishop of the northern California diocese of the Episcopal Church, tried his hand at publishing a newspaper by acting as managing editor and editorial writer of the Sacramento (Cal.) Union on June 23.

For the front page, the bishop chose "Sacramento Boy Drowns" for an 8-column head over the mast, and for another full-width streamer had "Suicide Data Questioned by Cress"—in which the city health officer refuted national statistics that Sacramento led the nation in suicide rates.

In one-column drops were the following: "Wind, Fog and Rain Hit Byrd Hop to Paris," "Coolidge to Study Islands' Problems," and "Escaped Convicts Retaken."

The bishop had a full page of editorial comment, hitting soundly at the fellow Episcopal bishop who is alleged to have advocated companionate marriages, discussing the veracity of newspaper headline writers, "flaying" the practice of "playing up" such crime stories as the Snyder case and boosting Sacramento's civic art gallery.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

THE Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post makes it a habit to interview vaudeville stars visiting the city and in this manner obtains good stories of more than ordinary human interest. In addition to the human interest angle, some of the stories are on particularly timely topics such as a recent interview with Gertrude Ederle, whose advice was "Get the money, glory fades quickly."—D. P., Fall River, Mass.

A few minutes at the phone will bring from your grocer all the fruits, butter, bread, cream and other items which not so many years ago were evidence of the frugality of the housewife. Canned goods and central distribution have supplanted this evidence of home thrift. The Galesburg (Ill.) Register-Mail developed a good story out of the passing of the home preserve, the town milch herd and the home chicken-yard. It makes the grocers feel good, too.—J. S. L.

There is something about waiting on the telephone or talking over this instrument conducive to drawing various figures or designs on pads or pieces of paper. This habit is even a peculiarity of prominent men. "What Do You Draw When You Phone?" was the heading of a long article with pictures in the Seattle (Wash.) Star recently, which showed the peculiar and sometimes amusing little figure drawings of prominent local men. A woman reporter talking with the secretaries to some of the big men of your town may help to mirror in an amusing fashion this little known foible of theirs.—C. M. L., Seattle, Wash.

Just how much money does your community owe? The Peekskill (N. Y.) Highland Democrat ran an interesting story recently to the effect that every one of the 18,000 people in that villa would be obliged to pay $98 to pay the indebtedness. And the same s would pay for the cost of the local f department for 75 years, or of the pol department for half a century. Th is a good story locally.—G. Harris Da berger.

"What do I weigh?" is a popu thought. How are the public scales your city? Are they all accura Spending twelve cents, a reporter of Saratoga Springs (N. Y.) Saratog obtained material for a two-column f ture. Not one of the twelve scales tested agreed with any other.—C-V Albany, N. Y.

The Huntington (W. Va.) Herald using a half-column weather comic un the caption, "The Weather Hound." F persons each day predict or guess "tomorrow's" weather menu. Each d the weather hound wise-cracks ab yesterday's predictions, and a good ti is had by all, especially the circulati manager.—E. M.

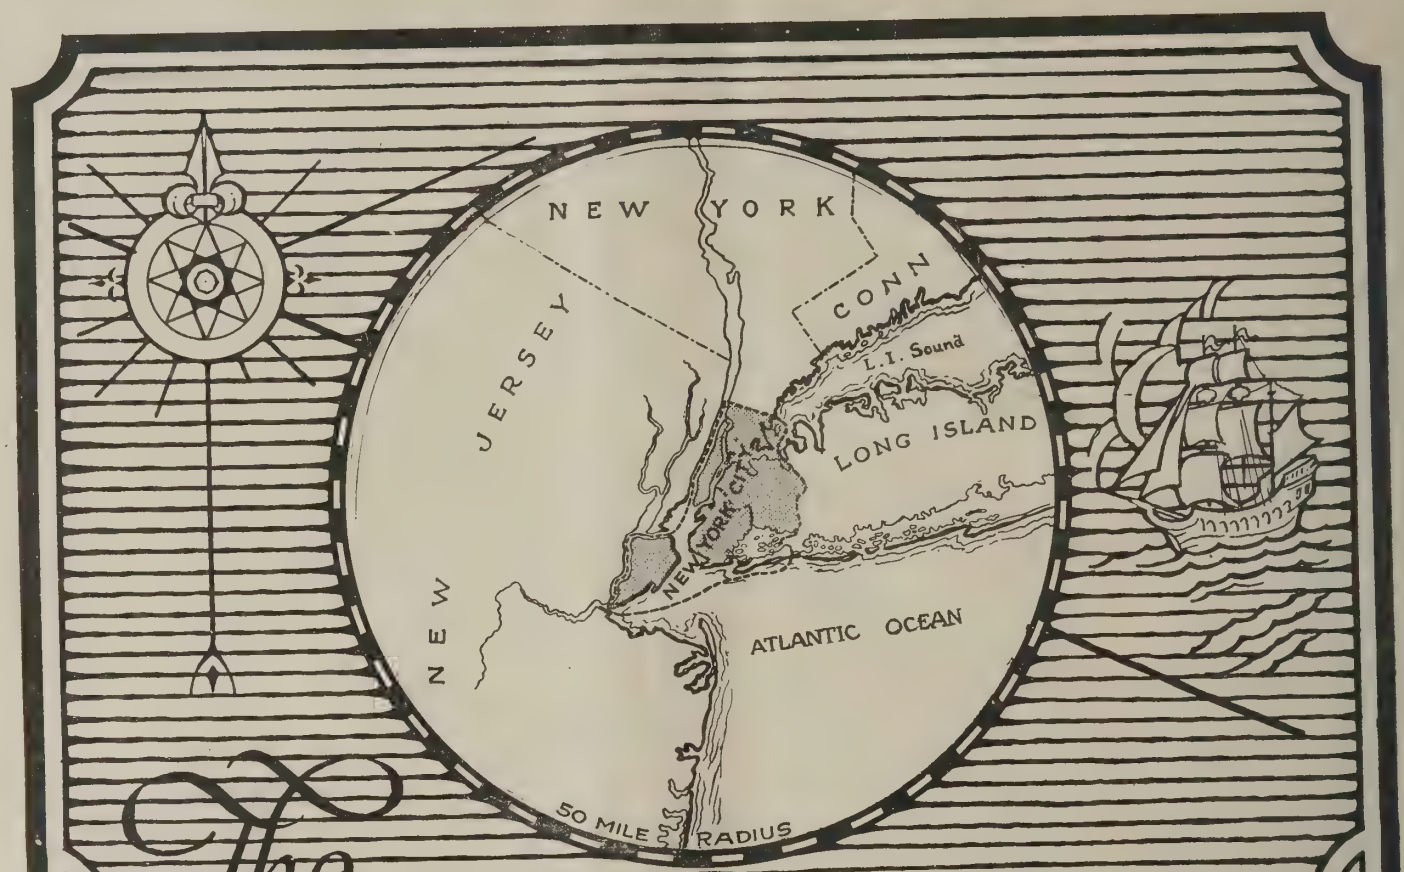
Pennsylvania Collects $193,140,788.73!



During the first nine months of the fiscal year of 1927, the Keystone State's Internal Revenue collection from all sources—income as well as miscellaneous taxes, amounted to $193,140,788.73. For the same period of 1926—the collections amounted to $189,613,669.59. Pennsylvania contributed the second highest amount in taxes paid to the government and the figures plainly indicate that the State is in a very healthy and prosperous condition, with its industries going full blast, with its people enjoying high incomes and with plenty of money to spend for the good things that make life comfortable and enjoyable.

This is a good time of the year for National Advertisers to share Pennsylvania's prosperous condition. A carefully planned campaign in the local papers listed below will reach the people living in the thickly settled communities, who are enjoying this unusual earning power,—and who are ready to buy every worth while product they can use in their homes.

The New York Market

HERE in the New York market containing nine and a half million people—offering advertisers far greater sales opportunities than any other market in the world—The Sun is recognized as a selling force of unusual power.

To sell their products in this fertile territory—both national and local advertisers use more space in The Sun than in any other evening newspaper. They have found that advertising in The Sun creates sales, brings customers, increases business.

The Sun has a larger home circulation among the active, prosperous people of the New York market than any other weekday newspaper. It reaches all members of the family six days a week. And 97 per cent of its readers live in the city and suburban territory.

and now—A NEW DAILY and SUNDAY FEATURE ESPECIALLY FOR PARENTS!

A NEW Tribune Syndicate feature is finding a special welcome with parents . . . YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN, by Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bevans . . . a daily article of sane advice and helpful suggestions for perplexed mothers and fathers.

Mrs. Bevans writes with the authority of years of child study, on such problems as child discipline, child character training, and the ideal relationship between parents and their children.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN is meeting the famous "laboratory test" of daily use in The Chicago Tribune and the New York News, and is fast becoming a best seller on the Tribune Syndicate List . . . Different from any other feature on the market . . . Wire for rates and proofs today!

—Announcing also—

Two Sensational Stories of the Air!

WINGS by John Monk Saunders. A thrilling, swift-moving serial story of a daredevil American flying ace, "Speed" Powell. He was reckoned a madman by his comrades of the American air forces . . . Frenchmen watching his flying marvelled at his daring . . . But in an hour of self-hate, Powell fled to Paris. Only the arrival of "the girl from home" saved him from ruin . . . WINGS promises to be one of the fiction sensations of the season. Don't pass it up!

Then—THE RED KNIGHT OF GERMANY. by Floyd Gibbons.

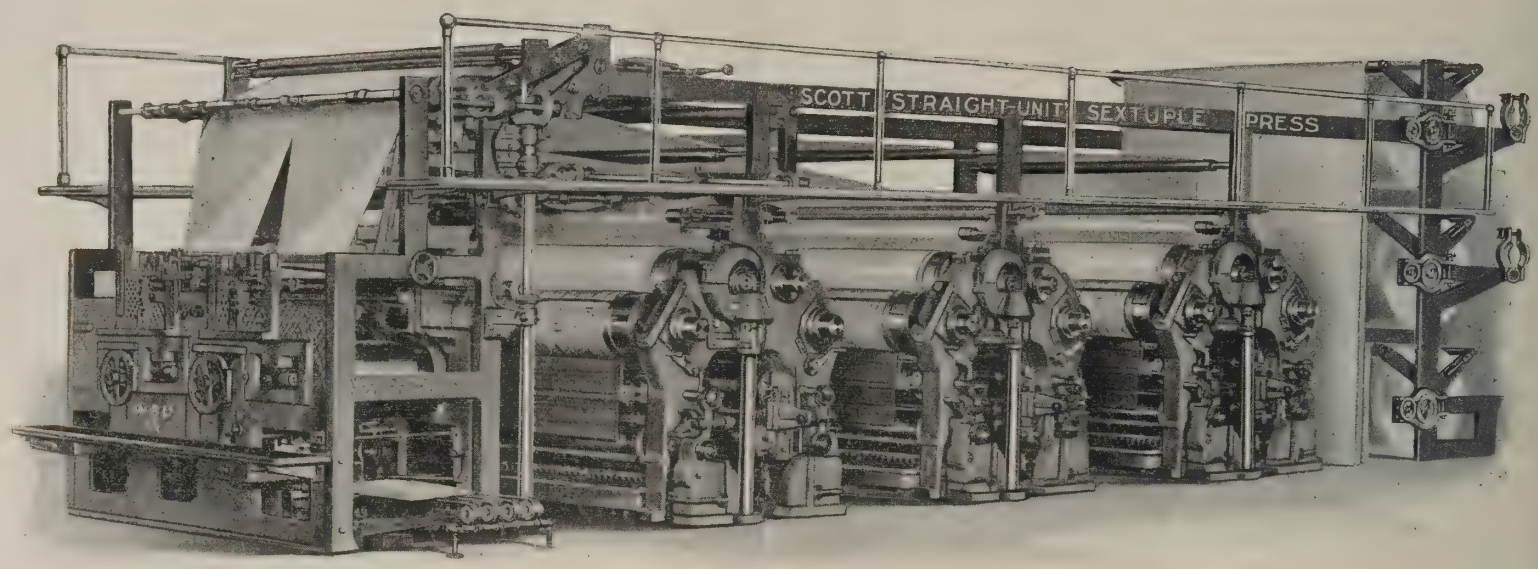
The German side this time . . . And perhaps the greatest story of individual exploit that the War has produced . . . The first authentic and complete story of BARON VON RICHTHOFEN, the Kaiser's deadliest flying ace.

For months, Richthofen led his famous "Flying Circus" on nightly raids over the Allied lines . . . Always he drew blood! The gallant young Prussian noble had the amazing record of 80 victories to his credit when he was sent down in flames by the heroic young Canadian, Roy Brown.

To get Richthofen's story, Floyd Gibbons spent months hunting up friends, fellow-fighters, and former adversaries of the German and poring through British and German archives . . . THE RED KNIGHT OF GERMANY is now running serially in LIBERTY WEEKLY and creating a literary sensation . . . The Chicago Tribune Newsappers Syndicate has arranged for exclusive newspaper rights to this brilliant story . . . Wire at once for rates and publication dates!



In the meantime—

MOON MULLINS, by Frank Willard, continues to hold place as one of the best liked comic strips in America . . . There's sound reason behind the phenomenal popularity of this highly original funny man . . . Willard's mischievous imagination never lags . . . There's always at least one good hearty laugh in every Moon Mullins strip—frequently one in every panel! . . . One of the great comic strip family devoloped by Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate.

The Presses Must Not Stop

Circulation gains or suffers in accordance with the speed at which you get your papers on the street and in the mails. The presses, therefore, must keep moving as slow work or breakdowns in the press room cannot be explained to a subscriber.

Scott "Multi-Unit" and "Straight-Unit" Presses are built not only to stand up under the most rigorous conditions but to do so at a higher rate of speed than any other standard press upon the market.

They are regularly rated at 400 R. P. M. yet when you drive them at this speed or even faster there is neither sacrifice in quality of printing nor tie-ups due to breakdowns in the press room. Scott quality means maximum reliability.

RECORDS in GAINS

During the first half of 1927, the New York Herald Tribune gained 12,876 lines of advertising—the only gain among standard size morning newspapers.

In National Advertising for the same period the Herald Tribune led all standard size morning newspapers in gains, with a gain of 37,831.

During the first six months, the Herald Tribune was first among morning newspapers in the amount of food, tobacco, and European advertising—three key classifications proving women's appeal, men's appeal, and the constantly growing reputation of the Herald Tribune—even abroad—as the New York newspaper everyone is talking about.

Semi-Annual Survey Shows Fewer Papers With Higher Circulations and Rates

Exclusive Editor & Publisher Tabulation of Circulations and Rates of English Language Dailies of U. S. and Canada—Situation Interpreted

By ARTHUR ROBB

(Copyright by Editor & Publisher Co., 1927)

THOUGH the American declaration of war is 10 years in the background, ie forces it brought into play in Amer-an journalism have not been weakened r the passage of the decade. Not since ie perilous days of 1918 and 1919 have iey been more evident than during the ist six months, which saw the number daily newspapers of general circulation ıblished in the English language in the nited States drop from 2,001 to 1,952—ie largest decrease recorded during the ne years in which Editor & Publisher as published this semi-annual record.

This decimation in the newspaper ranks as not been caused by outright suspen-ons, which were the rule in the war ays. Such cessation of publication has en rare in recent years and less than dozen are on record for the past six onths. The familiar process of this era consolidation—"cleaning up the field," ving the public service through one edium which neither of its two prede-ssors could afford to furnish from its wn division of the field's revenue.

The unexampled activity of this kind uring the past six months has arisen om several obvious causes. The most ident is that the newspaper business as apparently reached and passed the id of the most prosperous phase of the ost-war period. Business generally is f smaller volume than that of the rec-d year 1926. Publishers as a general ile permitted their operating expenses keep pace with revenue, or even to ıtpace it by reducing the proportion kept themselves as profit. The immediate sult of the slight curtailment of revenue hich began last autumn and has con-nued through the first half of 1927 was cut the percentage of profit still further ıtil the vanishing point was dangerously ose for some newspapers.

With red ink balances blocking the path ead, publishers sought a detour. aliant efforts have been made by owners id executives all over the country to duce expenses speedily, but the princi-l result of these efforts to date has en to check the rise, which in the past n years has been steady and almost ntinuously vertical. Few publishers see their monthly balances of 1927 any gn that its profits will equal those of the ars immediately past.

That state of mind prevailing in many ties makes them fertile fields for merg-s. One newspaper can prosper in ghtening times when two or more would arve. The newspaper owner who finds s confidence declining in his publica-on as a means of livehood can take his ofits of the past five years plus the oceeds of the sale to his competitor and ok for a new and safe repository for s capital. Likewise the man who has ent his life in the newspaper business d now wants leisure to travel, play golf, even to rest, finds the present turn of e market auspicious for a sale and his position quite willing to purchase his parture. Or two newspapers which ve clubbed and clawed each other for ars so that even the prosperity of 1924 and 1925 made only faint marks on their ledgers learn that the 1927 register is likely to be red unless they mend their ways decide that the place is too big for both of them. They arrange a "buy or sell" agreement, obtain appraisals, and after sometimes protracted argument, the merger is completed.

All of these processes and others have been intensely operative since last fall. Sometimes newspapers have lost the favor and friendship of the public by editorial or business policies or by private acts of their owners. Rarely, incompetent editorship or management has produced a newspaper that the public simply rejected. Frequently, advertisers have exerted pressure to bring about mergers in order to reduce the cost of their space, believing that their messages could be carried to the public under one newspaper heading as efficiently as under two. The principal reason for the mergers, however, is that the seller's market of the last three years continues, that capital which has hitherto ignored the newspaper business as a vehicle for its operations is now attracted to it and is willing to pay the sometimes astounding prices demanded by experienced newspaper owners.

Whatever the reasons, the results are that the number of morning newspapers now published in the U. S. A. in English has been reduced since January 1, 1927, from 425 to 419; the number of evening papers has dropped from 1,576 to 1,533 and the number of Sunday newspapers from 545 to 531. These are new low totals for the present century, it is believed, although complete and reliable figures are available only since 1918.

Circulations, notwithstanding the diminution of newspapers, continue to rise and advertising rates rise with them.

Morning newspapers now record a total net paid daily circulation of 13,607,486 copies. This is a gain of 271,690 copies, or 2 per cent, the comparison being between the totals for the six months ending March 31, 1927 and those for the six months ending Sept. 30, 1926. The gain over the period ending March 31, 1926, is 815,521 copies, or 6.3 per cent.

Evening newspapers as of March 31, 1927, have a total net paid daily circulation of 23,422,792 copies, a gain of 756,785 copies, or 3.3 per cent, over the Sept. 30, 1926, totals, and of 1,660,817 copies, or 7.6 per cent over the March 31, 1926, totals.

Total daily (morning and evening combined) circulation as of March 31, 1927, shows a net paid daily average sale of 37,030,278 copies, a gain of 1,028,475 copies, or 2.8 per cent, over the Sept. 30, 1926, figures, and of 2,476,338 copies, or 7.1 per cent over the March 31, 1926, figures.

These averages indicate practically 100 per cent coverage of the United States, even with a generous allowance for duplicated circulation, assuming that the average family consists of about four persons. This saturation of the United States by its daily newspapers is nothing new. The daily newspaper during the war became a necessity in thousands of homes where it had not been even a desired luxury and it has held the ground it won in the face of the radio, the movies, and the now ubiquitous automobile. The growth for the most part since then in the majority of cities and states has kept pace with population increases, and the large part of the increased circulation in excess of the amount needed to serve new newspaper readers, has been gained by the tabloids and other metropolitan newspapers which are pushing their spheres to the limit of modern speed devices in pressrooms and on the concrete roads. This is true especially of the morning papers, the great gains being recorded in the large cities and thereby the limited number of newspapers with circulations above the half-million mark.

In the evening field, the influence of the tabloids is not so marked. No evening paper has yet attained a million circulation and only three have amassed more than half a million daily average and maintained it long enough to record it in an A. B. C. report. The evening paper is by its time of publication deprived of the long reach for out-of-town circulation that its morning competitor enjoys, but the concrete road and the fast truck have made it possible for the evening paper to reach out into regions hitherto regarded as morning paper territory and to serve these regions with comparatively late afternoon editions. This enterprise is responsible for no small part of the 1,600,000 gain in daily copies registered during the past year by evening papers.

Sunday newspapers as of March 31, 1927, showed a total net paid average circulation of 25,463,052 copies, a gain of 1,027,860 copies, or 4.2 per cent, over the totals of Sept. 30, 1926, and practically the same gain over the totals of March 31, 1926. The number of Sunday newspapers has decreased by 20 during the recorded year.

Advertising rates have increased, of course. One of the first remedies to be applied by publishers when income begins to fall behind the pace of expense is to increase the unit of income. Rate increases have been general and continuous for several years and the present shows no slackening of this tide. None the less, the rate increases have hardly kept pace with the circulation gains, and the rate per line per million circulation, the index by which advertisers may judge the worth of their space purchases, is lower now than it was four years ago.

As presented in brief in the box on this page, the rate per agate line per million circulation of morning newspapers is $2.67, which is 10 cents higher than it was six months ago, but three cents less than it was four years ago. The unusual rise during the past six months undoubtedly reflects adjustment processes incident to consolidations. It also reflects the beginnings of a movement among morning newspaper publishers outside of the great cities to bring their rate cards from the wretchedly low schedule that has prevailed on some of them for years approximately on a par with that of evening papers which render similar service. This is no concerted effort, apparently, but the result of the economic forces mentioned above.

Evening newspapers show a rate per line per million of $3.29, which continues the steady decrease of the past four years. The rate per line per million as of Dec. 31, 1923, was $3.33.

Sunday newspapers have a milline rate

FORD ADVERTISING MEANS BATTLE OF GIANTS eat Industrial Struggle Between General Motors and Detroit Man Foreseen with Newspaper Space Figuring Prominently—Retraction Considered First Move by Theorists

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

BILLIONAIRE battling a billion dollar corporation for sales supremacy was the picture drawn this week advertising theorists and prognosti-rs in the light of Henry Ford's ogy to the Jews published in all news-irs Friday, July 8.

r. Ford may have billions to aid him is battle to market his new automo- now being manufactured, but the ral Motors Corporation likewise has ns, and, the theorists point out, has a head start given it by persistent and etent advertising placed in newspa- over a period during which the in-ual automobile manufacturer had ed his advertising program.

wspaper business offices and adver-g men see no slight connection be-n Mr. Ford's apology and his plans mbat General Motors in the present forthcoming automobile war of the s. Some there were who viewed it e opening gun in that battle, which really get under way when N. W. & Son in Philadelphia, complete its tising and merchandising program he new Ford car.

is week while echoes of the retrac-were still reverberating through the , the financial news tickers carried nnouncement under a Detroit date hat the Ford advertising appropria-would be $15,000,000. If true, this represent the largest sum, ever in-d to advertise a single product. The report also stated that advertising d start early in August.

W. Ayer & Son, the agency handling account, questioned by EDITOR & ISHER, claimed they had no knowl-of any Ford appropriation.

etails of the campaign have not yet completed. We do not know how money will be needed for advertis-it was stated.

several offices in New York where lation over Ford's advertising plans active this week considerable im-nce was attached to the fact that ir Brisbane, the noted editor of the York Evening Journal, gave out ord apology. Mr. Brisbane, in a nent to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, de-l that he had published all he knew Mr. Ford's apology, which, he said, d received through the manager of ew York Ford agency. "I know g about how or why the statement repared," Mr. Brisbane said.

it is the promised return of Mr. to paid advertising space that in-ed New York advertising men this y foresaw a lively struggle between ord, the manufacturer, and General s Corporation, with the latter, rep-ing Wall street and therefore Mr. s lifelong enemy, having a slight at present writing.

eral Motors, it was declared, could e price of Chevrolet considerably t feeling any pinch because of as-e received from other fast selling rofitable lines.

eral Motors, likewise, has invested ous sums in advertising, which have a cumulative effect in any t with Ford. The present G. M. C. ising investment has been reported nearly $30,000,000.

addition to the sensational gains by Chevrolet, the most serious e Ford has ever faced, the Oakland Car Company, a division of Gen-Motors Corporation, in the first six s of 1927 produced 97,227 Oakland ontiac sixes, a new record, which per advertising is now helping to The total output for the six months ed that of the same period last y 34,135 or 54 per cent.

eral Motors has no funded debt s cash and security holdings total $150,000,000, the New York Sun out in an article this week. Total stock capitalization is carried on the balance sheet at only $570,000,000 but the market value of outstanding securities is close to two billions, the Sun said, continuing:

"Around the 20th of the month the corporation will publish its earning statement and balance sheet for the second quarter. So far as assets are concerned the next balance sheet will no doubt show that General Motors is a billion dollar corporation."

The vastness of Mr. Ford's wealth has been published on other occasions, and the advertising battle between the two selling giants, is expected to run to breath-taking totals.

In many automobile lines, according to the New York Evening World this week, sales were reported slow, prospective buyers, influenced by the bare announcement that Ford was planning to present a new car, holding off until the new model can be seen.

The pace that the G. M. C. giant has been setting was shown in the announcement made July 15, by Alfred P. Sloan, president, that retail sales by General Motors' dealers in June were 159,701 cars, an increase of 42,525 cars, or more than 36 per cent, as compared with June, 1926. This also compares with the sale of 75,864 cars in June, 1926, and shows that increased advertising and increased sales have gone hand in hand.

Organized advertising, as represented by two outstanding associations, was represented among the theorists who speculated this week regarding Ford's closely guarded advertising plans.

"Mr. Ford is the greatest manufacturer that the world has ever known and that implies that he is the greatest salesman the world has ever known," James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies declared.

"Just why he gave up advertising no one has any way of knowing. But he was formerly a large advertiser, one of the largest newspaper advertisers in the early days, and there is reason to believe that his resumption of advertising will be on just as large, if not a larger scale. Market changes occur every day, and, in the last year there has been enough changes in the market to justify his return to the use of paid advertising.

"He has seen his closest competitor accomplish an amazing rise in sales, following the largest investment ever made in advertising a single product in all history. That sum was invested for the promotion of Chevrolet. Last year General Motors spent $7,000,000 advertising this one car. This year, I have heard, the sum has been increased to $10,000,000.

"But it is important to point out that the advertising cost per dollar sale in the case of the Chevrolet is decreasing with the increase of the total appropriation, according to figures I have seen published.

"Mr. Ford's apology to the Jews was the most tremendous act of courage and bravery witnessed in modern times. It is the most beautiful example of moral greatness that many of us have ever seen.

"Ability to acknowledge faults is one of the most important business assets. If it were ever taken out of business, business would go backward faster than it ever went forward.

"Mr. Ford's resolution to resume advertising may be interpreted either as an acknowledgement of a fault or an adjustment to a new condition. I would rather think the latter is the true interpretation.

"Every time a Chevorlet, or, for that matter any other car, is sold the market is changed for Ford by just that much. When much of a change in the market accumulates, the adjustment made to meet that change may be large enough to be noticed generally.

"If Mr. Ford sees fit, he will be a large advertiser. The decision, reputed to him, to resume advertising is in itself the biggest news advertising has heard for years. It represents the highest praise advertising has ever received, and proves that a product so well known and thoroughly proved as a Ford product still needs advertising in order to gain and maintain its proper place in the market. This one fact ought to make every business man in American want to know what advertising means to his business. If Ford's product needs advertising, how about the others, which, in comparison to the Detroit manufacturer's are virtually unknown.

"I believe Mr. Ford's plan to resume advertising will mean more to newspaper publishers than any other single event that has taken place in modern times."

W. A. Thomson, director of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, likewise foresaw newspapers in the new Ford advertising picture, since they had figured so prominently in the old.

"Everybody knows that newspaper advertising of one kind and another made the Ford car," Mr. Thomson said. "It is to be assumed that if Mr. Ford makes a new car that is constructed according to the new order of things in the automobile field that newspaper advertising can be counted upon to establish that product also.

"To be sure, during the gap in Ford advertising, competitors with ability, good products and large and wisely expended newspaper advertising appropriations have made substantial progress which promises to be more or less permanent. Mr. Ford, however, should also be helped in the selling of his new car by the enormous and cumulative value of his past newspaper advertising investments.

"Another factor that should help him is one that should make his newest car more profitable than his old ever was and that is the increased buying ability of the American public. There seems to be no end to the ability of the American wage earner to absorb products that once were thought to be luxuries and now are being counted as necessities.

"In talking advertising to automobile manufacturers in the not distant past, we heard that the saturation point in automobiles would be reached somewhere around the 10,000,000th car. Now, for every family paying an income tax, we find four or five running a motor car; all of which goes to show that the average city, and that means the newspaper reader, has money to spend and is willing to spend it.

"Our present prosperity doesn't seem to be endangered by this spending habit, but appears to be constantly revived by the willingness of the wage earner to keep his money in circulation.

"Ford will find a willing and spending public interested in buying his new car, if he advertises it in the newspapers."

N. Y. LINAGE TOTALED 14,346,018 IN JUNE

TOTAL newspaper advertising linage in New York for June was 14,346,018 lines as compared with 14,822,812 lines for June, 1926, a net loss of 476,794 lines, according to figures just issued by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post.

TWO EDITORS BEHIND STEPHENSON POLITICAL EXPOSE IN INDIANA

Thomas L. Adams of Vincennes Commercial and Boyd Gurley of Indianapolis Times Finally Receive and Print Convicted Klan Leader's Documents

TWO newspaper editors who didn't know when they were licked and were able to smile in the face of jeers from half of the citizens of their state are responsible for the expose of political corruption that D. C. Stephenson started in serial fashion in the Indianapolis Times and Vincennes (Ind.) Commercial this week.

THOMAS L. ADAMS

The fighting editors are Boyd Gurley, editor of the Times, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, and Thomas L. Adams, editor of the Commercial when he isn't investigating.

Without Adams, the inquiry might not have started; and without Gurley, it would have got nowhere.

As a result of their efforts, Indiana was told Monday of a check for $2,500 with what was purported to be the signature of "Ed Jackson" on the back, that Stephenson, Grand Dragon of the Indiana Ku Klux Klan and a political power before he was sentenced to the Indiana state prison for life, said he gave to Governor Ed. Jackson at the time that Jackson was a candidate in the republican primary.

This check blew off the lid of "the Little Black Box" in which Stephenson once kept his private documents, mostly political. It was startling because Jackson never listed it among his campaign contributions, and if it is authentic, may result in an impeachment session of the Indiana Legislature.

The Times, in printing this story, promised that about 30 other original ducuments from among Stephenson's private papers would be revealed from day to day.

This is one of the rare instances that a newspaper has sewed up a story so completely.

Stephenson, in turning over these papers to the Times through one of his attorneys, made good on a promise to Adams in a letter in December, 1926.

BOYD GURLEY

During the intervening time, all efforts to persuade him to tell the public about his deals failed. The letter in which Stephenson made his promise to turn the state upside down was smuggled out of the Indiana State Prison at Michigan City and delivered to Adams. Adams is chairman of a committee of the Indiana Republican Editorial Association appointed to investigate rumors of corruption in which the Klan and state officials were linked. The letter was printed by the Times and the Commercial.

Two grand jury investigations followed, but both ended in failure. The Times, however, assisted to the limit of its ability and ran down evidence that was important, but could not be followed up at the time. This evidence, relating to documents that Stephenson had photographed while he was in the Noblesville, Ind., jail awaiting sentence for the murder of Madge Oberhaltzer, of which he was convicted, was turned over to the Grand Juries.

The first grand jury failed to indict by one vote. Stephenson had predicted this in advance. The second was discharged after one of its members had told of being approached by an Indianapolis politician who offered him a bribe to vote against returning an indictment.

The inevitable reaction of many was to become skeptical of the charges made by Adams and Gurley, even hostile, but the two editors carried on. It was after many disappointments that they finally struck pay sand.

The events which led up to success began at the Michigan City prison ten days ago when, for the first time since his imprisonment, Stephenson was permitted to receive newspaper men in private. All Indianapolis newspapers were represented, but the conference was arranged only because of the insistence of Gurley that if officials had nothing to hide, he and others of his profession should be permitted to talk to Stephenson alone.

Less than a week later, Lloyd O. Hill, of Indianapolis, attorney for Stephenson, turned over to Gurley, at Stephenson's request, a great sheaf of documents.

It is these that the Times is now publishing, and will publish for a month.

When publication began last Monday, the Times issued an extra at 7 a. m. devoting more than two full pages to the spot story, the background of the case, and photostatic copies of the Stephenson check.

An unusual sidelight was that the Indianapolis News and Indianapolis Star gave the Times full credit. Two anxious days preceded the extra, Gurley said.

"We feared," he explained, "that a man who is close to some of the officials interested in suppressing the documents had orders to get hold of them. For that reason, a guard was hired and stood over the safe in our business office, where the papers were kept. Everyone entering the building outside of regular business hours had to tell why he or she was there."

Nothing happened to stop publication, however.

Gurley became editor of the Times March 1, 1926. For years prior to then, he was editor of the South Bend (Ind.) News-Times. Previous newspaper experience was on the Kansas City Post and the Denver Express.

Adams has been owner and editor of the Vincennes Commercial for many years.

NEWSPAPERS FOR MASS SALES

Oakland Motor Car Advertising Manager Praises Dailies

"No product of mass consumption can today succeed without the liberal use of newspaper space," in the opinion of Waldo E. Fellows, director of advertising of the Oakland Motor Car Company of Pontiac, Mich. He recently expressed this opinion in Seattle while meeting newspaper men and dealers, and studying business conditions and trade trends at first hand, so that he may meet these conditions with properly directed advertising.

While Mr. Fellows found that every type of advertising had its value, the products that were consumed in large quantities by the masses, such even as automobiles, must rely upon newspaper space for their successful marketing.

"In the last analysis," he said "the newspaper is the switch that makes the final contact with the public, the final medium that induces the sale, short of the actual salesman."

INJURIES COST $30,000

Accidents to Cleveland Plain Dealer employes cost the management $30,000 during the past year, the paper announced recently. The management is asking the co-operation of his employes to reduce the cost of such accidents. First aid is stressed by the management when employes are injured.

EDITOR ARRESTED

Fall River Youth Charged with Attempted Blackmail

Charged with attempted blackmail of Walter E. O'Hara, treasurer Agawam Mills, Fall River, Mass., brother of Neal O'Hara, newspaper columnist, Louis G. Bernier, aged 21, editor and publisher of the Call, four-page tabloid weekly of Fall River, was arrested Tuesday.

According to the police, O'Hara alleges Bernier demanded $300 as the price for suppression of a certain story about O'Hara. The latter arranged appointment with Bernier and notified the police. With two police inspectors secreted in the room, O'Hara gave Bernier a check for $250 and $50 in marked bills after which officers arrested the editor.

According to an agreement which it is alleged was dictated by O'Hara and signed by Bernier, no story derogatory to O'Hara or his friends was to be published until Sept. 1, when another sum of money was to be paid. The Call, which is distributed free, made its first appearance in May.

CLARKSBURG MERGER DETAILS COMPLETED

One Board or Directors and Two Separate Editorial Boards Formed —Telegram Equipment to Be Moved

Organization of the Clarksburg Publishing Company, which is now publishing the Clarksburg Exponent and the Clarksburg Telegram, and which is to publish the new joint Sunday edition of both newspapers under the Sunday Exponent-Telegram, has been completed.

All the details were worked out at meetings of the stockholders and directors of both the Telegram and the Exponent companies during the last several days.

V. L. Highland was elected president; J. Hornor Davis, vice-president and treasurer: W. Guy Tetrick, general manager and W. W. Powell, business manager and assistant treasurer.

As heretofore noted, the editorial management and policy of the two daily newspapers is vested in two separate boards of directors, one for the Exponent and one for the Telegram, each board comprising three directors of the new company, together with an editor-in-chief for each paper.

The exponent directors are J. Honor Davis, W. Guy Tetrick and E. Bryan Templeman. The editor is H. G. Rhawn.

As announced, the Exponent is to continue as a Democratic morning newspaper and the Telegram as a Republican evening newspaper. The Sunday Exponent-Telegram will be under the general direction of the general board of directors of the new publishing company, which comprises the three directors for the Telegram and the three directors for the Exponent. It is to be neutral in politics.

By arrangement with the owner of the publishing building on Hewes avenue, where the Exponent is now printed and where the Telegram will also be published, the directors have changed the name of the structure from the Exponent building to the Exponent-Telegram building.

Arrangements are now under way for moving the Telegram office and plant from its present location to the Exponent-Telegram building, and it is expected the merger of the plants will be completed by August 1.

MOVE TO KILL POST OFFICE "PROFIT" THEORY

levision of Bookkeeping Demanded to Eliminate Costs of Free Matter Which Cause Annual Deficit—Rep. Kelly and U. S. Chamber Behind Movement

By J. BART CAMPBELL
Washington Correspondent, EDITOR & PUBLISHER

MPHATIC demands from two important sources for sweeping reorganization of the Post Office Department on an up-to-date business basis have just served to direct attention again to the ubiquitous issue of postal rates.

Striking hard, Congressman Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, a member of the House Post Office Committee who has been on the firing line in the battle for a revision downward of postal rates, declared this week the "biggest question facing the postal service today is the need for a fundamental policy."

Predicting the new Congress will be forced to provide a satisfactory solution of the postal problem, Mr. Kelly told EDITOR & PUBLISHER that "we have arrived at a point where there must be a definite decision as to whether the post office establishment is to be conducted for service or profit."

At the same time Mr. Kelly was talking to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, the United States Chamber of Commerce announced that it is making a "systematic effort to bring about a complete overhauling of the Post Office Department bookkeeping and revision of postal rates when the New Congress convenes." A communication on the subject has just been addressed to more than 1,500 members of the National Chamber by its president, Lewis E. Pierson, of New York.

It is asserted on the part of the National Chamber that with a business-like accounting system the Post Office Department, instead of showing an operating deficit of more than $37,000,000, would show a surplus. The apparent deficit, it is explained, is due to the fact that the government charges against the Department all the free and less-than cost services which are a part of governmental policy.

By following the course of attempting to make commercial mail pay not only the cost incurred in handling it but a portion of the deficit incurred in the handling of free and less-than-cost mail, rates on revenue-producing mail have been pushed so high as to become unjustifiably burdensome to the public with which it originates, it is asserted. Following business practice, it is contended, cost-free and policy services should be charged against the general treasury instead of being piled upon mail users.

"Experience has definitely demonstrated," President Pierson says in his communication, "that the present scale of postal rates is not on a reasonable basis and is resulting in considerable harm to various users of the mails and therefore to the public in general. These facts have been brought out at the various hearings before the Post Office Committees of Congress, and the Postal Service Committee of the Chamber has considered a report which shows clearly that a revision of postal rates should be made as soon as possible.

"There has been a more or less generally accepted idea that the receipts from the postal service should fully cover all of the costs of that service. This is contrary to accepted business principles and overlooks the fact that efficiency and adequacy of the service should be the first consideration. It also overlooks the fact that Congress, in its wisdom, has seen fit to use the postal service for carrying out of governmental policies by the granting and extending of free or less-than-cost services.

"In the making of postal rates, applicable to purely commercial business, the following elements should be fully considered: First, the cost to the Post Office Department of the handling of free or less-than-cost matter; second, the rates should be so made as to encourage the further use of the postal service and thus reduce the units of overhead expenses; third, the rates should be made on the different classes with due regard to the character and value of the service and the conditions under which it is performed, in the same manner as rates are determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the transportation of freight and express.

"The net cost of these governmental policy services should be charged to the general treasury in the same manner as the cost of services of the other governmental departments, and thus eliminate from one of the biggest businesses in the world the present unfair and discriminatory method of making the users of commercial mail pay for governmental policy services. If such an adjustment of rates had been made and proper accounting rendered for governmental policy services, the last annual report of the Postmaster General would not have shown a deficit.

"The substance of the foregoing declaration can be emphasized by the following facts. The Postmaster General reported an operating deficit of $37,906,118 for the postal service in 1926. The Post Office Department, however, included in its accounting the cost of all government mail carried free and also the cost of various mails carried at less than cost under established public policy. These policy services cost the Post Office Department considerably more than the amount of the reported deficit. An analysis of the facts made by the Chamber's Postal Service Committee reveals convincing reasons why the reported deficit should not be regarded as an argument for retaining the present unfair and uneconomic rates on commercial mail."

"The biggest question facing the United States postal service today," said Congressman Kelly, "is the need of a declaration of a fundamental policy. We have arrived at a point where there must be a definite decision as to whether the post office establishment is to be conducted for service or for profit. Two schools of thought face each other on this proposition. When the salary bill of 1924 was enacted by Congress it was vetoed by the President on the ground that it carried no provision for correspondingly increasing postal revenues. In order to secure the deserved increase in wages for postal employes, Congress enacted a postal rate schedule increasing rates all along the line.

"Now, in the past 69th Congress, at every proposal to obtain improved working conditions the objection came that it would increase the deficit now shown in postal operations. This deficit has become a bugaboo and, in fact, on any common sense method of bookkeeping it is a myth. There has been no real deficit in the Post Office Department for many years. On the contrary, there has been a surplus.

"The difficulty comes in charging against postal revenues many free services which have been adopted as public welfare projects. The franked and penalty provisions of postal law, which permit the sending of Government publications and Congressional mail without charge mean a loss in revenue of $16,000,000 a year. The free in county privilege to newspapers means a loss to revenue of $10,500,000 a year. The special rate given to religious, scientific, and fraternal publications means a loss of $14,000,000 a year in revenue. The increased rate paid to American steamships for carrying foreign mail entails a charge of $2,000,000 a year. Our policy of sending publications for the blind free means $75,000 a year loss.

"If we adopt a straight service policy on the basis I have outlined reductions could be made on other classes of mail matter. To my mind, there is no other basis on which to proceed. The Postal Service is a service institution, not a money-making enterprise. The true policy is to determine the needs of the American people and organize the service so that they may have it.

"The American people have never yet objected to the Postal Service. I am convinced that they do not desire it to be transformed into a profit enterprise. I shall reintroduce in the Seventieth Congress the bill I introduced in the 69th Congress, providing for a declaration of fundamental policy and I believe that it must be enacted before we can systematically deal with the many postal problems confronting us."

Mr. Kelly's postal bill, House Bill 13474, 69th Congress, second sessions, follows in the full text:

Be it enacted, etc., that the Post Office Establishment of the United States is hereby declared to be an agency of the American people for their service and not for profit.

Sec. 2. That compensation of postal employes shall be adequate and just and, together with working conditions, shall be based upon American standards, without regard to postal revenues.

Sec. 3. That postage rates on paid mail matter shall be determined by the cost of the service given such mail matter, exclusive of all free services and public-welfare projects which have been or shall hereafter be adopted in connection with the Postal Service.

Sec. 4. That the amounts expended for the following purposes shall not be computed as a charge against postal revenues, but shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States:

(a) Total cost of conveying franked and penalty mail matter, less rental charge at 5 per centum on valuation of all postal quarters owned by the United States Government.

(b) Free to the blind mail matter.

(c) Free in county second-class mail matter.

(d) Amount of loss due to preferential rate on religious, scientific, and other periodicals.

(e) Amount of loss due to added rate for carriage of foreign mail by vessels of American register.

(f) Amount of loss chargeable to public-welfare purpose of the Rural Free Delivery Service, such loss to be computed by substracting from the total cost of such service, the estimated revenues from postage and special service charges on all mail matter originating on such rural free-delivery routes, added to one-half the estimated revenues from postage and special-service charges on all mail matter delivered on such routes.

Sec. 5. That the Postmaster General is hereby directed, in his annual report, to omit the amounts expended for the free services and public-welfare projects as specified in the section 4 from the expenditures to be charged against postal revenues and to set forth the surplus or deficit from postal operations during the preceding fiscal year without the inclusion of such free services and public-welfare projects."

SIX MONTHS' FIGURES SHOW LOSS IN N. Y.

NEW YORK daily newspapers carried a total of 88,794,175 lines of advertising during the first six months of 1927 as compared with 91,423,760 lines for 1926, according to figures just issued by the Statistical Department of the New York Evening Post. The volume represented a net loss of 2,629,585 lines.

WRITERS HAVE BIG MOMENT WHEN COOLIDGE DONS COWBOY GARB

Wait Breathless to See Him Mount Live Horse but He Fails Them—A. P. Man Founder of "Stephenson, S. D." —Diversions of Correspondents

By JAMES L. WRIGHT
Washington Correspondent, Buffalo News

STATE GAME LODGE, Black Hills, S. D., July 12.—Calvin Coolidge has had a mountain named after him since his arrival here; Grace Coolidge has had a creek named after her, but only Francis M. Stephenson of the Associated Press has had a telephone station named after him.

Stephenson is the only one of the score of newspaper correspondents now in President Coolidge's official party, who is stationed at the State Game Lodge night and day. He rented a little cottage half a mile from the President's house, and had a telephone installed on a farmer's line. Now all you have to do to get him is to call "Stephenson, S. D."

The Rapid City operator will then give one long ring and two short, and Stephenson will answer. This is the conversation that takes place many times a day:

"Hello, is that Stephenson?"

"Yes."

"Who's talking at Stephenson?"

"Stephenson."

The business of "covering" the president of the United States in the Black Hills of South Dakota, 1,800 miles from his home in Washington has many complications for the newspaper men and correspondents, and even for the official office staff of the chief executive.

Many times Everett Sanders, the president's secretary, does not know the plans of his chief, as for example when President Coolidge unexpectedly stopped off at the camp established by five troops of the Fourth cavalry on a cross-country ride from Cheyenne, Wyo., to Fort Meade, S. D., one afternoon and arranged to review them before his executive offices in Rapid City on their way through the next day. Mr. Sanders was not told of the arrangements until a few minutes before the troops arrived, too late to notify the photographers.

When the president's birthday party was given at the State Game Lodge on July 4, the movie photographers ground out 3,500 feet of film, and some of them exhausted their reserve supply. At the close of the day the President unexpectedly appeared in full cowboy regalia from ten gallon hat to buckskin chaps, and there was urgent demand for film to record this unusual event. One of the photographers had to grab Mrs. Coolidge's little hand moving picture camera to avoid losing his chance and perhaps his job.

Russell C. Aiken, the only "still" photographer now with the party nearly had heart failure. He had used up every plate he had when President Coolidge was being urged to mount the saddle horse that was given to him as a birthday present. Had the chief executive finally relented, and put his foot in the stirrup Aiken would have missed a picture he has been waiting for ever since Mr. Coolidge has been in the White House.

On the day following the birthday party at the State Game Lodge several hundred additional yards of film were used in recording the colorful spectacle at the Tri-State roundup at Belle Fourche.

Mr. Coolidge keeps every one, who must record his movements either in the papers or in the movies, on the alert all the time. An automobile starts from the Harney hotel in Rapid City at 6:30 each morning, taking to the lodge the afternoon newspaper men, who must wire their newspapers early just what he is doing. As soon as he leaves the lodge for town, that fact is telephoned to other newspaper men, who are waiting for him in town, and they go to the executive offices to be ready for him when he arrives. Newspaper conferences are held here twice a week, just as he holds them when he is at his executive offices in Washington.

Regardless of the difficulties experienced in keeping up with President Coolidge on all his movements, several of the newspaper men have found time to take advantage of the recreations afforded here. Philip Kinsley of the Chicago Tribune and George Authier of the Minneapolis Tribune have rented a cottage up Rapid River, where they stay when the heat makes their hotel room uncomfortable.

Kinsley is the "provider." He catches the mountain trout, and chief cook, but he makes Authier clean out the coffee pot and do the sweeping. Kinsley is the most expert fisherman of the newspaper party. He watches each new insect that appears on the water's surface, so that he may get a fly like it. On July 8 he discovered a new one, and chased it until he captured the diminutive object. Then he brought it into town to match it up with a fly.

One of Kinsley's neighbors, seeking to be friendly, got up early one morning, and dug a can of fishworms for him. Kinsley was one of those who had been critical of President Coolidge for fishing with worms, and so he turned down the gift.

George E. Durno of the International News, Paul R. Mallon of the United Press, Maurice Judd of the New York Sun and either John Lambert of Universal Service or Raymond S. Henle of the Associated Press compose the bridge-playing foursome of the party.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY SUES TWO DAILIES

New York American and Daily News Defendants in Suit for Damages for Alleged Copyright Violation

The New York American and the New York Daily News were named defendants in a suit begun this week in U. S. District court, New York, by the Atlantic Monthly. The suit asks for an injunction, accounting, damages and other relief for alleged violation of copyright, and is based on publication in the News and American last April 15 of portions of Gov. Alfred Smith's reply to Charles Marshall, published in Atlantic Monthly for May.

No special damages are sought. The court is asked to appraise the damage and award such amount as it deems proper. The injunction is requested to restrain the newspapers from distributing copies of the News and American containing copies of the Smith letter.

The magazine alleges that the May number was published on April 8 at the Rumford Press in Concord, N. H. Copies were transferred from there to the plaintiff's office in Boston, and from there sent to Washington to be copyrighted.

The complaint sets forth that Gov. Smith's article was a work of "great artistic and literary merit" by reason of the eminence of its author, the timeliness of the subject matter, as well as the intrinsic merit it possessed."

NEW BOOKS BY A. N. P. A.

Two new books are promised for early publication by the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. One will be entitled "Community Advertising" and will be followed by a second called "Financial Advertising." The latter was prepared in co-operation with the Financial Advertisers Association.

TORONTO DAILY WINS APPEAL

Will Get New Trial in $6,000 Libel Award to Woodstock Paper

The first divisional Appellate Court of Ontario in a judgment handed down July 4, allowed the appeal of the Toronto Evening Telegram from the decision of Mr. Justice Logie, awarding the Woodstock Sentinel-Review $6,000 against the Toronto paper.

The Woodstock paper sued the trustees of the Telegram to recover $50,000 dollars damages for alleged libel. At the trial of the action in Woodstock, a jury returned a verdict for $6,000.

The appeal is allowed and the action dismissed with costs, Mr. Justice McGee dissenting.

The action arose from an editorial published by the Toronto Telegram during the Dominion election campaign of 1926, in which comment was made regarding a seizure of liquor on the premises of the publisher of the Sentinel-Review.

AD MEN HAVE AIRPLANE THRILL

Frederick W. Hume, public relations counsel of New York, and Lou E. Holland, Kansas City, former president of the International Advertising Association, this week were telling of their narrow escape from death when, while attending the I. A. A. convention in Denver, they became lost flying in a thunder storm. The two men were in an airplane furnished by Col. Paul Henderson, president of the National Air Transport Company. After climbing to 7,500 feet they rode out the storm, landing safely.

DAILY APOLOGIZES FOR DIVORCE STORY

British Paper Printed Matter Not Permitted Under New Law Its Representative Tells Judge

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

London, July 2.—During the hearing of a case in the divorce division of the High Court at London recently, Noel Middleton appeared for the proprietors of the Newcastle Daily Journal to correct any misapprehension that might have arisen through the publication in the paper of certain matters in the report of the divorce action.

The publication might possibly be looked upon as a contravention of the Judicial Proceedings (Regulation of Reports) Act, and the newspaper had received a complaint from the solicitors to the husband in the action referred to, with regard to its report, and the proprietors had taken the earliest opportunity of informing the Court that they realized that the report in question did perhaps go a bit beyond the particulars of such cases that a newspaper was entitled under the act to insert.

The report was received from a news agency and was passed by a sub-editor inadvertently. The proprietors decided to tender a humble apology to the court, in view of the very severe penalties that might be inflicted under the act. Sir Patrick Hastings, counsel for the husband, said another paper (the Northern Echo) also had a report of the case which gave more grounds for complaint than the one already referred to and, although they had communicated with the editor of that paper, he seemed to think that under the act he was entitled to publish the matter.

The counsel for the wife referred to a further report in the East Anglian Times containing similar details. Mr. Justice Hill agreed that it was very desirable that attention should be called to such matters, because now newspaper proprietors and editors would perhaps take the trouble to read the act thoroughly, and take legal advice upon it if they could not understand it.

It was very proper of the proprietors of the Newcastle Daily Journal to tender an apology in court as they had done, and he hoped the other editors would take the same view of their responsibilities.

MERCHANTS GIVE RA INCREASE TO DAILY

30 Per Cent Rise Takes Effect Dodge City Globe After Store Executives Hear Publishing Costs

The much-advertised progressive sp of the West was recently demonstra in an unusual fashion in the little tow Dodge City, Kan., when the leading m chants and advertisers of that unanimously voted the Dodge City D Globe an increase in advertising ra The new schedule of charges for sp went into effect July 1 and represents increased revenue to the Globe of appr imately 30 per cent.

For the past 18 months, the circulat of the Daily Globe has been increas rapidly. The old rates were establis when the paper had 2,500 circulati The net paid today is near 4,500. E though advertising volume was mou ing month by month, Publisher J. Denious and Business Manager N. Peterson discovered that the more adv tising the paper carried the less mone made. White paper costs were eat all the profits.

And so the merchants of Dodge C were invited to meet with the publish of the Globe.

"We face a problem of mutual c cern" said J. C. Denious, publish "When existing rates were establish our paper had less than twenty-f hundred circulation.

Today, we run more than 4,500. W cannot continue to offer our advertis this circulation at present rates. We the Globe do not want to assume the sponsibility of deciding which of t courses should be followed. So we ha called you, our frends, here and are as ing your assistance in settling our di culty. We can drop a great share our circulation in the many cities a towns in what we all call 'The Dod City Empire' and bring our run back approximately 2,500 and operate on e isting rates. Or, if you desire, we w continue to expand; we will obtain mo and more subscribers in our logical tra territory and sell our advertising at new schedule of rates which will be a proximately thirty per cent more than present."

N. C. Peterson, business manag opened the circulation books of t paper to the merchants, presented a m of the Dodge City Empire, as it is call and showed Globe circulation in each ci and county in the city's territo Claude C. Skates, president of the Sta Bank of Dodge City, was then chos chairman of the meeting and vario merchants were asked to voice the views. The merchants told the Glo to go ahead and push for more circul tion in outlying territory and to esta lish a schedule of rates which wou provide for its expansion program a pay the owners a good profit. Chairma Scates then called for a vote and, unan mously, the advertisers asked the pu lishers to increase the rates immediate as a guarantee against any tempora necessity for retrenchment.

A representative of Editor & Pu lisher who talked to Dodge City me chants and the publishers of the Glo last week learned that, at the high rate, practically all contracts have a ready been renewed—approximately per cent of the total number calling f a larger amount of space than former used. "Now we can push on to st greater growth," declared J. C. Deniou publisher, with a smile of satisfactio "Our advertisers feel that the progra in effect is one of their own choosing a they are enthusiastically watching ou growth."

GUSTY GARRULITY MARKS FIGHT BALLYHOO

Sports Writers Spraining Vocabularies in Attempt to Dig News from Barren Dempsey-Sharkey Camps —N. Y. Graphic Plans Protest to Publishers' Association

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

QUOTATIONS from reports of what the sports writers call the current "ink market" would indicate that the lowly art of boxing is being covered this year, as usual, with spinster-like garrulity.

"Goodness," wrote Marshall Hunt in the New York Daily News on July 12, in passing on the information that Dempsey was to start a 24-mile swim on Lake George. "Is the guy practicing for love when he meets the terrible Mister Sharkey, July 21 in New York.

"Heavenly days!

"The situation looks very serious."

And the same writer on the same day in the same story discussed "the intelligensia of this ancient and perhaps honorable racket of fisticuffing."

It seems Mr. Hunt was referring to the 100 or more "experts" who are at White Sulphur Springs, N. Y., reporting on Dempsey's training. These intelligent experts, he continued, were "agreed that [William Harrison Dempsey can hit.

"I suspect," wrote Mr. Hunt, "that is a very valuable quality in the boxing game. * * *

"One must hit!

"Yes, one must."

For 10 days of the month's training ballyhoo, the New York newspapers have applied approximately 150,000 words on the two contestants of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight scheduled for July 21. Tex Rickard, king of promoters, has predicted "a million dollar" gate on more than one occasion. The usual 10,000 fans have been reported as coming to New York from Boston. Prices of the tickets for the $27 top has been steadily announced without charge in all the papers. Not a line of paid for advertising has appeared in the newspapers bringing forth an editorial protest from the New York Evening Graphic, which plans to appeal for united action by the publishers association of New York.

Instead of advertisements:

"Ex-pugs and present champions are openly turning literary, and newspaper columns are being filled with by-line copy that looks important and says nothing.

"One or two reporters covering the training camps have admitted there is very little to write about and many of them credit this to be somewhat true by filling their stuff with humor instead of reporting or expert opinion.

"I wonder the boxing writers now seem like old maid school teachers. Apparently the people they associate with have affected that way. Probably the men covering the training camps play slap jack and drink iced tea after they send out their 1,000 yards of copy.

"Robert Edgren, for instance, sat next to Jack O'Brien the other day, watching Sharkey at Madison Square Garden. Edgren, according to Mr. Edgren, said "loudly, as if he didn't care a continental if Mr. Sharkey did hear him." And this, wrote Mr. Edgren, is what Jack said:

"'Beautiful, lovely, marvelous! My God bless me! Did you see that? What a stinging jab that young man uses. I declare, I haven't seen anyone jab like that for a long time.'"

And a little later:

"'Dear, dear. Such delightful footwork! Gracious, he reminds me of me. He is very light and fast for such a powerful big man. Why I do believe his shoulders are bigger than Dempsey's.'"

This mania for clowning seems to be in the air or water or something of White Sulphur Springs. Even William Wallace, of the serious New York Evening Post got that way in a story he filed July 8 in the form of a letter beginning "Dear Boss."

"Dempsey was in high glee," he wrote, "he made his 18 holes in 108. He played like a kid out for a holiday on the 5th tee (Honest, Boss, this is not trying out the following paragraph on their friends as the latest "tongue twister." It is Mr. Underwood's description of the "Garrulous Gob," meaning Sharkey.

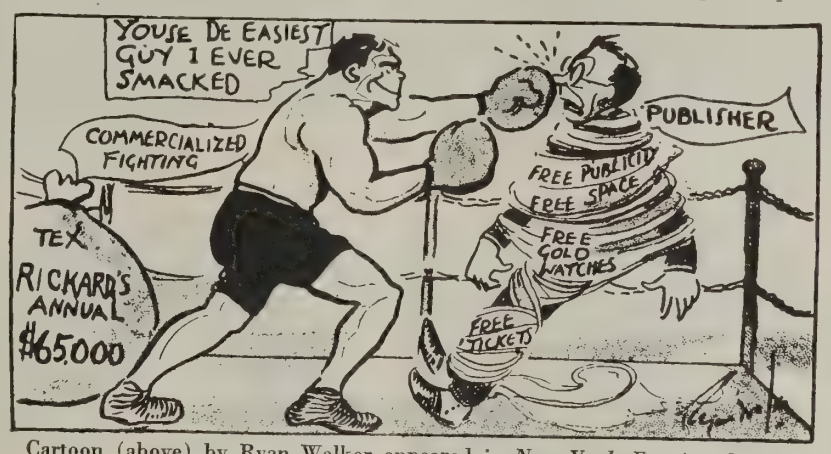
"The larruping and linguistic Lithuanian has licked everyone tossed in front of him and howled for more guys to lick. Yet at the end of 10 rounds he was whipped by old Mike McTigue, pounds lighter and years older.

"Supposedly lacking a haymaker, he knocked out Jim Maloney, who Jack Delaney nailed on the chin with his celebrated right hand uppercut, without knocking him out of his brogans, and whom Harry Perrson, the slugging Swede, plastered with 19 hard righthand smashes to the jaw without changing his stance from the perpendicular to the horizontal."

An encouraging bit of information was furnished by Harry Cross in the New York Herald Tribune on July 9. Before going to great lengths to tell all about Sharkey's superstitions regarding his purple gymnasium suit, and the "new toggery outfit" he always buys before a fight, Mr. Cross used poetic license perhaps to tell his readers:

"He (Sharkey) plays no sonata with the rataplan of blows, but he does smash the leather so hard that it can be heard out in Eighth avenue."

Thousands of words were written about Dempsey's golf game, despite the profound opinion of Wilbur Wood of the New York Sun, who telegraphed from White Sulphur Springs on July 8 that "of course, it is impossible to judge Dempsey's physical or fighting shape by peering at his antics with a mashie or a brassie. One might as well attempt to tell what kind of a hitter a baseball rookie is by watching him play poker," he said.



Grantland Rice is as strong on similes as he ever was. On July 9, he cast his "expert orb" on Sharkey and out came this beauty:

"He rolled around like a rubber man with all the sinuosity of a sucuru, which is slang for the big South American water snake."

Finding names for the fighters is one of the first rules of sport page press agentry.

Among the current names for Sharkey are: "Gentleman with the Gimlet Glare;" "Loquacious Lithuanian;" "Garrulous Gob;" "Larruping and Linguistic Lithuanian" and "Big I Man of Boston."

Dempsey, in addition to the old favorites of the "Manassa Mauler" and "Jack the Giant Killer," is now sometimes referred to as the "Hollow Shell" and the "Punching Bag of Philadelphia." Dempsey has started to write "his own story." Jack Delaney, another pug, has turned reporter also, and, with the help of Jack Farrell, is writing first person copy for the New York Daily News; James J. Corbett "Gentleman Jim" is writing his views; and Leo P. Flynn, Dempsey's manager, and Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's manager, have also taken their pens in hand.

Cartoon (above) by Ryan Walker appeared in New York Evening Graphic on July 8.

A big free campaign in display space has been placed in the dailies, leading the New York Evening Graphic on July 8 to ask in an editorial:

"Why should professional boxing be supported by free publicity?"

This week, E. H. Gauvreau, managing editor, declared the Graphic's representatives were going to call upon the Publishers Association of New York to take united action against this problem at the next meeting.

"Professional sports are in a bad way," the editorial read in part.

"They have become so groggy on prosperity that in many cases money and not the game has become their supreme consideration.

"Fair play is often buried six feet under ground while opinions of sporting writers are, in some cases, it is alleged, bought and paid for.

"There are few branches of sport that are unaffected by this menace of underhand commercialism, but professional boxing seems to be more thoroughly contaminated than any other.

"This newspaper calls upon all editors to take note of the insidious peril that now threatens not only to ruin sports but to wreck confidence in the daily press.

"Let the fact be faced that boxing matches and other sporting events have become huge commercial enterprises.

"They are in precisely the same class as theatre, movie houses and other amusement businesses.

"There is no essential difference between them and the average store.

"Sports promoter and shopkeeper both have something to sell to the public. The store men have not tried to camouflage.

"They have earned the respect of the public and the publishers by honestly telling about their business in the business-like manner—through the medium of paid advertisements in the newspapers.

"Sports promoters have tried to gain their publicity by indirect payment for newspaper space. This for a time deceived the public. It has undoubtedly deceived some publishers. It will be an astounding thing to the latter to discover that paid reporters on their own staffs have been taking money and other gifts of value to sway their opinions.

"The sporting columns in many newspapers have fallen to a degrading level as a result of direct and indirect bribery.

"There is little truth in them.

"The dear public is being stuffed to the gills with paid publicity.

"There is a remedy for this rotten situation, and only one.

"That is for sports promoters to treat their enterprises as business undertakings and to advertise them at paid rates.

"That is the honest method pursued in England, where there never has been a whisper of press prostitution.

"The Graphic calls upon promoters and publishers to adopt a similar straightforward way out of the present unspeakably sour mess into which American sports have fallen.

"You can fool all of the people merely part of the time.

"And the time has just about arrived when you will no longer be able to deceive the public about professional sports!"

Prices paid for tickets, it was explained to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, was one of the outstanding reasons why the Dempsey-Sharkey contest set for July 21 got four times the space in the New York papers as did the Paulino-Wills fight which was held on Wednesday this week.

"Rickard puts on a big show, when he is the promoter," it was further explained. The card offered by Humbert Fugazy in this instance is second-rate, and tickets can be purchased at popular prices."

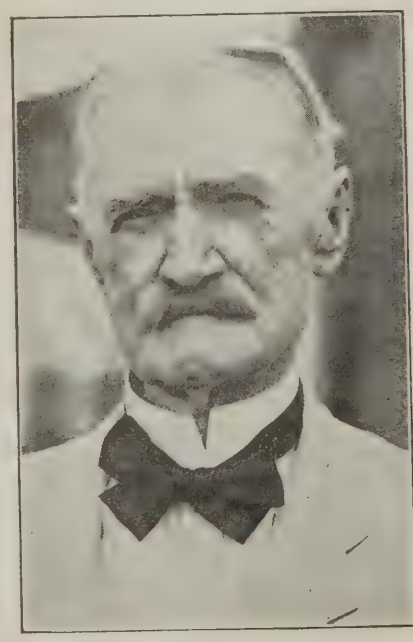
Retiring Vice-President of Chicago Daily News Tendered Dinner —Succeeded by J. L. Houghteling

Hopewell L. Rogers, who recently resigned as vice-president and treasurer of the Chicago Daily News, Inc., was guest of honor at a dinner given by 50 of his associates—officials, department heads and veteran employes of the Daily News, July 7. Mr. Rogers relinquished his office July 9, after 30 years of service to the Daily News.

His plans for the future have not been definitely announced, except that he will take a vacation tour in Europe with Mrs. Rogers.

In 1912 he helped organize the Audit Bureau of Circulations. Then he served as its first secretary. A director of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association from 1912 to 1922, he served for two years as its vice-president and for another two years as its president.



During a sojourn in Switzerland in 1897, Mr. Rogers arranged with the late Victor M. Lawson to join the staff of the Daily News. In 1908 he became business manager; in 1914, vice-president; in 1924, vice-president and secretary. In 1926 he was made vice-president and treasurer.

James L. Houghteling, who has been vice-president and secretary of the Chicago Daily News, Inc., succeeds Mr. Rogers as vice-president and treasurer. James N. Shryock, business manager, has been elected to fill the vacancy on the board of directors caused by Mr. Rogers' retirement and to the office of secretary. He continues as business manager.

HIGHER PAY FOR REPORTERS URGED TO RAISE NEWS WRITING STANDARD

Miami Editor Says More Pay and More Strenuous Policy of Elimination Will Improve News Columns, in Suggestion to A. S. N. E. Members

READJUSTMENT of reportorial salaries was suggested by Olin W. Kennedy, managing editor of the Miami (Fla.) Herald, writing in the current bulletin of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Under the heading, "A Recipe for Better Reporting," Mr. Kennedy's suggestion was published by the Bulletin as follows, with an added comment by the Bulletin's editor:

"One of the more serious phases of newspaper work is that of obtaining really high-class reporters. The general public does not hold the average reporter in high esteem. I am wondering if this is not because the average reporter is underpaid and does not feel that journalism offers him an opportunity.

"My observation is that the average reporter is paid less than printers. This has a natural tendency to destroy pride in the profession. I am wondering if the association could not start agitation for the employment of more finished men as reporters and pay them real salaries. Of course, there would be the necessity of training young men who could not expect to earn full salaries in their first year or two.

"There should be a more strenuous policy of elimination. I think all editors have been guilty of allowing young men to stay in the newspaper business who should have been informed in the first year of their experience that they could find better opportunities for their qualifications in other lines of work. If all editors would do this we would soon have better reporters I think. However, the first thing is to readjust the pay of reporters so that they can have something to look forward to.

"It must be very discouraging to the average reporter to be working in the same building with mechanics who are getting more pay. It is my opinion that qualified reporters should be paid more than desk men."

Following is The Bulletin's comment:

"What Mr. Kennedy says about elimination appeals so strongly to the editor of The Bulletin that he cannot resist the urge to shout 'Amen.' There undoubtedly are persons in the newspaper profession who would be far better off outside of it and whose presence elsewhere would be a happy thing for journalism. In this journalism is not unique. The same thing could be said of the law, medicine and the pulpit, but in those callings it is not a simple matter to weed out the undesirables. In the law, for instance, it is a grave thing to disbar an attorney. Our lawyer friends tell us that it is almost impossible to get rid of failures short of complete moral debility. But the remedy is much simpler in the newspaper profession. A judicious but firm use of the boot in the early years of journalistic endeavor is a sure cure and there is no need of disbarment proceedings, medical board hearings or heresy trials.

"Any experienced editor knows, furthermore, that such a course is the humane one even though it may sound brutal. The greatest favor that can be shown a journalistic misfit is to show him the door while he is still young enough to find something else and before he becomes a drifting, mediocre newspaperman trying to hang on with a little box of tricks. It should not take a great while to tell whether a man has an aptitude for newspaper work. Certainly a year or two should suffice and the editor owes it to his profession to keep close enough tab on his men to know which ones are worth working with. The editor who has not time for that has not time for the most important thing about his job, namely, the developing of new men.

"But all this plea for careful elimination is futile unless the general level of wages for reporters be put up to where it will attract and hold worth while men. If only the seconds are going to go into journalism then, of course, elimination is going to be impossible. Editors generally must recognize their reporters as the most important men on the newspaper and pay them, as Mr. Kennedy suggests, as much or more than desk men or printers. It should not be necessary for a newspaperman, in order to get into the upper brackets of salary, to desert the most interesting and valuable part of his calling and become an editor. We already have too many editors and not enough good stuff to edit."

EX-CHIEF ON TRIAL FOR MELLETT MURDER

Former Policeman Accuses Lengel of Aiding Him to Frame an Alibi—Case Will Go to Jury This Week

Former Police Chief S. A. Lengel, of Canton, O., went on trial Monday in that city on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the slaying of Don R. Mellett, editor of the Canton Daily News, on July 16, last.

He is the fourth man to be tried for the murder, three others, Ben Rudner, Louis Mazer, and Floyd Streitenberger having been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for their share in the crime. Lengel is the first "higher up" to go on trial for complicity in the crime.

The high spot in the trial came when Streitenberger, former Canton policeman and favorite of Chief Lengel, took the stand Wednesday and accused the former chief of having aided in forming an alibi for him.

"Stay with it," Streitenberger said Lengel told him the day after the murder when the former policeman told the chief of the "sick dog" alibi, framed to place Streitenberger and Louis Mazer away from the scene of the murder.

Streitenberger said he made several trips to Canton from Springfield, Ohio, where he moved after he was dismissed from the police force, to confer with Lengel. The witness said that he was sure he would be indicted and received the chief's advice to "go to the penitentiary and keep your mouth shut and I'll do everything I can to help you get out."

The former policeman testified that Lengel was told of the plot to "beat up" Mr. Mellett which resulted in his murder, and that Lengel said:

"Good, it's what the blank blank deserves."

Lengel, he charged, also participated in several conferences at which alibis were made for all those who might come under suspicion as participants in the conspiracy.

Mrs. Florence E. Mellett, widow of the slain publisher, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Vail, friends who were visiting at their house on the night of the murder, and Coroner T. C. McQuate were among the witnesses Wednesday.

The case was expected to go to the jury late this week.

FIGHTING TO MAKE POLICE RECORDS PUBLIC

THE Sterling (Col.) Advocate on Wednesday lost the first round of its battle to force Police Magistrate D. C. Smith to make public the records of his court.

Judge Smith recently announced that inasmuch as the citizens of Sterling "are just one big family," and because he doesn't want the "family skeletons" exposed to public view, he would make known only to the mayor the happenings of his court.

The Advocate immediately brought its editorial writers into action in an effort to make the records accessible to its reporters but the judge was adamant.

Publisher J. J. Woodring and Editor A. M. Biggerstaff on Wednesday made formal demand upon Smith for access to his court records.

Judge Smith refused. Woodring intimated that court action was probable.

DENIES JAMES G. SCRIPPS WAS FATHER'S PARTNER

Robert Paine Scripps Files Answer to Suit for Accounting Brought by Josephine Scripps

General denial that the late James G. Scripps was a partner of his father, Edward W. Scripps, who died March, 1926, was entered by Robert Paine Scripps, trustee and executor of the will of his father, in an answer filed in United States District Court, Cincinnati, July 6.

The answer was to a suit brought by Josephine Scripps, Miramar, Cal., executrix of the estate of her husband, James G. Scripps, who died in 1921. She asked for an accounting for about $13,000,000, contending her husband had entered into a partnership agreement with his father in 1908 through which he was to receive 33 1/3 per cent of the earnings of Scripps' papers which was to be increased to 50 per cent from 1914. Robert Scripps denied there was a partnership or a promise of partnership.

He said in his answer that James G. Scripps was paid a large salary to carry on the work of his father, and he also denied that there ever had been agreement determining the value of the various Scripps papers and denied that James G. Scripps was entitled to any share of the profits of the papers.

SEEKING TO CLARI MARRIAGE LAW

Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-A can Ask Ruling from Attorne General to Abolish Secrecy

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISH

WATERBURY, Conn., July 14.—E of the Waterbury Republican an Waterbury American to obtain a r from Attorney General Benjamin A on the refusal of certain town cler the State to make marriage inter public apparently are going to bear The Attorney General, in a state made public Tuesday, indicated th will give Dr. Stanley P. Osborn, commissioner of health, an opinio the matter within a few days.

The last general assembly pass revised marriage license law, eff July 1, making it compulsory fo couples intending to marry to file intentions five days before they obt their license. In revising the old the legislators forgot to insert a vision making the marriage inter public records by specific letter o law. When the new law went int fect several town clerks balked at ing out the information to the pointing out that the law did not re them to. After Town Clerk Shiller, Jr., of Naugatuck, annou that he would not make the inter public several other clerks fell in with his stand, including the clerk Torrington, Plymouth, Danbury Thompsonville.

Dr. William C. Welling, directo the state department of vital stati declared that he would not authoriz clerks to employ secrecy in handlin marriage intentions, although he not instruct them specifically to them out. On the return of Dr. Os from an extended absence from state the matter was taken up with by the Republican and the Ame Dr. Osborn said that a formal comp of the failure of the clerks to mak intentions public would be welco The newspapers filed the complaint Dr. Osborn immediately asked the torney General for a ruling that w indicate the law.

Attorney General Alling has al indicated that he believes the inte the legislature was to halt hasty riages and give relatives, etc., a ch to protest against marriages that sh not take place. Unless publicity given the intentions, it is pointed the interested persons will have no of knowing that the marriage inten have been filed and the whole pur of the law will be defeated.

With the interests of law enf ment in mind and not the sole of getting the intentions for their value, the newspapers took up fight.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL GIVEN SHUMAN TROPHY FOR LOCAL CIVIC DRIVE

Campaign to Sell City to Its Citizens Sponsored by Group of Business Men Met with Success—Silver Loving Cup Presented Daily July 8

A CAMPAIGN conducted in the Milwaukee Journal to sell Milwaukee its own citizens this year won the A. Shuman trophy awarded annually by Association of Newspaper Advertis- Executives for the most constructive ry of a newspaper advertising success. The loving cup, donated by A. L. Shu- n, Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, ched the prize-winner on July 8. The ry of the campaign follows:

On the theory that civic interest, like rity, should begin at home, the Milwaukee Journal devised a plan by ich to "sell" the people of Milwaukee the merits of their city.

That the campaign produced satisfac- y results will be seen in the successful ve for industrial promotional funds ducted by the Milwaukee Association Commerce (later described), and by fact that after the first 26 full pages been published, the 50 sponsors who for the space were so well pleased t enough subscriptions were received the Journal to continue the series for additional 26 pages.

The copy carried well executed draw- s and photographs of Milwaukee ks, the zoo, library, museum, churches, ools and colleges. Manufacturing and iness districts and institutions were ted in a similar manner. Good roads streets, sanitation, health records, isement and outdoor sport facilities, nsportation facilities, financial ad- tages and institutions, and Mil- ukee's beautiful residence sections were tten up and illustrated in the series. The copy itself was handled in an in- ational, enthusiasm-breeding manner. instance: It was shown that Mil- ukee had a certain number of industries ch are the largest of their kind in the ld. It was shown how these indus- s contribute to the welfare of every zen and the city at large by bringing ey into Milwaukee from all parts of world—money for the wage earners, in turn use it to purchase com- lities from Milwaukee merchants and rs, thus providing a means of livelih- d and profit for a large portion of lwaukee's citizens.

etailed information on the activities Milwaukee's educational institutions churches, its library, museum and cs, and the benefits derived by Mil- keeans from these institutions were ured in a number of pages.

he entire series was aimed at creating, he minds of the readers, a feeling of idence in Milwaukee and its insti- ons; to make people feel satisfied with r citizenship. It was hoped to ac- plish two things by this, namely:

t. To reduce the migration of peo- to other localities, and

id. To encourage Milwaukeeans to st their money in Milwaukee prop- , or enterprises.

hat the campaign succeeded in both is evident from the fact that Mil- kee's population shows an enormous ease and that its building record ex- s, by far, that of any other period s history. Since the campaign started ning, Milwaukee has added a two mil- dollar hotel, several other hotels in half million or more class, several bank buildings, a half million dollar ge for girls, a million dollar fraternal house, and numerous apartment es, office and store buildings, and ad- ns to industrial and business institu- . Thousands of lots have been sold ew residence and business sections, where only a year ago cow pastures undisputed sway there are now rows rows of bungalows, duplexes and s, owned largely by people who had owned a penny's worth of property Milwaukee's corporate limits twelve hs ago. That the campaign received favorable notice outside of Milwaukee is evident from the large number of letters received from newspapers, manufacturers, professional men and others. These letters came from all parts of the United States.

Perhaps the most remarkable result of the campaign lies in the fact that the merchants and manufacturers themselves were so thoroughly sold on Milwaukee's advantages that the Association of Commerce raised a sum of $300,000 to be used for the purpose of spreading the news of Milwaukee's advantages to all parts of the world with a view of inducing other industries to locate here. This sum was raised by popular subscription and the ready response of the subscribers to an undertaking which had never been considered before, indicates how thoroughly the people are sold on Milwaukee and how general and far reaching is the influence of this campaign.

The cost of the campaign was apportioned equally among 50 subscribers whose names were listed in a panel under the heading, "Civic Leaders." Aside from this, there was nothing in the nature of advertising anything but Milwaukee and its advantages, nothing of any direct commercial value to the sponsors; yet so readily did Milwaukee's industrial and commercial leaders and others see the advantages of the undertaking that the full 50 subscribers were secured by interviewing less than 100 people. Publication of the second series of 26 full pages has now started.

BUSINESS STAFF OUTING

About 90 employes of the Boston (Mass.) Globe counting room and their employes and friends enjoyed an outing recently at Manomet Point, near Plymouth, Mass., it being the fourth annual outing of the group. F. E. Perkins was toastmaster at the shore dinner. Andrew Dazzi was general chairman of the committee in charge. Officials of the paper were among speakers.

DARING SUMMER FLIGHT BY DEMON RE-WRITE MAN

"HAVE been 19 hours without seeing water," telegraphed Herman Gieske, member of the re-write staff of the New York American, now on his annual summer vacation in West Virginia. "See Grover Whalen about reception."

And Martin Dunn, city editor of the American, to whom the telegram was addressed, wired this prompt reply:

"Congratulations. Will see Whalen. Am arranging to have President Coolidge decorate you with rotten tomato."

TO PRINT STARS AND STRIPES

Paris Plant of Chicago Tribune Will Handle Doughboys' Newspaper

The Paris plant of the Chicago Tribune will again publish the Stars and Stripes, which during the war and following the armistice was the official newspaper of the A. E. F., while the American Legion is holding its 1927 convention, Sept. 15 to 25, in Paris.

An arrangement has been made with the European edition of the Chicago Tribune whereby the two newspapers will be published together in the Paris plant of the Tribune and distributed through its circulation channels to the 30,000 sailors, marines and soldiers who are expected to attend the convention. The first four pages, and possibly more, will be given over exclusively to the Legionnaires. On the other pages will be printed the general news and features regularly carried by the edition.

Circulation to the Legionnaires will be free. The combined newspapers will be delivered each morning during the convention to the hotels and pensions in which the delegates are to be billeted. All arrangements have been approved by J. H. Hummel, general manager of the European edition.

Il Giornale D'America, a new tabloid daily, has made its appearance in Boston.

FORMER LIGHT OWNERS SUING W. R. HEARST

Diehl and Beach of San Antonio Asking $59,466 Each as Part of Purchase Price of Daily

Each charging failure on the part of William Randolph Hearst to execute and deliver a note for $50,000 as part of the purchase price of stock in the San Antonio Light Publishing Company, Charles S. Diehl and Harrison L. Beach, former publishers of the Light, have filed in 73d district court, San Antonio, suit for $59,466.67 each, which includes interest from May 12, 1924. The petitions, filed by the San Antonio law firm of Boyle, Ezzell & Grover, also pray for all costs, general relief, etc. They give notice that plaintiffs "will apply for a writ of attachment against the property of said defendant in Bexar County, Texas, and for a writ of garnishment to be served upon the said Light Publishing Company to ascertain what effects belonging to the said defendant it has in its hands, and to what extent the said defendant is the owner of shares of stock in the said corporation, or has an interest therein." Thereafter, plaintiffs ask, on trial of the cause, "for the establishment and foreclosure of the attachment and garnishment lien," etc.

Kendall B. Cressy, San Antonio representative of the Hearst general management, informally gave it as his opinion that the suits were technical in nature.

John Boyle, one of counsel for plaintiffs, said he had heard that Mr. Hearst's alleged refusal to execute and deliver the notes above mentioned grew out of Hearst's claims of breach of warranty.

NEW MEDIATOR ASKED

No Settlement Yet in Telegraph Wage Dispute

Both sides in the wage scale discussions between press associations and the telegraphers' union this week appealed to the bureau of conciliation of the Department of Labor for a new mediator to settle differences looking toward a new wage contract to replace the scale that expired July 1.

WORK TO START SOON ON NEW HOUSTON PRESS PLANT

BIDS are being received at Houston by W. C. Mayborn, manager, southwestern division, Scripps-Howard newspapers, for the Houston Press' new $500,000 publishing plant. General contract will be awarded about July 25.

Mayborn had planned to have the plant in readiness for operation by Nov. 1, but will be delayed about a month or 40 days, it was stated. Contract for excavation for the two-story and basement reinforced concrete, hollow tile and stucco building already has been let, on a cost plus basis.

The new structure will be of Spanish design and, in addition to the basement and two stories, will have a small tower constituting the third floor above the main entrance to the building, which will be the private office of M. E. Foster, editor of the Press.

The plant will be 200 feet, 5½ inches in length on Rusk and will be 78 feet deep on Chartres and St. Emanuel streets.

Basement under the building will be used for paper storage and the lower portion of the press room. The presses, however, will be on the first floor level. Newsprint will be fed to them from the basement level. The basement also will contain four turntables and space for four more for possible future expansion.

On the first floor will be located the circulation department, office of the business manager, advertising departments, public lobby, newsboys' room and lockers, auditor's department, cashier, vault, control room and loading platform with canopy.

There will be eight press units, plans indicate. The press room will be 90x36 feet at one corner while business offices will be in the other end of the building.

The editorial department will be located on the second floor, in the north end of the structure. Adjoining will be the telegraph room and telephone switch board room. The engraving department also will be on the second floor, as will be lockers for employes.

A new site, 150x250 feet, was purchased for the Press, April 20, for $90,000.

Statistical Rating of Delaware Counties and Cities for Products of General Appeal, in Six Major Classes of Quality and Cost—An Original Simplified and Tested Formula from Basic Data

All cities of more than 10,000 population, according to latest census estimates, are indicated on this outline map of Delaware.

Base County and Town Map Copyright by American Map Co., N. Y.

DELAWARE'S market story is short, simple and sweet. It ranks 47th in size and 47th in population among the states of the union, it has one large city and a number of small towns, surrounded by fertile farms, or sunning at the water's edge along its 430 miles of coastline. It is a state with 85 per cent of its 2,000 square miles given over to agriculture and three-quarters of the available farm land given over to the production of grain and garden crops.

Its farmers work 100-acre farms and live handsomely. Its city folks have forgotten the Midas wand that the World War waved over them; the great mills of Wilmington that turned out cannon ten years ago long since converted their whirling wheels to the manufacture of laundry machinery, locomotives, fourdrinier machines for the fabrication of newsprint paper, or almost any other kind of heavy machinery than can be used in the works of peace. The humming hives where gun-cotton was once gently shoved off on its journey to European battle fields, now turn's it backward on its course to end its career as a red or blue lacquer for an automobile or a kitchen chair. Delaware finds it as easy to do the works of peace, much more pleasant, and permanent, and in the long run more profitable than its occupation of a decade ago.

The state has its millionaires in unusual number, considering its population, but millionaires alone cannot make a state rank 12 per cent better than the average for the United States in the capacity to purchase high priced luxuries. Delaware does that, as evidenced by the arithmetical and graphic charts which appear on this page. The cities of more than 10,000 population rank well above the average for the United States and the State as a whole rises markedly above the norm. The towns of less than 10,000 population and the rural districts, which normally and naturally have a smaller purchasing power than the concentrated wealth and population of the great cities, in Delaware fall only slightly below the average for the entire country in their power to purchase the best.

Purchasing ability of each county and city in the state are presented in tabular form on this page under the six headings which represent various classes of product according to value. The formula has been described fully in several of the eight articles which have preceded this one, each article being devoted to one of the New England or Middle Atlantic States. The series will continue until data on the consumer buying ability of each of the 48 states and its principal political subdivisions have been presented.

Detroit News Gain In Local Advertising Between 1921 & 1926 4,305,000 LINES Week Days

2nd Evening Medium's Gain

Above are shown the relative volume of gains in local merchant's weekday advertising made by the two Detroit evening newspapers. A glance shows The Detroit News to be increasingly the favorite medium of those on the ground who are best qualified to judge. The Detroit News not only leads in local merchants' advertising but leads the field in advertising as a whole. Its thorough coverage of the Detroit market has made it the preferred medium for the sale of any goods destined for the home whose buying guide it has been for 54 years.

Six to One

In practically every class of local advertising The Detroit News is the outstanding leader. Not only does The Detroit News regularly carry more local advertising than both other Detroit newspapers combined, but during the five years between 1921 and 1926 it gained 4,305,000 lines of local advertising—a gain more than six times that made by the present second evening paper over the second evening paper of five years ago.

This gain indicates increasing concentration of local advertising into The Detroit News and there can only be one reason for such mass concentration—which is results.

In the employment of advertising media the Detroit merchant has eliminated the rule of thumb forever. His choice of media is governed by actual results per dollar spent and the cash register stands immutable guard against individual vagaries, prejudices and unscientific judgment.

BAILLIE, BENDER AND MILLER ARE PROMOTED BY UNITED PRESS

Latter Named to Board of Directors, Former Are Elected Vice-Presidents—All Have Long Services With Press Association

THE election of Hugh Baillie and Robert J. Bender as vice-presidents of the United Press Associations was announced this week by Karl A. Bickel, president.

HUGH BAILLIE

R. J. BENDER

At the same time Mr. Bickel announced the election to the board of directors of James I. Miller, vice-president in charge of South American service.

No change in the operating personnel of the United Press is contemplated by this move, said Mr. Bickel. Baillie will continue in general charge of business activities of the organization, and Bender as head of the news departments. Since May 1, 1926, Bender has been general news manager and Baillie general business manager of the United Press.

"Creation of these two vice-presidencies," said Mr. Bickel, "first of all is in recognition of twelve years of hard and constant and intelligent work in the organization by both Mr. Bender and Mr. Baillie. Although it means no change in the operating staff of the United Press, they will now be able to take over a large part of the purely corporate administrative work."

The careers of Bender and Baillie have closely paralleled each other, although during very little time of the nearly 12 years each has been with the United Press have they actually worked together.

Hugh Baillie joined the United Press in San Francisco in March, 1915, after six years of general newspaper experience, principally on the old Los Angeles Herald and the Los Angeles Record.

After working under J. H. Furay, at that time Pacific Coast manager, Baillie was placed in charge of the Los Angeles bureau.

From Los Angeles Baillie was transferred to San Francisco for a few months, and thence to Portland, where he became manager in July, 1916, and remained until March, 1917. The next move was to Chicago, then a shift to New York on rewrite and general assignments. After a few months in New York and Washington Baillie took hold of the New York news desk and held it during the closing year of the war.

In July, 1919, Baillie was made manager of the Washington bureau, succeeding Bender, who went to New York to open the United News. Baillie accompanied President Wilson on his last tour of the country which ended with the president's collapse at Wichita.

The following year Baillie headed the U. P. staff at the Republican and Democratic national conventions, writing the running story on a noiseless typewriter direct from the "ringside."

After the campaign Baillie became news manager of the United Press, a position which he held until 1924 when he entered the business end—being succeeded by Bender as news manager. In the fall of that same year Baillie took charge of the sales department and early in 1926 was appointed general business manager.

Robert J. Bender's early life was spent entirely within smelling distance of printer's ink. His father, Victor E. Bender, was publisher successively of the Omaha Mercury, a legal newspaper, the Council Bluffs (Ia.) Nonpareil, and the Springfield (Ill.) News.

Bender went to work with the United Press in September, 1915, after several years of experience on his father's newspapers. After a brief stay in the New York office of the United Press, he went to Washington, where he soon won a reputation as a writer on politics.

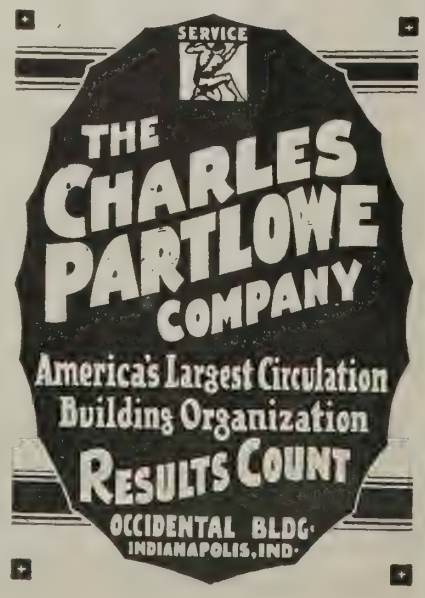
Early in 1917 Bender was appointed manager of the Washington bureau. At the close of the war he went with President Wilson to Paris.

In June, 1919, Bender went to New York as editor of the United News, the new night wire service of the United Press. After the establishment of this service he went back to Washington in general charge of the Washington day and night services.

As the night service expanded, Bender was brought to New York and succeeded Fred Ferguson as news manager of the night wires when Ferguson became vice-president of the United Press in charge of news. To round out his training for his present duties, Bender next became news manager of the day service when Baillie became sales manager.

From this post, Bender succeeded to the general news managership of all United Press services when Fred S. Ferguson resigned from the United Press to accept the presidency of the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

James I. Miller joined the United Press foreign organization in February of 1918 at Buenos Aires when he took over management of the Buenos Aires bureau. He had then lived in Argentina for seven years and had acquired a fluent knowledge of Spanish.



In 1919 he was placed in charge of United Press business in South America. In 1922 he was sent on a six months' trip of inspection of the United Press bureaus in Europe and the United States. Shortly after his return to Buenos Aires in December of 1922 his election as vice-president and general South American manager of the U. P. was announced.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

LED ASTRAY BY F. P. A.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Your editorial comment on the use of "headlinese" cites the phrase "Lndbergh Spurns Dayton Reception" in the New York Evening Post as an example of misleading phraseology.

Your main contention that the general prevalence of headline slang is objectionable is, of course, obvious and justified.

It seems unfortunate that you did not check on your facts, however, because in taking Mr. Franklin P. Adams' word in the matter you made EDITOR & PUBLISHER party to his error and did the Evening Post an injustice.

Had you and Mr. Adams read the story in question carefully, you would have found that Colonel Lindbergh arrived in Dayton unaware of any large reception plans. There he learned that 50,000 people had been waiting four hours for a glimpse of him. The chairman of the reception committee requested only that he pass through the main business street so that the crowd might not be disappointed. This Col. Mr. Adams' paragraph commentin the headline seems to have been b upon a careless reading of the st which was perhaps colored by his o expressed admiration for Lindber impatience with official receptions. Increasing Display Linage Fortunate and successful is the advertising manager who knows there is adequate Ludlow equipment back in the composing room. He knows he is safe in selling more than mere space. He sells quality advertisements—and he knows he can deliver them.

The old days have gone forever when advertiser after advertiser was disappointed in the ads as they appeared in the paper. The Ludlow has banished all that. Advertisers now are not only willing but glad to use more space when they are sure of the attractive, clean-cut kind of advertisements the Ludlow system makes possible.

Ludlow typefaces, harmoniously set, lift advertisements far above the commonplace and give them added attractiveness and selling power. Shrewd advertisers know this and more and more of them are insisting on the typographical excellence which Ludlow equipment helps to provide.

The newspaper executive progressive enough to recognize the value of this superior service to the advertiser is reaping a deserved reward in the form of greater linage.

Let us send you complete information about the many interesting and money-making features of the Ludlow system of composition.

Ludlow typelines are slug-cast from hand-set matrices in sizes from 6 to 84 point without mold or machine changes.

That is the conclusion drawn from the erience in Los Angeles of Neale, Inc., nufacturers of luminous tube electric ns and exclusive Western licensee of Rinbow Light, Inc.

Entering the columns of The Examiner Los Angeles with some skepticism as whether or not their proper medium s a newspaper, insofar as Nealite Sns are limited in purchase to operators business organizations, the firm has ce become enthusiastic over results.

Exclusive in Examiner

Here is a letter that Edward G. Neale, sident of Neale, Inc., wrote us re- tly, and which we think is particularly resting to all newspaper publishers advertising agents, as possibly open- up new avenues of business-getting their customers and clients. Nealite advertised exclusively in The Exami- r.

It is a source of wonder to us that did not realize the possibilities in ng your medium for advertising our duct a long time ago. To the best our knowledge, newspaper advertising never been used to sell electric signs.

It was only after your representative d pointed out to us the possibilities of medium that we were convinced ugh to make the test. The results e certainly been more than satisfying.

sults Win Classified Leadership for Examiner

HERE can be no ifs, ands or buts with classified advertisers. They state r wants in the morning and expect on in the afternoon, or mighty soon eafter. That's why classified adver- sig has always been considered, by e buyers, as a valuable key to even purchase of display space.

It has to be, to build up a ified clientele like it has.

In Beverly Hills

BEVERLY HILLS, home of 110 of the screen's greatest stars, and whose tree-lined boulevards and sloping hillsides have attracted the homes of many of the Southland's wealthiest people, has a population of about 15,000. It is one of the richest communities in the Examiner region, newly-defined "city shopping area," in which this newspaper's Sunday coverage is so great as to embrace 87 out of every 100 families. The illustration is typical of how the hills of Beverly have been converted into charmingly landscaped terrain and magnificent estates.

92% of Failures in L. A. Among Non-Advertisers

NINETY-TWO per cent of the failures in Los Angeles since the first of 1927, were non-advertisers!

Those are the interesting figures revealed recently, following a careful check through the Federal Bankruptcy courts in this city.

The average percentage of failures made by non-advertisers in thirty-two cities of the United States, 83.6, indicating that in the Los Angeles field it is perhaps a trifle more necessary to business success to meet competition with competition, to declare one's self to newcoming population, and to hold old friends, while making new.

Los Angeles Business Is Good in First Five Months

LOS ANGELES business showed a 5 to 15% increase for the first five months of 1927, according to a report to the Pacific Coast Transportation Advisory Board. The report was compiled by leading bankers, business men and agriculturists of Southern California.

Outstanding in the report are the following facts:

The largest Valencia orange crop in the Southland's history.

Spring building in Los Angeles ahead of 1926.

Best deciduous fruit crop for several years with an expected increase of 12,000 cars for the year.

Agriculture outlook very promising.

Los Angeles' Harbor shipments show a steady increase.

WM. RANKIN MAN IN PRAISE OF SERVICE

THERE is as much difference between The Los Angeles Examiner's Merchandising Service, and that of ordinary newspapers, as there is between the two legs of Paavo Nurmi, and the two legs of a Jersey commuter. They look alike, but one gets there a lot more rapidly and surely, than the other.

An we do not make that statement as a mere boast. H. A. Groth, vice-president and treasurer of the William H. Rankin Company, Chicago, New York, Toronto, San Francisco, Akron and Washington, has had some contact with Merchandising Service Departments over a long and varied experience. Here's what he writes us, under date of June 20:

Most Complete of Many

"I certainly want to congratulate you on your Merchandising Department and I want to say to you frankly that, of all the reports we have received, yours is the most complete and most instructive, and we have received them from all parts of the country."

The head of our Merchandising Service Department recently was extremely helpful to the Hoffman Heater Company of Louisville, Kentucky, in addressing a gathering of their Los Angeles dealers. D. F. White, Los Angeles Manager of the company, in expressing his appreciation of this out-of-the-ordinary service, wrote:

"It is needless to say that we can readily see why good business merchants place their advertising with your paper and obtain the splendid results from same which we are now experiencing with the ads we are running in your paper."

The Hoffman Heater advertising appears exclusively in The Examiner in this territory.

The EXAMINER has the largest home-delivered circulation of ANY newspaper in Los Angeles!

DECISION IN $50,000 LIBEL SUIT EXPECTED TO CLARIFY S. C. LAW

Judges Now Considering Appeal of Columbia Record and Local Capitalist from $50,000 Award Based on Printing of Letter

BEFORE the state supreme court of South Carolina is one of the most important libel suits ever brought in the state. A decision on the appeal will probably be rendered during the next month or so.

The case is that of T. C. Duncan, of Union, S. C., against the Record Publishing Company, publishers of the Columbia Record and the Sunday Record, and Edwin W. Robertson, president of the National Loan & Exchange Bank and utilities owner. Duncan sued for $50,000 and the circuit court jury rendered a verdict for the full amount. The Record and Robertson appealed. The appeal was heard in November, 1925. Last month the court ordered a rehearing, two justices of the four who heard the case having decided one way and two the other. The re-argument was heard on Wednesday of last week.

Duncan sued as the result of the publication in the Record of a facsimile letter written by him to Robertson, asking for a loan of $25,000, at the time Duncan was serving on the state's canal commission, which was negotiating for a settlement of a legal controversy over the Columbia canal, owned by the Columbia utilities company, of which Robertson was president. The loan was refused. Duncan claimed that the publication of the letter was intended to convey the idea that he had laid himself open to bribery.

For a third of a century the Columbia canal cutting through a part of the city, had been the subject of litigation, involving the completion of a canal started a half century before. The canal commission created to effect a settlement of the controversy over the ditch was created by the legislature of 1923. The act creating it was approved March 26, 1923. Duncan's letter to Robertson was written March 28, 1923. The first meeting of the commission was held April 13, 1923.

In the legislature of 1924, Duncan, in the senate, made a speech, in which he denounced the Columbia newspapers an Robertson, charging bribery and collusion between Robertson and the press t urge a settlement of the canal case. A proposition had been made the state by Stone & Webster, to purchase the canal and thereby end the long controversy. The canal commission had refused the offer, whereas the Columbia newspapers and commercial organizations had urged it. In his denunciation of Robertson Duncan, the records in the case set forth, referred to the banker and utilities owner as a "ghoul" and an "octopus," and one "feeding on dead men's bones." He declared that Robertson had done nothing for the development of Columbia or South Carolina.

The report of Duncan's speech was published on page one of the Record and Robertson gave the paper the letter he had received from Duncan nearly a year before, with regard to the loan. The Record published a facsimile copy of the letter on page one the same day, and under the letter gave a few facts concerning Duncan's appointment to the canal commission.

Duncan claimed that he was damaged by the publication. The suit was tried in Columbia in May, 1925, before Judge W. H. Townsend. The appeal was heard the following November.

Two opinions were prepared by members of the court, one by Associate Justice J. H. Marion of Chester affirming the lower court, and in this Chief Justice R. C. Watts of Laurens, concurred. The other opinion, by Associate Justice T. P. Cothran of Greenville was for a reversal of the lower court and in this Acting Associate Justice R. O. Purdy of Sumter concurred. There was a vacancy on the court at the time the arguments were heard, and the tie decision made it necessary that the case be re-argued.

In his opinion sustaining Duncan's complaint, Justice Marion dwelt at length on the alleged innuendo contained in the publication of the letter. He held that though the facts were correct and the letter was Duncan's the bribery inference could be gathered from the publication and was damaging.

Justice Cothran took the position that if Duncan was damaged, he damaged himself, as he was author of the letter. He also held that Robertson was justified in giving the letter for publication, as a defense against the charges made against him by the senator.

This case is regarded as of prime importance in South Carolina, as a classification and declaration of the libel law.

A. S. N. E. MAY INVITE OUTSIDE SPEAKERS

Half of Next Convention Time Will Be Given to Other Than Newspaper Men if Members Approve Suggestion

Half of the time at the next meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors may be given over to hearing men not in the newspaper profession according to a suggestion made to the program committee, the membership of which was announced this week by Grove Patterson, Toledo Blade, committee chairman.

The new members of the society's program committee are William Allen White, Emporia Gazette; Herbert Bayard Swope, New York World; Willis J. Abbot, Christian Science Monitor; M. W. Bingay, Detroit News; and David Lawrence, United States Daily.

Mr. Patterson declared that he himself liked the idea of having outside speakers address the Society's convention and added that if Erie C. Hopwood, Cleveland Plain Dealer, and association president and the committee agree with him they will proceed on that basis.

"These outsiders are not to be bouquet flingers," Mr. Patterson explained. "They are to be men outstanding in their own lines and they will come before us on the understanding that they are to say exactly as they think, printable or unprintable. They are to tell us just where they think we are wrong. We need the viewpoint of the honest outsider —of brains.

"These men must be big, thoughtful men. Otherwise we do not care what they think. Let us hear, what, if anything, is the matter with the newspaper business from those who are looking at it from outside."

NEWS AGENT LOSES SUIT

Must Pay £100 for Selling Paper Containing a Libel

LONDON, July 2.—Damages assessed at £100 were recently awarded Benjamin William Batten, secretary of the London branch of the British Musicians' Union, against the Pall Mall Deposit and Forwarding Company, Ltd., London, for an alleged libelous paragraph which appeared in an issue of Variety, an American journal, of Aug. 25, 1926. The firm had been warned of libelous matter that had appeared in the previous issue of August 18, but had overlooked similar matter in the next issue.

The judge, in summing up, said that the law was that the distributors of a newspaper containing prima facie libel could escape liability if they could prove that they sold the newspaper in the ordinary course of their business, and without negligence on their part they did not know that it contained a libel, nor was likely to contain one.

The jury might think, however, that defendants had been altogether too casual in dealing with the issue of Variety, after being warned that the previous issue contained a libel.

WHAT PEOPLE TALK ABOUT AND READ WHILE TRAVELING IN SUMMER

Editor & Publisher, Eavesdropper, On Board Overland Limited, Finds Mr. Public Optimistic Over Business Conditions—Reading Matter High Class Despite Hot Weather

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

EDITORS, according to common belief, are notoriously given to eavesdropping. They want, so they say, to learn what people are talking about in order to guage what the public wants.

Perhaps a good place for this sort of clinical endeavor on the part of the editorial profession is on board an overland limited. There, with nothing to do but read or talk, the people are at the mercy of the stalking newspaper man, who can hide behind his cigar, and, if his ears and eyes are good, catch something of a picture of Mr. Public.

Seeds at least of editorial ideas were to be found in what was overheard and seen by an EDITOR & PUBLISHER eavesdropper on a recent trip from New York to Atlanta.

Mr. Public as represented by the hundred or more under the microscope is, it was found, a wide awake, intelligent person who wants his information straight and knows when its the bunk. He reads his paper from beginning to end, with an eye especially open for information that may help him in his own business, and after that reads magazines and much of the current literature.

Shrewd editors have sometimes commented on the tendency of their craft to underestimate the intelligence of newspaper readers. On the train traveled by this eavesdropper there was the usual display of newspapers and popular magazines sprinkled on the car seats, but there were books also that require some brain power to get through during this summer season, when chatter and reading matter is generally supposed to be as light and filmy as a modern woman's gown.

A few of the titles may surprise editors accustomed to judge the hoi polloi by comic strip standards. There were, scattered in a dozen cars, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," by Frederic Nietzsche; "This Believing World" by Browne; "Minds in the Making", Robinson; "Marching On", Ernest Boyd; "Washington", by W. E. Woodward; "Lincoln", by Carl Sandburg; Ibanez latest novel in Spanish; "Elmer Gantry", by Sinclair Lewis; and "Oil", by Upton Sinclair.

In the talk overheard there was one topic all groups eventually came to—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. They praised him to the skies, and one or two said credit was probably also due to Ambassador Myron T. Herrick. Mississippi flood was only mentioned once in the hearing of this writer. Then the speaker said newspapers were exaggerating the damage.

"Big store-keepers", he said, "had their money in the bank, and it wasn't drowned. A great deal of the stuff reported destroyed can be and will be salvaged."

Nobody, as far as could be learned, was interested in the Chinese war.

"Business in the South is going to be good," was overheard. "I look for a clean up this fall."

"This New South is the goods, it's no bunk. The reason for the prosperity as I see it is the continued high prices for cotton despite the big crop last year. Before the war prices were 3 cents. That later jumped to 45 cents. Farmers think it's still good when the offering, as it is now, is 17 cents a pound. And it is good. The farmers have paid what they owe and the big crops aren't hurting them."

Business generally was good, the talkers conceded.

Three women and one man in one group chattered about:

The "floating population" that "presents a problem in every city;" "reclamation of waste lands in the west"; how people live in different sections of the country; books they were reading and why they liked them; high prices paid at night clubs and how little they got for their money; children, and how hard it is to get people to take care of them.

It was the man who brought up the subject of how people live in different sections of the country, as though he were suggesting a Sunday feature. He himself, he said, was a New York suburbanite. He left his home on Long Island at 8 every morning and was in his office by nine. When he lived in uptown New York he didn't do much better. The women were interested. They told about people they knew, how near or how far they lived from work.

Conversation shifted from New York to California and there was a lengthy delineation of compact California bungalows, with beds hidden behind doors and bureau drawers and sideboards underneath the mattresses.

In a smoking compartment three men discussed various sections of the country. A man who appeared to know about advances made in diversified farming through the south held attention of the others. He also talked agricultural Florida with some emphasis, and the farmer and his woes in general.

"When the farmer prospers, the rest of us prosper" said he, nodding his head.

"Someday they will wake up and find a way to protect themselves against the rascals who buy farm products on consignment at the 25 or so market centers of the country.

"Have you ever seen how these rascals, the middlemen, buy farm products at the gravity siding at Newark, N. J. They are the ones that make all the profit. They set prices arbitrarily. They make their offers before opening the freight car doors.

"I recall when Georgia unfortunately glutted the market with peaches. The public didn't get any benefit from the big supply. The middlemen saw to it that the prices to the consumer were held at the regular level. The farmer got it in the neck.

"A friend of mine, a Georgia farmer, got a wire from a middleman in New Jersey, offering him a ridiculously low price for a carload of nuts, saying they were all worm eaten. The farmer didn't answer the telegram. He got out his gun and boarded the next train.

" 'Come on,' he said to the fellow who was trying to gyp him. 'Let me see that car.'

"It hadn't been opened. The farmer insisted on being present at the opening. The cargo was in fine shape and my friend got a fair price.

"But all farmers can't take this kind of drastic action. I think what they'll finally get will be action by the government furnishing them with federal inspectors who will keep check on all market centers and see to it the farmers get a fair price."

Food and prices for food is a subject all newspaper readers are interested. In some time there has been no outstanding newspaper feature series dealing with the situation indicated by the speaker on the Piedmont Limited. A reporter might find something interesting to write about, if this Pullman talker had the facts straight.

One trio of men whiled away at least 10 minutes figuring out distances between cities. People long out of school, it appeared, may continue to be interested in geography. Some way might be found to refresh memories of schoolbook maps. People with automobiles today are keen for this sort of information.

"Wonder what we can expect from Henry Ford" was a frequently overheard query. In answer some allowed Henry would give the public a Packard, while others said it would be hard to change the present old flivver for anything better at the price.

Chain stores, their growth and power, started an argument in one car that rivaled the war in China. There was the same cry of "Out with the foreigners! Out with foreign capital! Let the local citizens make their legitimate profit, instead of sending the money from Blankton to New York in an iron box."

The observer noticed in the buttonhole of one of the arguers an A. & P. emblem. To those who didn't notice he loudly claimed association with the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea organization.

"There are some 16,000 A. & P. stores now," he said. "And we are going to open two or three thousand more in the next few years. I attribute the success of our organization to the fact that we take young men, train them right, give them a good salary with commissions, and back them up with good merchandise bought in quantity at low prices, brought to the attention of large n bers of people through daily newsp advertising."

Jury service they had seen was for some hot air explosions in one g of five. They remembered publicly most ribald cases, such as suits alle defamation of character in which woman called another a shorter w than prostitute.

Disease to two men of fifty or bey was decidedly bannerline news. A talking lugubriously for 10 minutes the "White Plague", one wound up conversation saying:

"Only the well people ever think ab dying; sick people are too busy figu out how to get well."

These men went into ghastly de describing the courses of various eases, the victims of which they kn Other conversationalists on the bri June day amply corroborated the c mon editorial theory that news is the usual, the unique.

Simple, Sensible, and Easy to Read

BENJAMIN SHERBOW, in his lifetime, achieved a knowledge of advertising typography that has been privileged to few men. He studied his subject from the many angles suggested by both theory and practice. He gained a familiarity with all of its many ramifications, and yet he was able to reduce the burden of his findings to a single sentence.

"The main thing," said Sherbow, "is simplicity, readableness, and the avoidance of freakishness." That advertisement was conspicuous, in his opinion, which had the advantage of being "simple, sensible, and easy to read."

The Distinguished Newspaper, while applying this yardstick to all advertising it produces for its customers, lays especial emphasis upon its application to department store advertisements. There are two outstanding reasons back of this policy, the first of which is the miscellaneous nature of the advertising itself. Only through a simple, sensible treatment can it attain the effectiveness that will make it profitable for the advertiser. Second comes the fact that such treatment aids in reducing production expense and in turn enables the advertiser to divert the resultant savings to the purchase of additional space.

The next two pages offer a department store advertisement that graphically demonstrates the two foregoing points. For effectiveness it was arranged in Narciss, Cloister and Cloister Bold types. For economy it was completely set the Linotype Way.

The Linotype Way to Advertising Profits

The newspaper that handles its advertising composition the Linotype Way is following a road that leads to many profits. The arresting, legible type faces on Linotype matrices make it an easy matter to produce effective advertisements, advertisements of the sort that help distinguish a newspaper as a medium and increase the value of its space.

Even more tangible are the mechanical economies of Linotype composition. Rapid setting and casting and make-up speeded by the handling of full-line slugs show an actual dollars and cents saving over the usual, less efficient composing methods. They cut production expense to the point where the newspaper can afford to pass a portion of its savings back to the advertiser, certain that the latter will employ them in the purchase of additional space which will pay another profit to the publisher.

It is because of these accumulative profits that The Distinguished Newspaper has adopted Linotype methods. It is through them that it makes a well-paying venture of its policy of giving customers advertisements that are "simple, sensible, and easy to read."

[BLISHERS FIGHTING FREIGHT RATE IISE INVOLVING SOUTHERN PAPERS

ee-Day Hearing Held in Washington—General Attack on All Rates South May Be Launched—10-Cent Increase Asked

.SHINGTON, July 14.—The en- tire freight rate structure on news- paper from New England and lian mills to southern cities is in- d in the case of the proposed in- e in rates from Canadian points to sville, Tenn. Hearings for three were concluded on Thursday before iner Carney, of the Interstate Com- Commission, during which time varied interests appeared to testify ever before in a southern newsprint ase.

general attack on all rates to the is under consideration. It is ex- d that a petition for a general in- gation will be filed soon by the ican Newspaper Publishers Asso- n and the Southern Newspaper shers Association in behalf of their ership in the states involved east of Mississippi, and south of the Ohio Potomac rivers. This move, it is ght, will be supported by the principal facturers in New England and da.

chnically the hearings this week on the proposed increase from 47 to 57 cents from Canadian points ashville without increasing the rate same amount from New England s. Actually the evidence introduced d throughout the south with particu- mphasis on the rates proposed and in existence to Memphis of 48 cents; nts to Knoxville; 57 cents to Atlanta 53 cents to Lynchburg.

ur orders of the Interstate Com- e Commission are in existence which shers and manufacturers claim are nflict. A decision in the Knoxville said the Knoxville rate should not igher than the Nashville rate with result that the present case started h the carriers increased the Nashville to 57 cents and reduced the Knox- rate from 60 cents to 57 cents. ther decision stated the rate from Canadian points shall not be higher to Nashville and Memphis than from New England points, although the carriers now propose an increase to 57 cents and 61 cents from Canadian points with no equivalent increase from New England mills. Another decision provided the Nashville rate shall not be higher than the Memphis rate although a rate of 48 cents to Memphis is now in existence via the Illinois Central Railroad against the proposed 57 cents to Nashville. Still another decision stipulated the Birmingham rate shall not be more than 1 cent higher than the Nashville rate but the Birmingham rate is 61 cents and only a 57 cents rate to Nashville is proposed.

The carriers, are not a unit in their views, as the New England lines have declined to publish tariffs authorizing increases. The Southern and L. & N. railroads have fought for a 57 cents rate to Nashville and a 61 cents to Memphis, while the Illinois Central says it is satisfied with a 47 cents rate to Nashville and 48 cents to Memphis.

Three Boston Reporters Appear Before Governor's Committee

Three Boston newspaper reporters appeared this week before the special commission appointed by Governor Alvan T. Fuller to make an independent investigation of the Sacco-Vanzetti murder case. The commission comprises President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, Pres. S. W. Stratton of Massachusetts Institute Technology and Judge Robert Grant.

Miss Elizabeth Berankopf and Frank P. Silbey, of the Boston Globe, who had submitted affidavits regarding Judge Webster Thayer, before whom Sacco and Vanzetti were tried and convicted, were interviewed by the committee.

Another Globe man, Timothy J. Collins, that paper's Quincy district man, also appeared before the committee. He was the first newspaper man at the scene of the murder seven years ago.

100 BRITISH EDITORS TO VISIT CANADA

Large Party Will Arrive in Quebec Aug. 12 and Travel to Pacific and Back—Sailing for Home Sept. 8

One of the most important parties to visit Canada during the coming summer will be a group of British newspaper publishers and editors who will visit this country next August, with the intention of traveling to the Pacific Coast and back. It is expected the party will number about 100 representing a large number of British provincial newspapers.

The visit follows upon a trip to Great Britain made two years ago by members of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association. The Canadian editors awakened in the minds of their British confreres a great interest in Canada and things Canadian—the tour is the result.

The editors, many of whom will be accompanied by their wives, will arrive at Quebec on the Canadian Pacific steamer Montrose on Aug. 12, and on the 14th will board a special Canadian Pacific train which will be their home for the ensuing five or six weeks. Arrangements have been made whereby they will be entertained by the Dominion Government at Ottawa, and by the governments of each of the provinces they pass through, and the mayors of the cities where they stop.

From Quebec the party will go to St. John, N. B., arriving there on Aug. 15. They will visit the Algonquin Hotel at St. Andrews, N. B., and will arrive at Montreal on the morning of the 17th. From here they will go to Ottawa and on the way west will visit Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Kamloops, arriving at Vancouver on August 25.

After a visit to Victoria on Aug. 27 the party will set out for the East, visiting Vernon, B. C., Lake Louise, Banff, Calgary, Regina, Fort William and arriving at Toronto on the morning of Sept. 5, when the train will be parked at the Exhibition grounds, giving the visitors an opportunity thoroughly to inspect the Exhibition. There will be a side trip to Niagara Falls and the party will arrive at Montreal on Thursday, Sept. 8, to go on board the Canadian Pacific steamer Montrose for the return trip.

OCCUPIES NEW PLANT

The Madison (Wis.), Capital-Times on Tuesday, July 5, printed its first editions in its new building, the transfer from the former building having been accomplished over the July 4 week-end. Practically all new machinery has been installed in the new home, including a 64-page Hoe press. The Capital-Times was founded ten years ago by William T. Evjue, editor and publisher.

E. J. Mehren, vice-president of the McGraw-Hill Publishing Company, returned this week from the Economic Conference at Geneva.

24 U. S. EDITORS SAIL TO STUDY EUROPE

Will Spend Two Months Abroad as Guests of Carnegie Endowment for Permanent Peace

A group of 24 American editors were to sail from New York, July 16 for a two-months' tour of Europe as guests of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Prior to embarkation, the editors were to be entertained at a luncheon given in New York on Friday this week by officers of the Carnegie foundation.

Officers of the Endowment have arranged detailed plans for the reception of the editors in London, Paris, The Hague, Berlin, Prague, Budapest, Vienna, Munich and Geneva. Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the Endowment, plans to greet the editorial writers upon their arrival in London, July 25.

A luncheon for the editors will be given in the office of the London Times, July 26. In the evening they will be guests of honor at a dinner given by the Pilgrim Society. This will be followed later by a supper in the office of the London Daily Telegraph.

The proposed program for the editors in London will be strenuous for the few days they will be in England. On July 27 they are to be the guests of honor at a luncheon given by the Institute of Journalists and this will be followed by a dinner tendered them by the English-Speaking Union. The next day a reception will be given at the Foreign Office on Downing Street to meet Sir Austen Chamberlain. The Newspaper Proprietors Association will entertain them at a dinner that evening. The following day the entire party will go to Dunford by motor for luncheon with tea later at Cowdray Park.

The party is going to Europe for the purpose of observing existing economic, political and social conditions in various countries.

In Berlin the editors will be given an opportunity to see the progress that has been made in the economic reconstruction of Germany. About two weeks will be spent in Geneva. Conferences have been arranged for them with administration officials of the Universal Postal Union, of the Interparliamentary Union, the International Institute of Agriculture and with the directors and chiefs of the International Labor Office.

The annual meeting of the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations will be in session during the editors' visit to Geneva.

At the Hague the editors will be introduced to members of the Permanent Court of International Justice by Dr. James Brown Scott, director of the Endowment's Division of International Law.

Members of the party and the papers they represent include:

Marshall Ballard, New Orleans Item; Arthur L. Clarke, San Jose (Cal.) Mercury; William F. Cronin, Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune; Thomas J. Dillon, Minneapolis Tribune; Harold Goff, Salt Lake City Deseret News.

OUR OWN WORLD OF LETTERS

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

HOW a newspaper staff is organized is the topic which Lee F. Heacock, editor of the Buffalo Arts Journal, discusses in that periodical for June. In it he tells just those things which the layman ought to know about modern newspaper making.

The article is well illustrated with photographs of Buffalo newspaper folk. First page position is given to James Newson Matthews (1828-1888). Other illustrations show Alfred H. Kirchhofer, managing editor of the Buffalo Evening News, John D. Wells, managing editor of the Buffalo Courier-Express, and W. Nelson Wilkinson, managing editor of the Buffalo Times. These are followed by photographs of the news editors, the city editors, etc. of the various Buffalo dailies. Mary McDonnell, state editor of the Buffalo Courier-Express, heads the list of the women workers represented in the illustrations.

The June article is one of a series having the general title, "The Newspapers of Our Town." The next installment will appear in September, as the Buffalo Arts Journal does not publish in the summer months.

Mr. Heacock also edits a department in the Journal entitled "Anecdotes of Newspaperdom." These anecdotes are real human interest stuff. Here is one credited to John D. Wells, now managing editor of the Courier-Express:

"Years ago when I was 'colyuming' on the Buffalo Evening News the late Edward H. Butler and myself had much inside-the-office sport, matching lines. Mr. Butler was a great improvisor of verse, and moreover he enjoyed the exercise. One day I printed a little quatrain in my column:

" 'It isn't death that worries me,
Nor yet how is it with my soul;
I confess, what flurries me
Is how to get this winter's coal.'

"It was October and unpromising. I don't remember but I daresay the little quatrain was leavened with considerable truth. The next day I met Mr. Butler in the elevator and, slow, like a bullet, he replied:

" 'I beg you don't disturb yourself,
Nor any untoward methods seek,
For I hereby increase your pelf,
Beginning now, ten bones a week.'

"And he did!"

Space can be found for only one more. This will be one dealing with the business office:

On the annual occasion of contract-adjustments between the publishers and the Typographical Union, Norman E. Mack, editor and publisher of the Buffalo Times, is frequently the spokesman for the publishers. On this occasion, the foreman in his own plant was spokesman for the union. With a view to disposing of the matter without delay, Mr. Mack called up the speaking tube to the composing room and asked for the foreman.

"He's not in just now," came the answer.

Thirty minutes later, Mr. Mack tried again with the same result and again half an hour after that. This was a little too much even for the patience of the usually urbane and politic publisher, and he roared through the tube:

"Well, when that confounded, lily-fingered aristocrat does come in, will you tell him to let me know just what office hours he keeps?"

I do hope that Mr. Heacock will tell the story of the story turned in by the Buffalo cub who was promised a job if he could identify the young woman whose body was in the Buffalo morgue. He did and he got his job—but that's another story.

OVER the review of "Five Weeks: The Surge of Public Opinion on the Eve of the Great War" (The John Day Company) by Jonathan French Scott, The Nation in its issue for July 6 puts the head, "Did the Newspapers Make the World War?" This book has already been mentioned as containing a brief summary of newspaper opinion in the various countries taking part in the conflict. It is mentioned again because of the caption which The Nation puts over the review contributed by Harry Elmer Barnes.

IN answer to the question, "From what point does the history of journalism start?" I would say that the first record that put accent on news was unquestionably Acta Diurna Populi Romani which Julius Caeser established in Rome immediately after he became consul in 59 B. C. The best account of this precursor of the newspaper press may be found in "Die römische Staatszeitung and die Acclamationen in Senat" by Otto Hirschfeld.

The news was printed on a white board (album) which was publicly displayed in the Roman Forum. Professional journalists of the day copied these items from the bulletin board and possibly added a few of their own and then sent a written edition to Romans stationed in the provinces. These Roman journalists enjoyed certain special privileges such as a "press gallery" in the Senate. The word diurna is recalled in the earliest English dailies which were called diurnals. Such names through simple phonetic changes in later years became journals.

AMONG the books listed by the Avondale Press of New York is "The Economics of Advertising" by Victor Rosewater.

PERCY H. BOYNTON of the University of Chicago, prints a new study of Lafcadio Hearn in the Virginia Quarterly Review for July. What is said about Hearn's newspaper work in Cincinnati and in New Orleans is worth quoting in "Our Own World of Letters":

His journalistic writing, to judge from the best of it that has been recently reprinted, was facile and fluent, and obvious in its effects as such writing should be. At that it was strikingly literary for the columns of the daily press, even for the unyellowed American press of the 1880's. Hearn's contributions passed from horrors to oddities and from oddities to fantasies. There was a measure of scrupulous translation from the French and an element of leaves from stranger literatures—Egyptian, Persian, Indian, Chinese, Finnish. There was a good deal of erudition in some of the papers. It sounds encyclopedic and some of it may have been drawn from thesauruses; but the titles in his own exotic library go far toward proving that he was a genuine delver in quaint lores.

For some reason the newspaper work which Hearn did for Japanese newspapers has been overlooked by his biographers or received attention that was most scant and jejune. Yet Japanese editors visiting America say that Hearn did some exceptionally good work as a newspaper man in Japan.

THE news of the death of Keith Preston, literary editor of the Chicago Daily News, belongs to another column. As a man of letters he was the author of a number of books. Possibly the first was "Types of Pan" (Houghton Mifflin Company). His latest were those compiled from the column, "Hit or Miss," which he conducted in the Chicago Daily News. They were "The Top o' the Column" (Covici) and "Column Poets" (Covici).

Harry Hansen, at one time a Chicago contemporary of Preston and now Literary editor of the New York World, has penned the following:

He had a brilliant wit and a way of making a few words carry both a barb and a smile. He was a satirical commentator on men and manners and books. He wrote light verse that was deft and full of humor. He was death on humbugs, but many of them have managed to survive him.

Although Preston was well known in the East and was highly esteemed by all who have to do with books and criticism, he had no following here such as he gained in Chicago. The slim volumes of verse that he issued from time to time had few sales, and his daily work was not syndicated. He refused to write for periodicals of national circulation chiefly because he saw no reason for making unusual exertions to get published elsewhere.

At one time the Chicago Daily News put out reprints of its literary page for distribution. These reprints gave Preston a larger following than most of his friends believed he had—especially in the literary world. Of Preston, with apologies to his column, it may be said that he hit oftener than he missed.

Elsie Robinson opens The Cosmopolitan Magazine for August with a charming essay entitled "Pity." Underneath her picture Ray Long, the editor, has put the following caption: "The whole world takes its troubles to her through her famous newspaper columns."

PRINTS LOCAL BOOK REVIEWS IN ADS

Charlotte, N. C., Book Store Proprietor Rouses Interest with Unusual Copy —Town Notables Express Opinions in Printed Reviews

In Charlotte, N. C., there is a book store that knows how to advertise.

Charles R. Brockmann of that city runs the Community Book Shop and under a masthead of his own, publishes his opinions on books and other things in paid space in local newspapers.

Not content with mere jacket blurbs of new books, he farms them out to be read by local citizens, then quotes their opinions in his two column advertising space.

"Harry Whitner says," to quote from some recent copy, "that 'Lost Ecstacy' by Rineheart is the best novel he has ever read, while McAllister Carson has heard that Oliver's psychological novel 'Fear' has a vital message for every reader similar to the personal appeal for which Dr. Johnson's sermons are noted."

Lay testimonials applied to books, is the Brockmann idea. He gives his own opinions too, saying in the same advertisement published Monday this week that he enjoyed a novel about business entitled "Captains in Conflict" more than any other book in a long time. He wished that all young men in business might read it.

The Community Book Shop in this editorialized advertising copy is advocating a standing order for one book a month.

Copy is two columns wide, eight inches deep, set in two indented columns, newspaper style. Four em dashes separate the various comments, and the copy ends with Brockmann's signature cut.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Allene Talmey Mirrors the Movie Stars—Mrs. Tilla Neff Gets Leave of Absence in Cleveland—Ad Women Elect

BEING thrown downstairs by an irate woman while covering an assignment is not an experience exclusive to Miss Alycia Patterson, daughter of Capt. J. M. Patterson, editor and publisher of the New York Daily News, it was learned this week.

Allene Talmey

Miss Allene Talmey, reporter for the New York World, revealed that she, too, had undergone that strenuous experience in the Bronx while attempting to ask a militant mother just why it was her daughter had run away from home.

"I was furious," Miss Talmey said, "and started back up the stairs saying to myself 'She can't intimidate me,' but I decided the woman was not in the proper state of mind for a satisfactory interview and returned to the office."

Miss Talmey joined the World in 1924, just after being graduated from Wellesley College. She did straight reporting, hunted lost babies, lost cats and dogs, and trailed news pictures with a cameraman. Then she was assigned to assist Quinn Martin with his movie reviews.

In February she took a leave of absence to go abroad and spent four months in Paris. Since her return she has been working on a book concerning movie stars, titled "Doug, Mary and Others," which will be published soon.

Her home is in New Rochelle, N. Y.

Mrs. Editha Webster is serving as society editor of the Sioux City (Ia.) Tribune in the absence of Miss Kathleen Conway, who is touring the western coast.

Miss Louise Artz has joined the advertising and news staff of the Laguna Beach (Cal.) Life.

Mrs. Tilla H. Neff, the first woman employed in the business section of the Cleveland Plain Dealer in 1902, has been given a year's leave of absence. She has served in several capacities, at one time being at the head of the statistical department and at another time being cashier in the treasurer's office.

Miss Ruth Tadlock has joined the staff of the Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt Times as society editor, succeeding Miss Leno Moll. Miss Moll will teach in the public schools. Miss Alberta Rountree, women's editor of the Daily Californian, University of California publication, will be on the city staff of the Eureka (Cal.) Humboldt Standard until the opening of the college term in September.

Mary K. Falsey has been elected editor of Advertising Women, house organ of the New York League of Advertising Women. Other elections announced this week were Bertha Becker, chairman of the committee on education; Beatrice Omerod, chairman of the membership committee; Kathleen Goldsmith, chairman of the publicity committee, and Grace Forbes, historian.

Buffalo League of Advertising Women has elected and installed these officers; President, Henrietta Kawentel; vice-president, Margaret Benstock; corresponding secretary, Clara Letzing; recording secretary, Jeanette Eichel; treasurer, Ellen Scanlon.

30,000 AT WATER DERBY

Large Turn-out at New York Daily News Event July 10

Although the day was rainy, 30,000 people came out to watch the water derby staged last Sunday in Central Park by the New York Daily News, considered sufficient success to make the feature tried out this year for the first time an annual event.

Paul Gallico, sports editor of the Daily News, was in charge.

"The contestants seem to enjoy these events and the prizes they win, the spectators appeared to have a good time, we know that we enjoy running them," Mr. Gallico said in his column this week.

"If you don't think it's fun to see some scrawny juvenile come up from nowhere and return year after year in the next higher class, developing as he or she goes into a fine athletic boy or girl, then you ought to try it."

Newspaper Space and the Cigarette Habit—Postum Eearns $3,405,250—Romine Advanced by Hudson Motor—New Campaign by N. B. C.

TO the constant use of newspaper space must go a large part of the credit for the amazing prosperity of the tobacco industry of the county, a picture of which was furnished this week in New York by Benjamin D. Hill, chief of the tobacco section of the Department of Commerce.

"The output of American tobacco factories in 1925," he said, "was worth more than $1,000,000,000, more than twice as large as the sum in 1914. The tremendous increase in the value of factory production is due almost entirely to the increase in cigarette production, which has more than quadrupled since 1915, and which amounted in 1926 to 89,000,000,000 cigarettes. Manufacturers say that anything like a saturation point is not yet in sight, although they are finding it difficult to expand the domestic market.

"In the American export trade tobacco is an important commodity, ranking third in value among agricultural products and enriching the country through exports during the last five years by $178,000,000 annually."

Some of the leaders of this industry and their estimated advertising investments include American Tobacco Company, $3,323,000; Reynolds Tobacco Company, $4,034,000; and for advertising Chesterfields, Fatimas and Velvet Tobacco, $2,717,000.

The National Biscuit Company has started its new national campaign, clearing the copy through Calkins & Holden, Inc., New York.

Sedley Brown has been made director of advertising of Dodge Brothers, Inc., Detroit, succeeding Henry J. Koch, resigned. Mr. Brown has been for many years with the Dodge company.

R. T. Romine, sales manager of the Hudson Motor Car Company, Detroit, has been appointed general sales manager.

Vincent Riggio, sales manager of the American Tobacco Company, New York, has been elected a director in the company.

The Postum Company, Inc., reports a next profit of $3,405,250 for the second quarter of this year.

PAUL DUPUY, NOTED PARIS PUBLISHER, DIES

Owner of Petit Parisien Stricken with Typhoid in 49th Year—Was Well Known by U. S. Publishers and Advertisers

Sen. Paul Dupuy, 49, publisher of Paris Le Petit Parisien, one of the largest newspapers in the world in point of circulation, died July 10 of typhoid fever.

SEN. PAUL DUPUY

The noted French publisher had made many trips to this country and was widely known among newspaper and advertising men here. He was host to a large party of Americans who visited Paris after attending the London advertising convention three years ago.

Sen. Paul Dupuy followed his father, Jean Dupuy, as a newspaper man. After a brief experience at the bar, on the death of his father he abandoned the law and thereafter devoted himself to journalism and politics. He raised the circulation of Le Petit Parisian from 700,000 to 2,000,000 within ten years, and placed at the tip of its front page the legend: "Largest Circulation in the Entire World."

He also achieved great success with Excelsior, a paper that previously had eaten up half a million dollars. In two years he made it a profitable enterprise. His wife assisted in the direction of this property. She is an American woman, the former Helen Browne, daughter of William H. Browne of New York. Through her and through his admiration for American journalism, Sen. Dupuy had long been keenly interested in all phases of American life.

When the Senator and his wife were here for six weeks in 1923, he praised American newspapers highly, saying, among other things, "We have much to learn from American newspapers. I have already revolutionized the classified advertising in France along American lines, with great success." He considered establishing in New York a daily paper printed in French and English, but abandoned the project because he decided the ground was already thoroughly covered.

Sen. Dupuy was sometimes called the "Lord Northcliffe of France." He was said to be the best liked newspaper employer in his country, his establishment being known as 'La Bonne Maison" (the good house). He is credited with having done more than any other publisher to improve the conditions of journalistic employes in France. Among his many publications were: Science et Vie, Omnia, Miroir des Sports, Agriculture Nouvelle and Nos Loisirs.

WALTER EDWIN GARDNER

Former Syracuse Post-Standard Publisher Dies—Retired 10 Years Ago

Walter Edwin Gardner, for several years publisher of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard, and who caused the merger of the Standard and the Post, died Friday, July 8, at his home in Syracuse. He retired ten years ago and he and his wife since had traveled extensively.

Mr. Gardner was born at Watertown. His first newspaper connection was on the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin and there he rose from cub reporter to editor-in-chief. While editor of that newspaper he was appointed by President Harrison to be consul general to the Netherlands. He held that diplomatic post for four years.

He bought the Green Bay (Wis.) Gazette and conducted it for four years.

Mr. Gardner came to Syracuse in the spring of 1898 and bought a one-third interest in the Syracuse Post. He became its editor-in-chief as well as publisher. Later he brought about the merger of the Standard with the Post into the present Post-Standard.

LEON N. WHITE DIES

Leon N. White, north side representative in Chicago of the Ludlow Typograph Company, died July 4. While touring near Columbus, O., he suddenly became ill and died within half an hour. Funeral services were held July 7 in Chicago. Burial was at Carrollton, Ill. Mr. White is survived by his widow and two brothers.

KEITH PRESTON DIES AFTER OPERATION

Literary Editor of Chicago Daily News Succumbs After Three-Day Illness—Was University Professor

Keith Preston, literary editor of the Chicago Daily News and conductor of its popular "Hit or Miss" column, died July 7 in the Evanston hospital following a three-day illness. He was removed to the hospital July 5 after an operation for an ear infection which developed into pneumococcus meningitis and sank into a state of coma soon after, from which he never fully recovered consciousness.

KEITH PRESTON

Keith Preston was known throughout the country as a literary critic, humorist and writer of light verse. During the latter part of his career as a university instructor he began writing for the Daily News book page, then edited by Henry Blackman Sell. A department conducted by Mr. Preston was established in April, 1918, under the heading, "The Listening Post," which was changed to "The Periscope."

In April, 1922, Mr. Preston became the conductor of the "Hit or Miss" column on the editorial page of the Daily News, and his career as a college professor came to an end. In May, 1926, when Harry Hansen left to accept a position in New York, Preston was appointed literary editor, but continued to conduct his "Hit or Miss" column as well.

Mr. Preston was the author of several books, including "Types of Pan," "Splinters" and "Top o' the Column." He was also much in demand as a writer for magazines and as lecturer before schools and clubs.

He was born in Chicago Sept. 29, 1884, and was educated at the South Division high school and the University of Chicago, where he was graduated in 1905 with the degree of bachelor of philosophy. For a time he taught at the University of Indiana, from which institution he received the degree of master of arts in 1907. He continued his studies and was given the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Chicago in 1914.

Mr. Preston's teaching experience included a short period at Princeton, and in 1913 he came to Northwestern University as instructor in Latin. In 1915 he was advanced to the position of assistant professor and in 1919 to associate professor.

Preston is survived by his widow, Mrs. Etta Preston; his mother, Mrs. W. D. Preston; a sister, Miss Ethel Preston, and a brother, David Preston, all of Evanston.

Four of the active pallbearers at Mr. Preston's funeral were selected from among his co-workers on the Daily News.

The pallbearers were: Robert J. Casey, William S. Hedges, Harry M. Beardsley, Francis Fabian, Robert O. Ballou and Fenno DeVries.

WILLIAM T. BLISS DIES AT BEIRUT, SYRIA

Served New York Newspapers for Quarter of a Century—Member of N. Y. World Staff at Time of Death

William T. Bliss, 62, for more than a quarter of a century a New York newspaper man, died July 8, of cancer at the American University of Beirut, Syria. The last 15 years of his newspaper career were spent on the editorial staff of the New York World.

Born in London, Mr. Bliss received his training at the American University of Beirut, founded by his father, the Rev. Daniel D. Bliss. He finished his education in this country, and was graduated from Amherst in 1887.

He entered newspaper work immediately after graduation, getting his first training as a reporter on the New York Sun for a year. From 1889 until 1911 he was on the staff of the Evening Mail, except for one year, 1903-1904, when he was with the World. On the Evening Mail he became a successively reporter, exchange editor, city editor, assistant managing editor and dramatic editor. During the winter of 1890-1891 he traveled in Syria and Asia Minor as correspondent for the Evening Mail and on special mission for Col. Elliott F. Shepard.

Mr. Bliss was sporting editor of the old New York Mail and Express when, under Elliot Shepherd, there was a ban against reporting prize fights. Seeing one of the important matches of the day, he made up his mind that he would get it into the paper.

He wrote the story, stressing the brutality and bloodiness of the affair, but including every technical detail.

'A terrible thing has happened," he told Mr. Shepherd, explaining that he thought influential people ought to hear about it.

The story was run and on page one, creating the biggest sensation of the da

SQUARING THE CIRCLE FOR THE PARIS FASHION SERVICE

Special Announcement to All Newspaper Editors

Two years ago I went to Paris and organized for the Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate The Paris Fashion Board, securing as its members the greatest Creators of the Mode in the world. After a year of careful preparation on a most comprehensive plan, I sent a young man to Paris last July, and installed him as our Paris representative. The Fashion Service was begun in October and has been appearing weekly in many leading newspapers, to their very general satisfaction.

A few days ago, without so much as an inquiry as to our rights or purposes in regard to this Fashion Service, on which we had invested many thousand dollars and two years of hard work, another Syndicate telegraphed to the newspapers carrying the Service that it had been transferred to them by our Paris representative. Of course this representative had no more moral or legal right to attempt to make such a transfer than a telegraph editor would have to transfer a newspaper's press franchise to a competitor. All of which reminds me of the fifteen year fight it was my privilege to make with honest newspapers to raise advertising standards and practices—known to all publishers and advertising managers. But that's another story.

SERVICE CONTINUED AND IMPROVED

The Keypoint of this page advertisement in Editor & Publisher is the definite announcement that the Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate will go forward and supply the Paris Fashion Service, which it organized and which it owns; that the place of the employe in Paris has been immediately and ably filled; that all contracts for the Service are being filled without missing a release; and, finally, that with the August 1st release there will be added to the Service a feature that has been in careful preparation for a number of weeks.

AMERICA'S ACCEPTANCE OF PARIS FASHIONS

This great addition is made to meet the one criticism the Fashion Service has had to meet. Editors everywhere have agreed that Paris was and is supreme as the Creator of Fashions and that the world-famous couturiers on the Paris Fashion Board could best describe and interpret the Fashions they create—> but Editors have also said repeatedly that they wanted for their papers not only the Fashions that were created in Paris but they wanted, quite as much, the Paris Fashions that are accepted in America, and obtainable by their readers in stores in their own cities.

This important information is now to be provided—AMERICA'S ACCEPTANCE OF THE PARIS MODE—beginning with the weekly release of August 1st. An arrangement has been concluded for this added feature of the Paris Fashion Service, with one of the greatest Fashion Authorities in America. And this information is to be based on telegraphed reports from over one hundred leading stores in all parts of the United States and Canada. There will be published in the Service each week, based on these reports, four or five designs, showing the actual, accepted mode in America. Thus, the newspaper carrying the Fashion Service will please its women readers who want the last word of fashion authority direct from Paris, in signed articles by the famous members of the Paris Fashion Board, and it will also please its women readers who want to know the Paris Mode that is actually accepted and being generally worn. Manifestly this is Squaring The Circle of All Fashion Needs.

A GREAT FEATURE THAT MEANS BUSINESS

Now for a final word on increasing income. The Paris Fashion Service, as it has been organized the past year, has enabled papers both to gain and hold advertising from stores in the local field and from the great and growing volume of advertising that is affected by fashion news, in the national field. Beyond question this Squaring of the Fashion Circle will enormously increase the power, already demonstrated to be very great, of the Paris Fashion Service, to build up advertising income. Mr. Editor, in the immediate interest of your paper, I suggest that you at once consult your business manager and advertising manager on this vital point and, if they have any doubt in the matter, let them consult your great store advertisers.

And will you please say to your advertising manager for me that I will personally develop with him a plan in connection with the Paris Fashion Service that will increase the advertising prestige of your paper, however high it is, both in the local and in the national field.

Yours for Squaring the Fashion Circle and Increasing a Newspaper's Income, HERBERT S. HOUSTON, President.

Open territory on the Paris Fashion Service will be assigned in the sequence of dates on orders, by telegraph or mail.

"YOUR MONEY'S WORTH"

A BOOK that will make superficial and stand-pat readers rage and sensible and thoughtful folk in the great world of advertising and selling better able to grasp their responsibilities and future opportunities, has just been published by Stuart Chase and F. G. Schlink, under the title "Your Money's Worth."

The authors declare that their purpose is not to muck-rake, but to educate. We believe them. They enter the bewildering field of brand merchandise manufacturing, advertising and selling and proceed to argue the proposition that as a result of high-pressure salesmanship and advertising that merely teases the dollar the great American public is being deluged by a welter of stuff of uncertain quality and doubtful use and indicate that sound economics are being sufficiently outraged by modern practices to warrant the fear that the future holds a big smash for this house of cards. The authors quote an advertising agency circular to the effect that 25 per cent of the business of the country is on "natural demand" and 75 per cent the result of salesmanship, and while they do not credit those proportions they do believe, and propose to show, that a staggering total of the nation's purchasing power is thus controlled.

The book is an indictment, as we see it, of waste and irresponsibility, wherein the consumer is victimized by a false system, dangerous to all concerned. Its particularization is simply dumbfounding. Every principle of old-time competitive business seems to have been wiped out in the new age, the public buying blindly or on faith, with advertising making no attempt to inform but often misinforming. To be effective advertising must "get out before the beloved customer and shout, search, halloo, promise, concede, coax, be funny, coo, thump, seek, knock and punch," and this program, the authors assert, is the literal promise of a New York advertising agency. The tricks of trade that are exposed in the book seem, in the aggregate, so outrageous that the honest-minded reader throws up his hands, like old Aunt Agatha, exclaiming: "What in the world are we coming to!"

The book does not denounce advertising, but in scathing terms does accuse it of false and perilous methods. The authors hold that advertising is news, that facts should supplant palaver, that there should be standards of accuracy and that mere partisan assertion is not public service. They advocate a system in private business, similar to the Government's Bureau of Standards, where goods may be tested and then sold for their real, not imaginary worth. They say that during the last fiscal year the Bureau of Standards saved for Uncle Sam $100,000,000 on his extensive and manifold purchases and ask: "Why cannot this technique be extended to aid the consumer at large? * * * Billions could be saved to reduce drastically the cost of living."

All of which we have found of lively interest and sound enough in theory. Maybe our national extravagance and our blundering buying course will ultimately lead us to a smash, but the simple fact of the day and hour seems to be that hard times prevail in countries where trade is on the old-style basis of cautious, quality buying, the consumer jolly-well getting his money's worth, whereas in our harum-scarum country, with all its hot-air salesmanship, its waste and commercial bunk and junk, the average citizen and his family are simply reveling in material luxuries, comforts and creature needs, favored as by the gods in comparison with the people of other nations. This, of course, is no answer to the book's clear logic and masterful presentation of facts, but it is at least a comforting solace for this day, no matter what dire reaction tomorrow shall bring forth.

American journalism must not abandon the fundamental rules that have been established by long practice to govern it, one of the greatest of which is that the publisher who yields to the advertising bludgeon is a traitor to his craft and his paper's worst enemy.

Then Daniel answered and said before the king, Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another; yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.—Daniel, V; 17.

STILL CHALLENGING

APPARENTLY there is no advertising agency man who cares to defend in written or vocal debate the proposition that an advertising agency is justified in ethics, economy or even fairness to engage in free commercial publicity practises. We called in this column last week for a volunteer and on Monday palpitatingly opened the mail—nothing but the usual crop of brickbats and cut-flowers, new subscriptions, renewals of old ones and one dismal "stop" because we had said something nice about somebody whom our late subscriber holds in low esteem. No volunteer on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or press day.

But we did receive a cordial and intelligent letter approving the principle that an advertising agency may not ethically, economically or morally traffic in press agent dope. The author is Walter Clare Martin, Vice-President of the Bedford Advertising Agency, Inc. Mr. Martin is quite willing to defend the proposition in a joint debate, but there is no fun in debating unless both sides of the argument are represented by a plumed knight. Who will debate with Mr. Martin? Last call! We take it that he would defend the proposition ably. His letter indicates that he has given the subject some thought. It follows:

"The challenge you hurled at the agencies strikes deep. Free publicity is a graft, or it isn't. It is honorable, or it is not. If an evil, smash it. If a blessing, stop the outcry against it.

"To some, free publicity is a monstrous parasite, spawning in the vitals of the American press; seducing editors; perverting news. To some, it is not only shady, not only cunning; it is economically false. If it is shady, men of pride should abhor it. If it is economically false, every agency and every newspaper in the nation, regardless of morals, should be eager to stop it, and can stop it, simply by recognizing the facts.

"The Bedford organizations are skilled in publicity. We have some of the most resourceful writers in the business, just to turn out free copy that will make the advertiser's heart dance. Constrained by custom to buccaneer space for our clients, we strive to do it more brilliantly than anyone else.

"But some of us have been editors; and some have studied the charts. The more we observe, the more radically we realize that the agency, the publisher, the client—the entire commonwealth—would benefit, if advertising were sold on its merits; not held out like a piece of prize liver to make hungry publishers bark.

"Facts are hard, facts are stubborn; but they are worth grubbing out. Your offer to stage a public debate is a mighty instrument for forcing slow truths into conscience. By all means, let's have it! As public as possible, and plenty of advertisers to hear. The client must be informed and intelligent, if he is to allow his agent to be.

"So many agencies are publicity addicts that some of them must know why. Some must honor the system; must believe it is good. They have facts; they have reasons. They can justify this professional custom, so deep, so widespread.

"Your challenge shot straight. It IS up to the agencies. They should vindicate this practice or junk it outright.

"We accept your frank challenge, while it is still hot and stinging. We can speak for all agencies who would like to end this frantic grabbing of white space, these vulgar assaults on the news. We can advance able speakers to demonstrate that THE FREE PUBLICITY HABIT SHOULD BE DISCARDED AMONG AGENCIES BY UNIVERSAL CONSENT.

"The present system undoubtedly has sincere and able defenders. Let them pick up this glove."

Josephus Daniels' favorite definition of a good newspaperman is: "One who arises each morning filled with indignation for every injustice and wrong reported from the four corners of the earth."

AN UNFAIR QUERY

THE editor of a newspaper in an Iowa city recently received a telegraph query from Baltimore signed "College News," which read: "United States Department Interior Announces Free Scholarship Michigan College of Mining and Technology offered man in your city," and the editor ordered 50 words by wire. When the "story" came along it was plain enough that no man in any particular city had been offered a scholarship, but rather the scholarship merely was announced as being open to one man from Iowa and one man from every other state, who could qualify.

Probably, although we have no way of confirming the fact, College News offered the story widely. Assuming that 100 editors bit and paid $2 for the item the vacation period of "College News," whoever he may be, would be assured. Inquiry reveals that "College News" has a post-office address in Baltimore.

The best method of dealing with a correspondent who thrusts collect wires on an unwilling newspaper is to refuse them, permitting the telegraph company to do the collecting at the sending end. That is what the Iowa editor did. The correspondent who, while having a technical "out," must know that his query was wholly misleading and unfair.

When the theatres and motion picture houses charge the same prices for box, orchestra, balcony and gallery seats, newspapers might be willing to sell amusement advertising, with its fixed position, its frequent changes of copy and numerous other service values at run-of-paper rate. The answer to the Will Hays movement to break amusement rates in newspapers is that amusement rates are too low for service rendered by the average newspaper.

THE MAIN FACT

THE indications at Washington are that the new Congress will focus its attention upon the policies of the Post Office Department and perhaps yield some relief on postal rates on the sensible proposition that this branch of the Federal Government is a service and not a money-making institution. Our Washington correspondent advises that there are two demands from important sources for sweeping reorganization of the postal system. We hope and believe that this is coming. Nothing is more absurd in the whole scheme of government than that post-office administration should be regarded as a failure when it shows a deficit or a success when it shows a profit. This is but another instance indicating how far wrong the business code may go when applied to government. We believe with Congressman Kelly that this point must be made clear to clear the way for sensible reorganization. The figures on which the "deficit" is based are by no means satisfactory—postal figures can be made to dance to almost any tune. But the principal fact is that the present administration does not give a hoot about the old original policy of making the dissemination of printed information easily available to the public through the mails.

Elmer Gantry is, of course, an exaggerated fiction character, but there are few old-time reporters who have not encountered his brand of hypocrisy, or phases of it, in dealing with professional moralists.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

ROBERT W. SHAND, the new Sunday editor of the New York Daily News, has been with that tabloid now for the last three and a half years. For two years of that time he was head of the copy desk, and more recently was assistant to Miss Roberta Yates, whom he has now succeeded as Sunday editor. He has not yet named his assistant.

ROBERT W. SHAND

Prior to his association with the New York Daily News Mr. Shand was on the copy desk and telegraph editor of the New York American. A graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with the class of 1917, Mr. Shand was, during the war, a senior lieutenant in the construction corps of the U. S. Navy. The decision of this country to cut down on battleships let the young lieutenant out of his job, and, as a consequence, he "drifted" into newspaper work.

Mr. Shand's first newspaper work was for the Washington Herald. He wrote sports for this paper and also worked on its copy desk.

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

New York Graphic Gains Permanent Advertising by Popularity Contests—Boston Herald Reduces Subscription Rates—Pays 10 Cents Gets a Sub

IN a large number of New York elevators a permanent advertisement for the New York Evening Graphic has been placed in the shape of a brass plaque on which those who ride may read the masthead of Macfadden's tabloid.

This is just one aftermath of a popularity contest conducted by the Graphic. The plaque was awarded to those elevator operators who received above a certain number of votes. There were also cash prizes to keep people interested. The plaque, in addition to giving the Graphic's name, compliments the elevator operator for his "courtesy and efficiency."

Now the Graphic is conducting a contest to find the most popular soda clerk in New York. A vote is printed in each copy of the paper, and is to be saved by the candidate for the cash prizes offered.

The Boston (Mass.) Herald has announced in large advertisements in its columns the reduction of the subscription rate from $6.60 a year for the daily paper to $5 and from $5.20 for the Sunday paper to $5. The six months' rate for both is now $2.50, as compared with $3.30 for the daily paper and $2.75 for the Sunday paper. The one-month rate has been reduced from 55 cents for the daily paper to 50 cents, while the Sunday month rate remains the same, 50 cents. No reason is given for the reduction.

Extensive plans have been made for the summer meeting of the New England Circulation Managers' Association which will be held at Woodland Springs Lodge, Lake Pleasant, Casco, Me., July 20 and 21. Those making the trip will meet at the Portland (Me.) Press Herald at 5 p. m., July 19. Woodland Springs Lodge is 35 miles from Portland and about 15 miles from Poland Springs. The program is in charge of the Maine members.

The Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald, afternoon daily, is co-operating with the Empire Theatre, leading film house, in the preparation of a "local" film news reel. The two have adopted the slogan of "Read it in the Herald; See it at the Empire."

The Terrell (Tex.) Daily Tribune, Fred Massengill, editor, is making use of a clever plan for building up its subscription list at small cost. Mr. Massengill makes a standing offer that when anyone has a birthday the Tribune will present him with a free ticket to a designated local theatre upon request in person. This offer applies to all alike and the mere statement on the part of the claimant that his birthday has come is accepted without question.

But when the applicant has received his ticket and congratulations on his anniversary and his good will thus obtained he is asked if he is a subscriber to the Tribune. If he is not, his subscription is solicited on the spot.

A considerable number of subscriptions have been obtained in this way and at small cost.

Association Seeking Model Law to Curb Fraudulent Advertising—Real Estate Section Prospers Over the Holidays—Daily Runs Employment Bureau

C. L. PERKINS, Chicago Herald Examiner, and president of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers, has appointed a committee to recommend a model law defining fraudulent classified advertising and providing punishment for offenders. It is expected that the association will urge its adoption by all states and cities not now having adequate laws as another step to the complete elimination of misleading classified advertisements.

Members of the committee are: James A. Finneran, New York Times, chairman; T. R. Longcope, Boston American; Chester Nolan, Brooklyn Eagle; C. C. Armstrong, Baltimore News; and Theodore Newhouse, Staten Island Advance.

Members of the association are now being requested to print daily a box containing the following information:

"The (name of paper) is a member of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers, which includes leading newspapers throughout the country and has for one of its aims the elimination of fraudulent and misleading classified advertising. The (name of paper), as well as every other member of the Association, endeavors to print only truthful classified advertisements and will appreciate having its attention called to any advertisement not conforming to the highest standards of honesty."

Holidays are the best days on which to interest real estate operators in placing copy in classified columns, L. L. Heaton, classified manager of the New York Herald Tribune learned over the July 4 vacation period, when he piled up a record linage in this classification for his paper. The sales talk used was that people were free and had more opportunity to look over real estate on holidays than at any other time.

Realtors were asked, wherever possible, to pick out and advertise the "best buy" on their books. Then the following box was printed at the head of the classification:

"THESE HOMES CHOSEN AS BEST VALUES NOW OFFERED.

"These advertisements describe the best value homes now offered by many o leading real estate agents. If you to save money it will pay you to now the home you have been waitin Among many hundreds of homes able, these have been selected fo value they offer the purchaser b people who know home values."

A help wanted service has bee augurated for the Fresno (Cal.) B Robert L. Bellem, appointed clas manager of that paper last April. service operates as a free employ bureau in conjunction with help and tion wanted advertisements.

Other changes Mr. Bellem has pu effect include: Revision of typograp dress, eliminating cuts and bold ty the undisplay columns and the substit of two-point cut-off rules for six p a new rate card containing a cash feature entitling transient advertise a substantial discount on bills paid w seven days of an advertisement's insertion; nightly broadcasting of los found ads over the Bee's radio sta establishment of a room rental se free of charge in conjunction with r advertisements; the appointment o drug store branch offices for rece of Bee classified orders; and inte system of mail solicitation and a plan for solicitors on certain class tions in need of development.

Nooksack (Wash.) Sentinel adopted a new rate of one cent a for classified advertising regardles the size of the advertisement. All c fied is now on a strictly cash basis there is no minimum charge. As a ice to the farmers of the Nooksack ley, the Sentinel will run all copy taining to the farm free of charge. includes live stock for sale, poultry sale or exchange and farm implen It does not, however, include hous goods.

DO SPACE BUYERS REALLY WANT INFORMATION?

Editor & Publisher recently quoted several space buyers as saying they want facts about newspapers and their fields.

IF THEY DO, HERE ARE SOME REAL FACTS:

Has the time not come for advertisers and advertising agents to cease the practice long in vogue of classing weekly newspapers as a mass, and of disregarding those outstanding weeklies that, in many cases, are superior in every way to the small city dailies they use?

Weekly newspapers are no more to be considered as a mass than an advertiser would think of putting all railroad or industrial stocks in the same class in the stock market.

There are a lot of weekly newspapers that are not worth using.

There are also some that should be on many advertisers' schedules. They should be picked with discrimination just as one would pick stocks for speculation or investment.

The tendency, it seems, is to pick a daily of 2,000 circulation in Podunk, just because it is a daily, and disregard high-class weeklies of 5,000 and more circulation in localities where there are no daily newspapers published whatever.

Here are two concrete instances of merit as illustrating the case in point:

The Washington New Jersey STAR and The Phillipsburg, N. J., STAR, known as The STAR Newspapers, are sold in combination in a community of 60,000 people where there is not a daily newspaper published. To all practical purposes Warren county, N. J., is a city of 60,000 and should be so considered by the advertiser. But those 60,000 people not being herded together in one mass, the sales possibilities are ignored, whereas if The STAR Newspapers were daily newspapers in their territory of 60,000 people, almost every national advertiser would use space in them at least once a week.

The fact that they are not daily newspapers (because we do not believe the time is yet ripe for such a move) does not detract one iota from their value to the advertiser.

They are superior to most small-city dailies in every way—appearance, contents, quality of printing, reader interest—in everything that goes to make value for the advertiser. And the business methods of The STAR Newspapers are just as high as any daily in cities of whatever size. If they were not, they would not have a circulation of over 9,000. They would not be among the largest weekly newspapers in the whole country. The Washington STAR for instance, carries more advertising per issue than the average daily issue of the New York Times. There is a reason for it—and that reason is simply merit. An examination of copies of The STAR Newspapers will show why they carry so much advertising, why they have such large circulations.

Send for copies of our papers. Study them a moment and you will say to yourself "Here is a wonderful field in which to sell more goods, a field that can be covered in no other way, and here are two splendid newspapers through which to advertise the goods, papers that are close to their readers because they are strictly home newspapers, chuck full of names of people the readers know, papers that are far superior to many dailies on many lists, and even though they are weeklies, they are worth using far more than lots of dailies."

If advertisers and agencies will just give the papers a chance to prove themselves to be the kind of papers we have just said they are (by sending for the papers and studying the possibilities of the field) we know they will O. K. the above.

The Phillipsburg STAR is the only paper in Phillipsburg, N. J., 20,000 population. It is a thriving industrial city, the home of such plants as Ingersoll-Rand, Warren Pipe and Foundry and other industrial leaders. It has diversity of manufacturing interests, and it grows and prospers. If it were a daily, national advertisers would clamor to get into it. It is no less valuable because it is a weekly—most foreign schedules seldom run oftener than once a week. The circulation is guaranteed over 4,000.

And as The Phillipsburg STAR covers Phillipsburg, so does The Washington STAR cover the remainder of Warren county and the adjacent portions of Hunterdon and Morris counties. It is 60 years old, and guarantees a circulation of over 5,000. Combined circulation of The STAR Newspapers is over 9,000 home delivered, read-by-the-whole family circulation among 60,000 highly prosperous people, equal to any city of 60,000 people in wealth, prosperity, intelligence—in everything that goes to make a high class of typical American people.

This whole section is wonderfully rich from manufacturing, dairying and agricultural prosperity, making it a highly profitable field for the advertiser. It can be covered only through The STAR Newspapers—there are no other local newspapers that make any pretense of covering it. The unusually large circulation proves absolute coverage, and also proves that there can be no other local newspapers. The STAR Newspapers are read in every township, borough and village in the county, and in many in adjoining counties.

Washington, N. J. STAR

Largest country weekly in the U. S. Over 150 col. adv. per issue. Over 5,000 Circulation. 60 years old.

Phillipsburg, N. J. STAR

Only newspaper in a thriving industrial city of 20,000 people. Circulation over 4,000 weekly.

Combined circulation over 9,000—Combined rate, 84c inch, flat

The two papers have absolute coverage of 60,000 prosperous people with $20,000,000 in the banks, 11,000 automobiles, and an enormous weekly payroll.

The Washington STAR is issued every Thursday morning.
The Phillipsburg STAR is issued every Friday morning.

GREATER CIRCULATIONS BUT FEWER DAILIES

of $2.27, dropping back to the 1923 level after three intervening years of small increases.

Canadian newspapers, published daily in English or French for the general public, have apparently reached the end of their acute period of consolidations and now number one more than they did six months ago. The total number of Canadian dailies listed is 104, of which 24 are morning and 80 are evening. Four Sunday newspapers are published in the Dominion, three in British Columbia and one in Ontario. The latter, the Toronto Weekly Star, is not technically a Sunday newspaper, being published on Saturday but having a general Sunday circulation.

Canadian newspaper circulations show a steadily upward course, similar to that of the United States dailies with the tabloid and other metropolitan gains discounted for purposes of analysis.

Morning newspapers show a slight decrease during the past six months—from 475,104 to 472,358 copies per day—2,476 copies, or one-half of one per cent.

Evening newspaper circulations increased from 1,369,219 copies to 1,382,332 copies, a gain of 13,113 copies, or about 1 per cent.

Sunday newspaper circulations increased from 276,683 copies to 287,409 copies, a gain of 10,716 copies, or 3.8 per cent.

The Canadian morning papers' rate per line per million circulation is $3.04, an increase of 12 cents over the rate of six months ago, when it was $2.92. In 1924, it was $2.99.

Canadian evening papers now record a rate per line per million circulation of $2.82, compared with $2.76 six months ago and $2.67 in 1924.

The Canadian Sunday milline rate covers so small a field that it is indicative of little as an advertising yardstick, but it is given for purposes of comparison. It is now $1.75, against $1.98 six months ago and $2.20 in 1924.

All of this information is summarized in handy form in the table which has become known during the past nine years of its semi-annual publication as the "Editor & Publisher Ready Reckoner of the Cost of a Newspaper Campaign." This table appears on Page 4 and is followed by the tabulation of newspapers published as of June 15, 1927, with circulations as stated to the Audit Bureau of Circulations or to the Post Office Department for the six months period ending March 31, 1927. The advertising rate listed is that given on the rate card as applying on general advertising contracts for total space of 5,000 agate lines. Evening papers are named in bold-face type, morning newspapers in light-face. Circulation figures taken from reports to the A. B. C. are given in bold face and when followed by an "x" are for three months ending March 31, 1927. Other variations from the rule are explained in convenient footnotes. An asterisk following the rate figure indicates that the paper's card quotes a flat rate. Population of city and trading area are taken from the tables of latest available estimates, by the U. S. Census Bureau, the Audit Bureau of Circulations, local Chambers of Commerce and other informed civic bodies. Where no more recent estimate is available, the 1920 Census figures are used. In the Canadian table, the figures given are those of the 1926 Census whenever possible; otherwise those of the 1921 Census. Canadian circulations are for the most part taken from the reports to the Audit Bureau of Circulations, otherwise from sworn statements by the publishers for various recent periods.

Perfecting the Dry Mat

Since the advent of dry mat stereotyping no development in the process has done more to perfect it than has the Wood method of scientifically conditioning the mats in the mill at the time of manufacture.

Dry mats so treated are absolutely uniform in moisture content and require no preparation in the newspaper plant. They may be molded immediately on arrival or many weeks thereafter. They do not dry out nor deteriorate and are not affected by freezing cold nor extreme heat.

They make a deeper and sharper mold and the printing is bettered to an astonishing degree.

Mill conditioned mats make possible an additional saving in print paper of not less than 1/4 inch.

This further saving of paper not only covers the slight cost of the treatment in our mill but makes the Wood mill conditioned mat the cheapest to use, regardless of its first cost.

No matter what dry mat you may be using you will find WOOD MILL CONDITIONED DRY MATS superior in quality, cheaper to use, and more certain in results.

Call to the attention of your stereotyper. None will be more pleased than he.

The Merganthaler Linotype Co.,
New York, New York

Gentlemen:

In behalf of the thirty employes of the Southwest Press Clipping Bureau, I want to express our appreciation for your new IONIC type face.

Reading more than 5,000 daily and weekly newspapers each week from the states of Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and New Mexico, employes of this clipping bureau always have been subjected to more or less of an eye strain. But now with your new IONIC type, that fault with our work is being eliminated.

It might interest you to know that frequently the girls who act as readers and who are compelled to read on an average of from 75 to 200 newspapers each day, begin wearing glasses within a few months after starting work. This because of the terrific eye strain caused by the old, cramped type faces. IONIC will be the saving of eyes for every one of our thirty employes.

This sounds very much like a solicited testimonial for a patent medicine. It is not, however. It is a heartfelt expression of appreciation for IONIC.

At this writing comparatively few of the newspapers coming to our office use IONIC but in spite of this the readers persistently request that they be allowed to read them, giving as an excuse, "My eyes are giving me trouble and this new type will relieve the strain." Do you wonder now why I have written this letter?

Very respectfully,
THE SOUTHWEST PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU,
George E Masters
Manager

A Market good for any and every Product!

The Empire State offers a market for every and any product whether usable or consumable. Be it machinery, textiles, food products, smokers' articles, building materials —whether the product appeals to the masses, or its price is within the means of the money classes—the demand here is so great that any advertising effort will produce volume business.

No State in the Union can compete with New York as an outlet for every conceivable class of merchandise. No State offers such great wealth and so diversified a buying power.

No National Advertiser can find so great and so concentrated a market in so small a trading area.

Compare New York with any State or any group of States—in population, in wealth, in earned incomes, in income tax returns, and you will find the Empire State always first. As a market it stands supreme—beyond comparison.

Let these newspapers listed below prove their statements. Let them show you how you can create volume sales with small advertising investment.

Twice the Sales Calls per Man per Day!

RADIATING from Indianapolis, 17 railroads, 13 electric interurban lines and 15 motor bus lines provide swift, convenient transportation to every part of The Indianapolis Radius. For salesmen who motor, a network of excellent highways is equally advantageous.

Salesmen say that in working The Indianapolis Radius they can make twice the national average of calls per man per day. This cuts selling costs, speeds the winning of distribution and entrenches leadership through closer contact with the trade.

Add to this the prestige of The INDIANAPOLIS NEWS in this rich, concentrated market of 2,000,000 people —its powerful advertising influence with the trade and with the public—and you have a most favorable condition for sales success.

The INDIANAPOLIS NEWS sells The Indianapolis Radius

Following newspapers—name in light-face; evening papers—name in bold-face; Government statement April 1 figures, light-face; A. B. C. Publisher's statements, bold-face, followed by an "x" average for 3 months; flat rate indicated by an asterisk.

Not only do they buy the best, but they spend very freely for every conceivable product and commodity that enters the home. The evidence is convincing when one travels along the paved highways from town to town and sees rows of fine homes, all with garages housing one and more cars.

Every appearance of the community indicates that these inhabitants are people of means who know how to live and enjoy life. They are a class whose earnings and incomes are above the average found in the typical American cities.

This market is worth the effort of every national advertiser and the quickest and most effective way to reach these 70,000 families at the lowest possible cost, is thru the local weeklies. These papers wield more influence in the Long Island homes than any of the large metropolitan newspapers, because they chronicle the daily and intimate events of the community.

These newspapers listed below will give you facts and figures that will easily convince you that you cannot afford to stay away from this market and that you cannot completely dominate this market without using the advertising pages of these local weeklies.

Marketing Confectionery and Soft Drinks in ILLINOIS--

Every manufacturer of candy and soft drinks should carefully study the Illinois Market. First, distribution becomes a matter of routine if the product is properly advertised, for there are over 6000 dealers who feature soft drinks and over 4000 confectionery dealers.

Second, Illinois people are known to have an unusually sweet tooth, and are great consumers of good candies and soft drinks.

Here you have a receptive market with a population of nearly six and a half million people—plenty of retail outlets to obtain 100% distribution, among a class of highly responsible and progressive dealers and jobbers—and most important of all, you have a list of newspapers, each one completely dominating its respective trading area, that enjoys the confidence of its readers who respond readily to intelligent advertising.

If you require more facts on the confectionery and soft drink market, ask each newspaper to send you more information. They are always at your service.

By MARLEN PEW

WITHOUT doubt the prize bunk delivery of the week was Henry Ford's solemn announcement that only just the other day he had discovered to his amazement that his Dearborn Independent had been publishing a series of savage attacks on the Jewish race. Gently, but firmly, he passed the buck of responsibility to good old William J. Cameron, the editor, incidentally one of the best feature writers, in his day on the Detroit News, that we have ever known. Mr. Ford's statement assumed far too great a virtue to carry full force to this writer's mind, even if we had not known some very definite contradictory circumstances. Five years ago Arthur Brisbane told Ford at Detroit that his assaults on the Jewish race were unjustified, un-American and in every way unprincipled and in heated language warned him that continuation of them would run Ford into serious difficulties. Allan Benson also gave Ford ample notice and, if I am not misinformed, Ford was quite indignant at the rebuke. E. G. Pipp, first editor of Dearborn Independent and once editor of Detroit News, insists that it was Ford who took the initiative in the anti-Semitic crusade and actually ordered Cameron to print the series of attacks. That sounds reasonable to us. We have never been able to understand how such an able newspaper man as Cameron could give to print such a hairy old fake as the "Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion," or the nonsense that the peace of this world is at the mercy of a little bunch of international bankers of the Jewish faith. The American bankers who have made most of the money out of war are well known not to be Jews. But the point is that Mr. Ford passed the buck of responsibility to his editorial staff, disclaiming knowledge of a fact that has been known to everyone else in the enlightened world for more than five years.

THE announcement is, of course, the forerunner of Mr. Ford's new advertising campaign, the object of which is to sell cars to the public without regard to creed, race, or previous state of servitude. Mr. Ford is in quest of new business and for the first time has been forced to acknowledge competition. He is about to spring a new or improved car on the fall market. That means that the Ford publicity tom-toms must be kept in motion and for every dollar of paid advertising in newspapers, if Mr. Ford's policy of recent years is maintained, there will be a hundred dollars' worth of free publicity of one sort or another. This writer firmly believes that Mr. Ford's repudiation of anti-Semitism is, at least in part, a business move, the first gun in the advertising campaign which is about to rage across the land. It is not unreasonable, we think, to draw this conclusion. Mr. Ford in the past has suffered from an insatiable publicity appetite and although it is said that he is softening and sweetening as he grows older, still we are pretty sure that he likes to see the good old family name in editorial space much better than when in space that is measured 14 agate lines to the column inch.

IF Mr. Ford's new car is a good article for the price, and if he will use newspaper advertising like a good merchant and cut out the tom-foolery, we believe he will make a nice little clean-up. But our interest here isn't in his business but in his ethics. This thing of pulling the deck out from under the feet of an editor who is under orders to fight is becoming a great American scandal. Mr. Ford is by no means the first business man to turn such a trick, but we have never witnessed a colder or more ruthless job, nor one that was more transparent. It is amazing what men will bring themselves to do in the name of "business." Relentless are the sacrifices made at the altar of Profit. Almost every day we hear men justifying the cruelest conduct toward their fellows when business is to be conserved. In Ford's case the reasoning was: Jewish attacks hurting sales; something must be done; public statement must be made; "in the multiplicity of my activities it has been impossible for me to devote my personal attention to (the Dearborn Independent and other pamphlet publications) or keep informed as to their contents * * * Had I appreciated even the general nature, to say nothing of the details, of these utterances, I would have forbidden their circulation."

FOLKS who publish violent literature really should be familiar with it, particularly when their own names are signed to a page of it per week. There might even be some legislation to compel the publisher to read his own alleged writings. If Henry Ford's famous autographed page of copper-riveted opinions has never even been read by him during a publishing career of more than five years, he is the champion phantom author of the age. But slipping responsibility over on the editorial staff, when the pinch came, to us seems as irresponsible and reprehensible as was the Jewish attack itself.

HENRY FORD is a very wonderful industrialist and possesses great personal charm in many directions. He has done so many fine and beautiful things that like most writers we have a thousand times sung his fame. He has been greatly cursed by the silly notion that a phenomenal success in manufacturing automatically made him a supreme authority on every conceivable subject in this complex civilization. Press agents and reporters have quoted him on all the grave questions of the times and he has responded like a duck to a shallow millpond. Mr. Ford has always had something important to say when the subject of the interview was within his legitimate field of interest, where he is expert. Outside of that domain he has been absurd and sometimes dangerous, as for instance the racial abuse calculated to wound great numbers of people. As for the double-crossing of the editorial staff—that is something in him that we had not suspected.

IT is always a serious question how hard any responsible editor should fight on a slippery deck. Just how far should he follow orders? The personal sacrifices he may make, such as giving strength and health, social relationships, midnight oil, risking prison cell or even an assassin's bullet, constitute a practical problem each man must solve for himself. That there is no such thing as gratitude, with a memory longer than a twelvemonth, is a safe assumption. The number of editors who have gone to jail for their publications and have been fired for their pains would be appalling if assembled. I have no means of knowing whether Mr. Cameron feels himself betrayed by Ford, or that he cares the snap of his finger. He may not even feel abused. Some of us are more sensitive on that point than others. I do know that it is a safe plan for every employe editor or reporter to act within his own conscience, confident that personal sacrifice or even martyrdom can only be compensated from within one's own breast—rarely from without. The rule may not be invariable, but the batting average in the journalism of this day makes it, I think, sound enough.

PUBLISHER WINS SUIT

A jury in Norfolk, Va., has awarde a verdict of $18,000 to Norman R. Ha ilton, president and publisher of Portsmouth (Va.) Star, the full amo sued for by him for services rendered securing pier leases in the Hudson Riv at New York, for the Old Domin Transportation Company, when that co pany was having dock and pier troub in New York several years ago. A p vious jury awarded a verdict for $10,0 but the case was appealed upon techni grounds and sent back to the Norf court by the supreme court of appe for a new trial.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Payne Syndicate Offers Rome Flight Rights—"Broadway" Novelized by King Features—"Harold Teen" in Movies—Ellis Saved from Drowning

NEWSPAPER rights to the first person story of Lloyd Bertaud, pilot of the forthcoming airplane flight from New York to Rome and back, are being offered by the Payne Syndicate, New York. Guy T. Viskniskki, general manager, announced this week. Philip Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER that no attempt would be made to "bottle up" news of the flight, which will be sold to all newspapers and press associations. The flight is being financed by William Randolph Hearst.

This new syndicate, recently organized by Mr. Payne, has also launched a new daily comic strip called "Mickey Mutt." It is drawn by H. G. Weagant.

Two new single column comics are being offered by the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia. They run under the titles "Otto's Auto" and "Omar Jr." The same syndicate has obtained newspaper rights to "The Wife that Failed" by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Philip Dunning and George Abbott have novelized the play "Broadway" and all rights have been purchased by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

"Harold Teen," comic strip drawn by Carl Ed for the Chicago Tribune News-Paper Syndicate, is about to be filmed with Marilyn Miller as "Lillums" and Grant Lyon as "Harold."

Dr. William T. Ellis of Swarthmore, Pa., who syndicates Sunday School lessons and religious articles, was rescued from drowning at Virginia Beach near Norfolk, on July 11, through the efforts of a fellow clergyman and a life guard. Dr. Ellis was swimming beyond the ropes when caught in a strong undertow.

Frank Simonds, special writer of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, will sail for Europe late next month to report the Geneva conference for syndicate clients.

Lawson Robertson, head coach of the University of Pennsylvania and for the American Olympic team, is writing a series of weekly articles on amateur sports and physical training for the King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York. The same syndicate also announces a series on "Famous Composers" by Cossette Douglass, a staff writer, and that it has obtained rights to William Almon Wolff's new novel "Beauty and the Million."

John T. McCutcheon cartoonist of the Chicago Tribune, accompanied vice-president Charles G. Dawes and a party of friends on a trip to Cimarron, N. M., where they are to fish for cut-throat trout in the mountain streams and lakes.

"The Story of Thomas Jefferson" in picture strip form is being offered by King Features Syndicate, New York. The strip is adapted from the biography by William Elroy Curtis.

McClure Newspaper Syndicate has obtained second serial rights to the "Lazy Detective" by George Dilnot and the "Blue Car Mystery" by Natalie Sumner Lincoln.

"Skies of Tomorrow," a series of eight articles by Commander Richard E. Byrd, is being offered by the Famous Features Syndicate, New York.

REPRESENTING THE NEWSPAPERS

GEORGE B. DAVID COMPANY has been appointed the national advertising representatives both in the New York and Chicago territory by the Hicothe (Mo.) Constitution.

New Jersey Newspapers, Inc., are now representing the Ocean City (N. J.) Sunday Journal in the national field.

E. C. Mogensen, president of M. C. Mogensen & Co., Inc., is using the Pacific Air Transport to fly along the Pacific coast to the offices of the various newspapers he represents in the national advertising field. Recently pressure of work in San Francisco prevented Mr. Morgensen from making an early morning train to take him to several newspapers in the San Joaquin Valley. By using the plane, he was able to fly down to the newspapers and return the same day to keep his appointments in San Francisco.

CHANGES PAGE SIZE

The Lenoir (N. C.) News-Topic has changed its make-up from a six-column folio to an eight-column page.

PLAN CO-OPERATIVE DRIVE

Following the example of other small retailers in combating chain store competition, Erie (Pa.) grocers and meat dealers have formed the Erie County Handy Service Advertising Bureau, which will devise a plan of co-operative advertising for the members. C. D. Lamb is president of the new bureau.

MEMORIAL CAMP DEDICATED

Camp Campbell Gard, presented to the Hamilton, O., Y. M. C. A. by Mr. and Mrs. Homer Gard in memory of their son, Charles Campbell Gard, was dedicated June 29. Mr. Gard is publisher of the Hamilton (O.) Evening Journal and his son was managing editor of the paper at the time of his death in 1921. The camp covers 32 acres and has 10 bunk houses, in addition to several other buildings.

SOLMSON NAMED M. E.

Meyer Solmson has been promoted to the position of managing editor of the New York Morning Telegraph. He will have full authority in the direction and management of the news and editorial departments of the paper. Mrs. Lytton Gray Ament, president of the paper, will continue to advise along editorial lines. Mrs. Ament was the widow of Edward R. Thomas and succeeded him as president and publisher of the Telegraph, in which position she is continuing. Col. Lytton Gray Ament's appointment as general manager of the paper, forecast in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week, became effective this week.

While death may have been accidental, Coroner Carl C. Reifeis is inclined to the suicide theory.

LIBEL SUIT SETTLED

London Actress Brought Action Over Printed Marriage Rumor

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, July 2.—An action for damages for alleged libel brought by Miss Gladys Cooper, the famous English actress (Mrs. Buckmaster) against the London Express Newspapers, Ltd., proprietors of the Sunday Express, was settled in the King's Bench division of the High Court of Justice recently before Mr. Justice Horridge.

It was stated for plaintiff that she had brought the action because of what she felt was a growing habit of some persons who wrote on theatrical matters to insert in newspapers paragraphs about members of her profession that it might not be thought proper to write about other people.

The paragraph she complained of appeared in the Sunday Express on November last, and referred to a rumor that had got abroad that Miss Gladys Cooper was engaged to be married to a well-known man at whose house she had stayed in company with several other people.

The paragraph quoted Miss Cooper as saying that next time they wanted to marry her she wished they would choose someone respectable. Miss Cooper made no such statement, which w very bad taste, and although ever portunity had been given the news of apologizing, no apology had made.

A satisfactory arrangement had made regarding costs, which was al Miss Cooper wanted, she said, a was agreed that the record shoul withdrawn.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

A TWO-COLUMN box of "Bargain Briefs" on the classified advertising page of the Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Eagle-News is a lure for small space buyers who want to call attention to daily specials. The ads are set similar to the regular classified copy. They average about 20 ads a day.—C-W.

Carriers on one newspaper are given records based on promptness in deliveries; courtesy to customers; new subscribers gained; low percentage of lost subscribers, etc., with prizes awarded each six months in the form of cash bonuses to the high ones. B. A. T.

What are the "neighbors" of your town doing to combat earwig and insect pests this summer? Ask for letters on this subject, with a dollar prize a day for the best one. When interest in the subject of swatting the insect is at its height obtain a page of ads from the druggists, the department stores and retailers, advertising patent remedies for ridding homes of flies, mice, roaches, earwigs and gardens and orchards of pests.—C. M. L.

"Old Home Week," or "Harvest Home," have been popular festivals for years and may be conducted through newspapers. These should be set for about Oct. 15. Secure a list of oldest subscribers and all subscribers who have moved to other counties or states. Invite them personally and ask for letters telling about themselves, their earlier connection with your community and a few words about their new location. Make it a visit of your out-of-town subscribers, through your columns with the folks at home.

The feature can be large or small as space permits and it is often easy to sell one or more of your oldest mercantile establishments liberal space for institutional copy.

The Old Home Week represented by letters to be published in the paper may be made an annual affair on certain definite dates and publicity given several weeks in advance to create interest.

Think how many home subscribers will read with interest the letters from those who have moved away and who return in this unusual way through your columns for a friendly one day visit.—Wm. O. Wiseman, Omaha.

On each highway leading out of every city are various sandwich shops, barbecue stands, etc. Why not a page each week during the summer months advertising the best of these and soliciting the trade of motorists.—Norman B. Terry.

In the average city daily newspapers with well regulated morgues are frequently annoyed by weekly publications and others borrowing cuts and mats. These borrowers never seem to realize that the dailies spend good money for them. In Scranton one of the newspapers has helped solve the trouble by establishing a "no borrow and no loan rule." It pays for all cuts it uses and makes all others do the same. Other newspapers, program publishers, etc., wishing to borrow are given mats of the original cuts with the cost being one-half of the original engraving charges. In this way the newspaper cuts down its engraving bills while it retains original cuts for its morgue. The rule nets hundreds of dollars income each year that would otherwise not be available.—T. J. B., Scranton.

MANY papers are publishing scout pages or sections. A scout-craft question and answer column, conducted by some prominent scout leader in the city, will draw attention and interest to this part of the paper and will establish the publication among the youngsters of the city.—Ralph M. Cohen, Columbus, O.

Church news is good but better if handled in an out-of-the-rut manner. One way that has been proven a hit is "The Sunday Church Visitor." Each Sunday a staff man visits a different church and for Monday's paper writes a feature story in which the sermon is not the main idea. The music, atmosphere of friendliness, any little points of interest, should be woven into the story. After a few are run churches will be eager to have the "Sunday Church Visitor" call.—L. G. S.

What does your public library do for the summer vacationist, in the way of furnishing literature to those absent from the city? A human interest story may be written about the kind of books drawn; how long kept, and whether they are mailed back.—C. M. L.

When things are dull in the office and you have plenty of spare reporters around send one of them out on a tour of the city's park system. Have him write up what he sees during his trip. Many curious and highly entertaining characters inhabit parks during the warm weather and your reporter, especially if he has a sense of humor, can build a real human interest story out of his travels.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

A constructive series of comments can be obtained from business men and girls on "Going to an Interview." Some say they get the job when they go without any expectations; others believe confidence of manner is essential. Of course there can't be any universal formula that will land the job, but the suggestions put forth might help a lot of job seekers. —S. S. Smith.

The Boston Herald has been running for some months stories on unusual occupations for women. Accounts obtained from women who have established their own business, telling they happened to choose their par line, how they made a start and their success has been.—Z. P. W. Boston, Mass.

SPECIAL CURTIS EDITION

Portland Press-Herald Greets Philadelphia Publisher in Maine

A special edition of the Portland (Me.) Press Herald, relating in picture and narrative the story of how he had come back to Portland "for a haircut," greeted Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Philadelphia publisher, on his appearance at the Rotary luncheon in Portland last week.

In addition to its humorous features, the Press Herald carried a front page spread dealing with Mr. Curtis's achievements as a publisher and his benefactions to his native state. The publisher spoke briefly in response to the ovation given him. Among the guests at the dinner was Guy P. Gannett, president of the Portland, Maine, Publishing Company.

While in the city, Mr. Curtis, with his family and a large number of guests from his yacht, the Lyndonia, attended the organ recital in City Hall. This organ, one of the largest municipal organs in the world, was donated to the city by the publisher.

The South's progress is not Imaginary---

Travel thru any part of the South, whether it's in North Carolina or Florida, Virginia or Alabama—you will find the hum of industry everywhere. You will meet a serious minded class of people, finally awakened to the realization that the proverbial "Acres of Diamonds" have at last been found in their own back yards.

Prosperity is evident everywhere, but it is permanent—not imaginary. With contented labor plentiful, with cheap power, with an excellent climate, and with unlimited natural resources of coal, iron and other minerals that can be taken from the ground cheaply—with good farm lands, producing bumper crops, with good roads and excellent transportation facilities—and with a new realization that the world wants and needs its products—is it any wonder then that the South has opened its eyes wide to its great possibilities, and put both shoulders to the Wheel of Progress?

Come—Don't overlook your own opportunities. If you have a good product it should be known to the South.

We Build a City of Youth to Keep Us Young

FOR many years The Chicago Daily News has been building a CITY OF YOUTH to keep itself young . . . young in purpose and practices . . . young in its appeal to the young heart and vigorous mind of every generation.

Many newspapers seek to appeal to youth. In no newspaper in America, we believe, is this appeal so answered in terms of actual enrolled confidence as it is in The Daily News.

Behind The Daily News is one of the greatest bodies of organized youth in the world, a veritable metropolis, with a registered population of more than 270,000. Many newspapers claim youthful readers. The Daily News has an enrolled nucleus greater than the population of all but 23 actual cities of the United States as proof of its remarkable following among the young hearts and young minds of Chicago.

This CITY OF YOUTH is built upon three activities sponsored by The Daily News, unique in their program, record-breaking in their size:

Topsy Turvy Time, probably the largest radio club for boys and girls in the world, with a registered membership of 225,000, its own hour of broadcast over The Daily News Radio Station, WMAQ, and its own newspaper on the back page of The Daily News. As an evidence of its loyalty and responsiveness it raised over $5,700 toward The Daily News $113,500 Mississippi flood relief fund.

Wide-Awake Club: A 21-year-old organization for older boys and girls with a membership of over 36,000 and its own weekly page in The Daily News.

A citywide program of park and playground competitions which in 1926 had an entry list of over 9,000 and an attendance record of hundreds of thousands.

This CITY OF YOUTH graduates its thousands into the ranks of adult readers yearly. They carry with them a continued appreciation and enjoyment of the newspaper that made their youth joyous.

Through this CITY OF YOUTH The Chicago Daily News lays deep the foundations of prestige and security . . . . increasing and strengthening that loyal lifetime readership that is a distinctive characteristic of Memphis Press-Scimitar Co.,

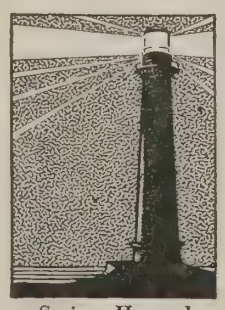
Memphis, Tennessee.

Dear Sirs:

We have audited the records pertaining to the circulation of the Memphis Press-Scimitar for the period from November 16, 1926, to March 31, 1927.

The gross circulation was verified by examination of charges to accounts receivable arising from circulation and by examination of the records of cash receipts relating to circulation.

Deductions were made from gross circulation for City carriers of 1.76%, City dealers 6.63⅓, Suburban dealers .96%, and Country dealers 1.02%. These deductions represent actual returns and allowances for late, non-delivered, and unsold copies, together with left over and unsold copies arrived at through audit of the records and the customary outside investigation.



WE HEREBY CERTIFY that in our opinion the daily average net paid circulation for the period from November 16, 1926, to March 31, 1927, was 93,164 papers, as shown in the accompanying statement.

Yours truly,
Haskins & Sells

Completely Disprove Allegation by Competitor

On April 10, 1927, the Commercial Appeal charged:

"The recent press runs and circulation records show that The Press-Scimitar has far less than 93,562 paid subscribers. Probably not more than 73,000. A mere difference of more than 20,000 between fiction and fact—between falsehood and truth."

Scripps-Howard

The Press-Scimitar repeats what it said immediately following the publication of the strange charge:

"Either The Press-Scimitar lied or it didn't.

"If it did it should be branded as the greatest newspaper cheat in the history of the publishing business, should be thoroughly discredited by the public, should be entitled to no further confidence from its readers and no further support from its advertisers.

"If it did not then the Commercial Appeal, having put forth such a charge, should be made to pay in proportion to enormity of charge."

Eloquence Could Not Sway This Jury

¶ Neither honeyed words nor polished phrases can sway the department head of a department store. His opinion of the value of advertising is based on results. He might not know the difference between a milline and a monotype—but he does know which paper brings the crowds to his counters.

¶ On Saturday the department head knows whether Friday's advertisement did its work or fell down on the job. He doesn't have to wait for any outlying districts to be heard from. The sales slips for the day are all he requires in the way of evidence.

¶ A jury composed of department store executives is the hardest-boiled and at the same time the fairest jury before which a newspaper can present its case. In Baltimore, that jury gives a unanimous verdict in favor of the Sunpapers, day after day, week after week, year after year.

¶ For only in the Sunpapers will you find the complete advertisements of all the department stores. Eloquence didn't win that case—indisputable evidence in the form of results did!

Dedicate Handsome Memorial To Mellett As Martyr's Enemy Is Convicted

New Canton News Building to Stand as Monument to Murdered Editor—Former Chief of Police Gets Life—Newspapermen Contribute to Lectureship Fund

WHEN Don R. Mellett, editor of the Canton (O.) Daily News was slain from ambush on July 16, 1926, by a cowardly gunman hired by the Canton underworld to "get" him for his fearless newspaper attacks upon them and their police confederates, his associates on the News and newspaper men everywhere vowed that his murder should be avenged and that his name should be written indelibly in the history of American journalism.

On Saturday, July 16, one year to the very day after the murder, two events took place which demonstrated that his sacrifice has not been forgotten by his associates, and will not be forgotten by the citizens of Canton.

The first was the conviction of Saranus Lengel, former Canton chief of police, of first degree murder for his connection with the editor's death, carrying with it a sentence of life imprisonment. It was against Lengel and his connection with the organized vice of Canton that Mellett's bitterest attacks were made, and his conviction justifies the editor's charges.

The second event, and one notable in journalism, was the laying of the cornerstone of the new $300,000 Canton Daily News plant dedicated as a monument to the martyred editor, whose campaign won for his paper the 1926 Pulitzer gold medal for the most disinterested and meritorious service of any paper to its community.

To make the new building truly a memorial, the Pulitzer gold medal will be placed in a permanent niche in the lobby, together with a portrait of Don Mellett. The faces of the medal will be worked into the ornamental frieze across the front of the building, and on the cornerstone the following inscription will appear: "The Canton Daily News—Pulitzer Gold Medal 1926—Erected 1927."

Of shining white stone with marble trim, the new building will serve as a perpetual reminder of Don Mellett's heroism and devotion to his city, and as a constant warning to the forces of crime everywhere that editorial freedom cannot be curbed by threats or assassins' bullets.

By the apprehension and conviction of the murderers, the cleansing of Canton, and the erection of the new building as a memorial former Governor James M. Cox, publisher Charles E. Morris and Mellett's other newspaper associates have kept their solemn pledge that his martyrdom should not be in vain.

And in the larger field of journalism a movement is making steady progress which aims to make Mellett's name a guiding light for future editors and newspaper workers—the campaign for $5,000 to found the Don R. Mellett Lectureship in New York University. Editors in all parts of the country are contributing to the fund, a report made by Prof. James Melvin Lee, treasurer, shows.

Lengel, the former chief of police is the fifth man to be convicted for sharing in the crime. The others are:

Patrick McDermott, gunman imported and hired to commit the murder. Serving life.

Ben Rudner, who hired and paid McDermott. Life.

Louis Mazer, who turned state's evidence. Serving five to 20 years.

Floyd Streitenberger, former Canton policeman, who aided the conspirators. Life.

Lengel was convicted on the testimony of Streitenberger, who testified that the chief knew of the plan to "beat up" Mellett, and when the plan ended in murder, assisted Streitenberger to fix up an alibi.

Lengel's attorneys will ask for a new trial on the grounds that the chief did not know the plot was to end in murder. The Ohio law, however, holds that any person who conspires with others to commit a crime is "fully responsible to the fullest extent to which the conspiracy may go."

The former chief was overcome when the verdict was announced.

"As God is my judge, I had nothing to do with it," he cried.

Lengel was arrested on the 20th anniversary of his connection with the police department. He had planned to retire at that time on a pension of $137.50 a month.

Editorially, the Canton News said in part:

"It should strike terror to the hearts of those other guilty ones that on the anniversary of Don R. Mellett's deliberate execution, a jury of twelve selected men and women, should find guilty the one who appeared most secure against conviction because of the powerful influences behind him; on which anniversary the institution he served and loved and animated should be reconsecrated in solemn and sacred service to 'Carry On.'

"The work of Don R. Mellett has been vindicated. His inspiration rules. Neither his spirit nor those who loved him have vengeance in their hearts. But true to his ideals, true to his memory, they must carry on his work until the rule of criminals, and those who guide them, in high or low place, is ended; until all the smug manipulators, who never soiled their hands, regardless of their smudgy hearts, are driven from the market place of vice."

The laying of the cornerstone of the new Canton News plant was made a formal civic function and every speech made by notables on the program paid tribute to the heroic spirit of the slain editor.

Attending the exercises were Mrs. Florence E. Mellett, widow of Don Mellett, and their four children Evan, who has been re-christened Don R. Jr., Jean Catherine, Elizabeth Lou and Martha Jane; Mrs. Margaret A. Mellett, mother of Don Mellett and his brothers John and Lloyd of Indianapolis, and a number of their friends.

The ceremonies were conducted by Charles E. Morris, who succeeded Mellett as publisher of the News and who has directed the work which Mr. Mellett had undertaken, in addition to promoting the investigation of his predecessor's murder and the prosecution and conviction of the plotters.

Former Senator Atlee Pomerene, a native of Canton, made the principal address. Mayor Stanford M. Swarts and Henry A. Roemer, president of the Canton Chamber of Commerce, assisted in the program, which was opened by Rev. Fr. A. B. Stuber of St. Peter's Roman Catholic church, who rendered the invocation. A brief statement and prayer were given by Rabbi Charles B. Latz of the Jewish Synagogue. Benediction was pronounced by Rev. W. E. Bridge, pastor of the First Baptist church and president of the Canton Ministerial association.

In laying the cornerstone, Mr. Morris said there could be no building of any worth unless builded by clean hands directed by a pure heart and that of all structures for public service not excepting the church or the school, the newspaper possessed the greatest power for good or evil.

Mr. Pomerene, praising the courage of Don Mellett, said:

"With the ideals of Don Mellett, I would say we need the leadership of more Don Melletts, which would help to make a better community, a better state and a better nation. It is such men that this country needs to solve such problems as Don Mellett started to solve here. The world is better for his having lived.

"My heart goes out to that mother and her children, to Don Mellett's mother and his brothers who are gathered here to take a part in these ceremonies. My tribute to them is that God give us more such men as Don Mellett.

"Today we lay this cornerstone. It is a memorial not only to Don Mellett but to the right kind of journalism, to courage, to clear thinking. May the Canton Daily News and its organizations and its policies be instrumentalities toward good in this community and to the country at large.

"I am sure that the spirit of Don Mellett will be keeping watch over this building and what transpires therein. May we always remember those great ideals which Don Mellett conceived for the betterment of his community, and may we continue to follow his example."

Among the articles placed in the leaden box in the cornerstone of the News building were the following:

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF NEW CANTON NEWS PLANT, MEMORIAL TO SLAIN EDITOR

ABOVE is a perspective view of the new home of the Canton Daily News, the cornerstone for which was laid July 16, the first anniversary of the death of Don R. Mellett. The building is to be a permanent memorial for the editor.

It is to be 66 feet wide and 200 feet deep, two stories on Market avenue and three stories on Piedmont avenue. It will be constructed of white stone and marble trim, is of Italian architectural design with red tile overhanging roof, and will be used exclusively for publishing purposes by the Canton News. In a permanent niche in the foyer will be placed the Pulitzer Gold Medal recently awarded the Canton Daily News with a fine painting of Mellett.

The building is being erected by Former Governor James M. Cox, owner and publisher of the News League of Ohio, of which the Canton News is a member.

It is estimated that the cost will be in the neighborhood of $300,000. A large amount of new equipment, including a double sextuple Scott press will be installed in the building, which will be ready for occupancy on Jan. 1. Leonard Schultze of New York is the architect, and the building is being erected under direction of the George Fuller Company of Chicago.

The services of Don R. Mellett to American jornalism will be recalled annually in New York City through the Don R. Mellett Memorial Lectureship. This Lectureship, the gift of various newspapers scattered throughout the United States has been etrusted to the keeping of the Department of Journalism at New York University. The University itself through its consolidated endowment has guaranteed the principal of the funds raised and also guarantees an income of five per cent.

The task of selecting each year the man to deliver the address will be asigned to a special committee. This committee will also select the time for delivery so that the lecture may have the widest possible influence in setting forth those principles of dynamic journalism which will be forever linked with the name of Don R. Mellett.

In order to make the Lectureship assured it was fixed financially at the low figure of $5,000. The income, of course, will in no way compensate the man who delivers the address, but it will be an honorarium to pay his traveling expenses, etc.

According to the original plan a distinguished journalist was to be selected each year to deliver the lecture. The New York Evening Post, in an editorial endorsing the Lectureship, suggested that at times it might be well to go outside the field of journalism and have some distinguished jurist or publicist make the address. This suggestion is one of the things to be considered by the committee which will function just as soon as the funds collected yield the honorarium mentioned.

Among the newspapers which have contributed to the Mellett Memorial Lectureship are: Canton (O.) Repository; North Canton (O.) Sun; Barbourville (Ky.) Mountain Advocate; Cloverport (Ky.) Breckenbridge News; Plymouth (Mass.) Old Colony Memorial Press; Langdon (N. AKRON EDITOR HAILS NEWSPAPER MEN WHO AVENGED MELLETT'S DEATH

THE following editorial by L. E. Judd, editor of the Akron (O.) Times-Press appeared Monday in that newspaper following the conviction of S. A Lengel, former Canton chief of police, for his connection with the murder of Don R. Mellett:

"CANTON'S SORDID DRAMA ENDS

"With the conviction of Stranus A. Lengel on a first degree murder charge, the full story of Canton's shame has been told.

"Lengel, former police chief and for many years an outstanding figure in the civic life of our neighboring city, must go to the penitentiary to spend the remainder of his life.

"There he will join a sinister group—a group that sneered at the law, commercialized the bad instincts of men and women, prostituted the processes designed to protect the public and, finally, snuffed out the life of a brave editor who dared tell the truth that he might arouse the conscience of his city.

"It has been a strange sordid drama. Its quickly changing scenes have brought out in bold relief the hideous corruption that lurks in the shadow of public indifference and civic lethargy. Across the stage have marched a vicious cast and, as the plot unfolded four of them have made exit to living deaths behind prison bars.

"First to the exit was Pat McDermott, weazened rat, who for a paltry sum, fired his bullets from the darkness and stilled the merry whistled tune of a man who threatened the security of Canton's underworld.

"Following Pat was Ben Rudner, son of a so-called millionaire junk man—'Big Ben' they called him and he gloried in his reputation as a dangerous man.

"Then there came Louie Mazer, trafficker in women, dope and bootleg liquor. As he stood out in the spotlight for a few brief minutes, he sniveled and whined. Then he told.

"Next came Floyd Streitenberger, brutal and ignorant—Streitenberger of the police department—Streitenberger, the pawn of Lengel and the willing tool of the underworld. His cloak of bravado melted away under the spotlight and he, too, told.

"Bringing up the rear of this fantastic procession was Lengel himself. Sworn to protect the public, he lived for years hand-in-hand with the element that seeks to destroy orderly processes and substitute therefor the rule of the jungle. It was against Lengel and Lengel's methods that Don Mellet aimed his hottest fire. And it was primarily to save Lengel's job that the forces of the jungle plotted the death of Mellett.

"The drama has not been without its cleaner side.

"There was Henry Timken, Canton's big manufacturer and leading citizen. It was he who verbally lashed the timid little men of Canton into a sense of their own responsibility. It was he who scorned the threat of the underworld to expose his personal dealings with a bootlegger. It was he who said: 'If I have contributed in any way to the death of Don Mellett, I want to take my punishment along with the rest.'

"There was Earl Hexamer, director of public safety, who fired Lengel out of the police department.

"There was Charles Morris, who succeeded Mellett on the Canton Daily News and who carried on Don's fight, tirelessly and intelligently. There was Judge Pontius who worked shoulder to shoulder with Morris.

"There were Ned Doyle and Bob Larkin, of the Cleveland Press, and Clyde Mason of the Times-Press, and many other newspapermen who worked and fought, pleaded, threatened and cajoled, moved heaven and earth to keep the investigation alive and bring the murderers to justice.

"And finally, there was Prosecutor McClintock. At the outset he was hesitant and timid—apparently somewhat in awe of the strength of the underworld and the smugness of the respectables. Then he became militant, vigorous and effective.

"The story has been told.

"Perhaps it is lacking in some of its details but the main essentials are known.

"Canton's timid respectables at first resented the nationwide exposure. But they now realize that the spotlight has been cleansing.

"The murderers can never atone. But they are in safe keeping.

"A new Canton has been born, clean and decent.

"A victory has been scored for civic righteousness.

"Don Mellett, brave crusader, can rest in peace."

TEX RICKARD STARTS TO BUY ADVERTISING

But the Newspapers Take a $10,000 Free Ride from Promoter, Who Places His First Paid Space Amounting to $15,000 in New York and Brooklyn Dailies

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

FOR the first time in his 21 years as a fight promoter, Tex Rickard, who has made millions through free publicity given him in the newspapers, this week bought his first five-cent piece in paid advertising. A 1,000 line advertisement was placed for the promoter by the Hanff-Metzger advertising agency in 17 New York and 4 Brooklyn papers at a cost of $15,000 on the day of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight, July 21.

While making his first advertising investment, the astute pug exploiter overlooked no possible bid for free publicity. Rickard gave to newspaper men more than $10,000 in Dempsey-Sharkey fight tickets, a block which speculators considered worth in the neighborhood of $30,000.

The actual selling talk that made Rickard a paying customer of the press, instead of, like the newspapers themselves, on the "free list," was delivered by Harry Ahearn, advertising manager of the New York Evening Graphic.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER for several years has been calling attention to the existing condition which gave professional fighters as an industry, free space in the news columns. This year the New York Evening Graphic also took up the crusade.

Mr. Ahearn was introduced to Rickard by Ed. Sullivan of the Graphic's sports department. He sold the promoter simply on the business value of paid advertising. He told him of the good-will obtained by telephone and gas companies through paid advertising, which, for selling purposes, they perhaps did not need to buy. He also explained to the promoter that he could sell the public the idea that fighting is now a "clean sport."

Rickard agreed to advertise the Dempsey-Sharkey fight and also place advertising in New York papers for all other boxing contests held at Madison Square Garden. His decision to be, as Mr. Ahearn described it, "business-like" and void of the cheap free space crowd," followed a month's free ballyhoo in the press and the $10,000 ticket present to the newspaper men.

No New York newspaper, as far as EDITOR & PUBLISHER could learn, offered to pay for the working press tickets. "They weren't for sale," was the naive explanation of a sports editor. All the stuff Dorgan had to give away were robbed up, and he was besieged for more.

On Wednesday Rickard gave out, as an exhibit in the ticket speculator's tax investigation, a long list of names of men who had purchased fight tickets, including many prominent newspaper executives. There was also a list of newspaper names on the "complimentary exempt" list.

One of the biggest buyers of seats was Paul W. Gallico, sports editor of the New York Daily News. He took 98 seats and informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER they were for officials of the paper. Most of the big block, he said, went to the advertising manager, who "probably either sold them to space buyers at box-office prices, or gave them away to clients." Other big buyers among newspaper executives made the same explanation of their purchase of big blocks.

Before reversing his policy and buying paid advertising, Rickard in jovial mood had long boasted he could get all he wanted for nothing from the generous American press. "Just get your name in the papers and you are sitting pretty," was a slogan he frequently quoted.

The copy, on this occasion, was headed: "A Message from Tex Rickard About the Dempsey-Sharkey Bout."

At the top was a map showing people how to reach the Yankee Stadium, and on the right hand side of the copy was the legend explaining the various prices in detail. A reproduction of Tex Rickard's signature was under the message which filled the left hand half of the copy, and explained the problem faced in seating 80,000 fight patrons, the methods he was adopting to meet that problem, and advice offered the fans to cooperate with him.

This copy idea was sold to Rickard by Mr. Ahearn, who introduced the promoter to the Hanff-Metzger agency. According to Mr. Ahearn, the story actually dates back to the Joe Dundee-Pete Latzo fight, several weeks ago.

Ahearn was with Sullivan of the Graphic's sport department on the night of the fight and on the way to the grounds stopped off at the home of Johnnie Dundee, the ex-champion, for a few minutes. Humbert J. Fugazy was there, and the newspaper man gave him a sales talk. He advised Fugazy, Rickard's rival, to steal a march on the rest of the professional boxing world and be the first to buy space in the newspapers.

Sullivan, the sports writer, heard this talk and was impressed. He is a friend of Rickard's and told the promoter about it. On July 19, he arranged for Mr. Ahearn to talk to Rickard.

A business office opinion on Rickard's decision was expressed by J. F. Bresnahan, business manager of the New York World: "Apparently Tex Rickard is acquiring some horse sense. He's beginning to realize that his business is a real business, and from the point of view of gaining and maintaining public good-will, it is just as necessary for him to advertise in paid space as it is for the telephone or gas companies."

E. H. Gauvreau, editor of the Graphic, said: "I have long considered that commercialized sport should buy advertising in the newspapers. Newspapers have given them free space for actual advertising long enough. Editors would be freer to tell the truth about fights and also the theater if they refused to accept free passes, and paid their own way. Relations between newspapers and commerce should be on a purely business basis, and not connected with any exchange of courtesies."

Reporting the fight on Thursday was a regiment of newspaper men, which outnumbered the correspondents sent from this country in 1917-18-19 to cover the World War. The press representation was said to be greater than at the "Battle of the Sesqui" in Philadelphia last year, and greatest since the Dempsey-Carpentier fight in Jersey City. Four rows of seats accommodated the writers and telegraphers. Sixty wires were installed.

The Scripps-Howard newspapers purchased the right to have their name connected with the radio broadcast of the affair over a vast network of stations.

Typical of a single newspaper's coverage of the fight was the arrangement made by New York Herald Tribune which had a "fight staff" of nine men and one woman. The actual fight itself was reported by three sports writers, W. O. McGeehan, Harry Cross and Grantland Rice. A society editor was present to spot people of prominence in the crowd. Ned McIntosh was assigned to write a humorous story, while Ishbell Ross reported "the woman's angle." In addition there were three general reporters present to handle a "crowd story."

The reporters described the fight as a $1,000,000 sell-out. Some placed the attendance at 90,000, while others said 80,000. The sports writers claimed there was more interest in this fight than any other in history, which was not for a championship. Odds were on Sharkey, but the few news men who indulged in prediction were fairly divided.

A very few minutes after Dempsey won by the unexpected K. O., newspapers were on New York streets.

Stories telegraphed and telephoned from the field were set on linotype machines in short takes, so that when the fight ended the paper was all set ready to start the presses on an extra.

Editors in New York insisted the story was not over-played. In the words of A. R. Holcombe, managing editor of the Herald Tribune, the newspapers were "satisfying a legitimate curiosity."

"Of course," he added, "in covering a big show of this sort there is a tendency among newspaper men to give it an artificial stimulus. In other words, a big story in itself rolls up news. I think the big play given this fight is a healthy sign. It shows the responsiveness of editors to news situations. Maybe over-emphasis can be charged. Personally, I believe the majority of newspaper readers were interested in this fight and were leading the newspapers, rather than the newspapers leading the public. It is known that men paid as high as $200 a ticket to see this fight."

Most of the preliminary publicity was given to Dempsey. The Western Union disclosed that for the period from July 1 to July 15, 255,781 words were sent from Saratoga Springs, N. Y., by 49 newspapers and news agency correspondents. According to a dispatch to the New York Times July 16, the total file exceeded 300,000.

The file from the Dempsey camp was transmitted by staff correspondents to newspapers in San Francisco, St. Louis, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and New York. Press associations also carried stories to members and clients in the U. S., Canada, South America and Europe.

The New York Journal joined the NewYork Sun this year with the slogan: "Don't Bet on Fights."

BRITISH ADVERTISING CONVENTION AND EXHIBITION HELD AT OLYMPIA

Rt. Hon. C. A. McCurdy, K. C., Presides at Opening Session July 19—All Advertising Interests Represented in First Publicity Exposition

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

THE third annual convention of the British Advertising Association (formerly District Fourteen of the International Advertising Association) opened July 19.

Rt. Hon. C. A. McCurdy, K. C., president of the Advertising Association, presided at the opening general session in the grand concert hall of Olympia, London, where the convention and the accompanying Advertising Exhibition are being staged from July 19 to 22. Speakers included Rt. Hon. L. S. Amery, M. P., Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs and for the Colonies, who referred to the "British Empire" atmosphere of the convention, where the British Empire Marketing Board, the official organization to boost the selling of Empire produce within the Empire, has acquired the largest stand in the building. He was followed by Sir Robert Horne, M. P., H. H. Charles, president of the Charles Advertising Service, New York, and Percy C. Burton, director of the London Press Exchange, Ltd. There was a convention service at the "Newspapermen's Church," The Church of Saint Bride, Fleet Street, when the Dean of Windsor (who also led the discussion on church publicity at the Church Advertising Session on July 21) was the special preacher, and the Rev. Arthur Taylor, vicar of the church, conducted the service.

Sessions held on following days were:

TUESDAY—British Poster Advertising Association; National Advertisers' Group; Advertising Agents; Newspaper Executives, B. F. Crosfield, Daily News, presiding, Community Advertising.

WEDNESDAY—General Session Viscount Burnham presiding; Sales Managers' session; Poster Advertising; Printing; Press Representation Section; Women's Session.

THURSDAY—General "Empire" Session, Sir William S. Crawford presiding; Business Research; Church Advertising; Club Executives; Direct Mail.

FRIDAY—General Business Session.

H. R. H. the Duke of York visited the Exhibition on Tuesday, July 19. The Exhibition itself was opened on Monday, July 18, by Rt. Hon. L. S. Amery, M. P. It contains 81,700 square feet of floor space, the whole of which was sold out nearly three weeks before the opening. There were 200 exhibitors, including the British Government, all the great newspapers, printers, advertising agents, publishers, block makers, poster artists, steamship and railway companies.

To the general public Olympia represents the world's first advertising city. It consists of some four hundred stands of pure white plaster, ornamented by bands of color, lit by flood lights, and equipped with business houses, model streets, amusements centers and gardens. In a model street there are twenty-one model shops, and visitors were invited to compete in a £250 ballot competition. Another prize of £300 was offered in a poster ballot in connection with a display of Britain's best posters. In the World's Press Exhibit the first British advertisement of a Fleet Street beauty parlor, was shown. The progress of an advertisement in a newspaper from the wood pulp to the finished production was another attractive exhibit.

NEW COMPLAINT ISSUED

Technicality Invalidates First Charge Against Fall River Editor

Because of a technicality in the text of the complaint, the charge of attempted blackmail against Louis Bernier, editor and pubisher of the Fall River (Mass.) Call, tabloid, was dismissed in Fall River court July 19 and a new complaint was issued. Arraigned on the latter, Bernier's case was continued until Aug. 9 and he was released in $1,000 bail.

The complaint alleges that Bernier demanded Walter O'Hara, prominent Fall River mill man, and a brother of Neal O'Hara, newspaper columnist, pay him $500 for not printing a story concerning O'Hara.

STRIKE TALK HEARD AS OPERATORS AND WIRE SERVICES WAIT ARBITRATION

Decision of Arbitrator Towne Expected Next Week in Wage Dispute—Union Asking Printer Operators Be Placed on Same Scale as Morse Men

STRIKE talk was heard this week among both sides in the wage scale negotiations between union operators and the closed-shop news services, despite the fact that the controversy had been placed in an arbitrator's hands and his award was expected to be handed down early next week.

The arbitrator appointed by the department of labor is Judge Edward Owings Towne, former corporation counsel of Chicago, and his appointment has been approved by the union and the managements of the United Press Associations, International News Service, and Universal service, the three associations concerned.

Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press, admitted the possibility of a strike to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Subsequently it was learned that W. F. Lynch, chief wire superintendent of the U. P., had sent a letter on July 13 to eight U. P. wire chiefs, declaring that it "seems morally certain we are going to have a strike" and asking these men to notify him whether they were pro or anti-management.

Union opinion was that this was merely a smoke-screen and propaganda, and A. T. Maddux, of Knoxville, member of the union scale committee, said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER: "I see no reason in the world for a strike, but we will fight if it is forced upon us."

The expected procedure is that Judge Towne will make his award on July 25 or 26. He must make his decision before July 31, when the contract automatically expires and a technical lockout would go into effect.

Both sides have five days in which to accept or reject the arbiter's findings.

"We mean to insist on a three year contract," Mr. Bickel said. "We cannot afford to have new negotiations coming up next year in the middle of the national conventions."

Mr. Bickel said the men were asking increases in wages this year ranging from $15.25 a week to $19.25 a week and were demanding that the machine printer operators be placed on the same scale as the Morse operators, with a minimum of not less than $60 a week.

If there is a strike, a total of 450 operators will be affected. The United Press is said to employ about 300 and I. N. S. and Universal Service 150.

The management offered to sign the old agreement which expired July 1 and the men are held at work now by a clause of the contract providing for an attempt at arbitration.

"If the management throws over Judge Towne's award that probably means a strike," Mr. Maddux said.

"If it comes to a strike we will give them the whole works. We have been working for low wages so long the men are, I believe, thoroughly disgusted. There are printer men now working for $39.25 a week, a wage under the figure given by the department of labor as the minimum living cost for a man with a family."

Other members of the union scale committee with Maddux are Leonard F. Solt, for the United Press; Arthur Markel and L. M. Black for Universal Service and International News Service.

The union is asking for a minimum of $60 a week for cities under 100,000; $65 a week for cities over 100,000 and $70 for the relay points, New York and Chicago.

The contract that expired July 1 was drawn up three years ago following negotiations between Roscoe Johnson, president of the press division of the Commercial Telegraphers Union, and Mr. Bickel, president of United Press. Judge Highwell Davies ruled that the men accept a raise of $1 a week each year for three years, and the union rejected the long-term contract. Bickel and Johnson got together and agreed on an increase of $2 a week for the first year and 50 cents a week for the second and third years, a total raise of $3 and the inclusion of a clause in the contract providing that wage negotiations might be re-opened at any time during the life of the agreement if the Secretary of Labor declared a major economic crisis existed.

Mr. Johnson so far has not taken part in any negotiations in New York with the U. P., I. N. S. and Universal. He is in Canada where the scale of the Canadian Press is being negotiated.

Mr. Johnson is supposed to be on hand when the arbitrators award is handed down, but it was stated by Maddux that possibly Frank B. Powers, international secretary and treasurer, would be empowered to act in Mr. Johnson's absence.

CIGARETTE ADS LEGAL NOW IN KANSAS

Supreme Court Upholds Temporary Injunction Making Non-Advertising Clause of Law Inactive —Publishers Bring Case

Cigarette advertising is now permitted in Kansas newspapers, following successful termination July 9 of court action brought by the publishers of the Alma (Kan.) Enterprise in behalf of themselves and other members of the Kansas Press Association.

An injunction has been obtained restraining the state from enforcing the non-advertising clause which was left standing when the ten-year-old anti-cigarette law in Kansas was repealed.

O. W. Little and Frank Sage are publishers of the Alma Enterprise. They were first granted a temporary injunction by Judge A. McClure and the injunction was upheld in the Kansas state supreme court last week.

The court ruled that the legislature exceeded its authority in passing a bill allowing the sale of cigarettes, yet barring their display and advertisement.

"That action," the court stated, "was taking away the property of the newspapers and magazines, the right of freedom enjoyed by other interests."

HABEAS CORPUS WRIT DISMISSED

Court's Action Expected to Send Boston Post Man to Trial

Judge James A. Lowell in Federal Court, Boston, Tuesday, dismissed the writ of habeas corpus issued last month in the case of Fred H. Thompson, Boston Post reporter, wanted in New Hampshire on a charge of having procured the theft of a copy of an article prepared by Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York for The Atlantic Monthly.

The court's action is expected to send the case back to the state courts unless an appeal is taken. Governor Fuller had signed extradition papers permitting Thompson's removal to New Hampshire and his counsel went into the Federal Court alleging illegality in the extradition order.

DAILY CAPITALIZED AT $2,000,000

Reorganization of the Herald Printing Company, Ltd., of Montreal was completed recently. The newly organized company will have a capital of $2,000,000 divided into 20,000 shares of $100 each. Signatures to the incorporation are Hon. Joseph Philippe Baby Casgrain, Duncan McTaggart Martin, Charles Lintern Sibley, Joseph Reilly and Arthur C. Morton.

STARTS PLAYGROUND CAMPAIGN

The Northwest Ledger, Chicago community weekly, has launched a campaign for more parks and playgrounds in its section. M. Goldberger is editor.

24 EDITORS SAIL TO VIEW EUROPEAN AFFAIRS AT CLOSE RANGE

A. N. A. IS STUDYIN TREND OF AD RATES

Advertisers' Body Issues to Memb Compilation of Newspaper Circul tions and Line Rate Increases or Decreases for Two Years

How closely the Association of N tional Advertisers is studying newspa advertising rates and circulations is de onstrated by a compilation issued t month to members by the associatio publication and data department.

The compilation shows the two ye record of circulation and rate changes newspapers in the 23 largest cities in t United States. The tables, divid alphabetically into states and newspap shows the gain or loss in circulation figures and percentages; the agate li rate increases or decreases; and su divides the distribution of increased decreased circulation into city, suburb or country.

In introducing the tables the associati stated: "The interest displayed by n tional advertisers in trading territori and in the coverage of them by vario publications, has led us to spend a great effort in tying up circulation distrib tion to the only available trading ra now being reported on. As we all kno newspapers, the subject of this stud have in some cases extended their su scription effort far beyond the reach the logical shopper in their areas. O endeavor has been to check up those pa ticular papers whose circulation gai during the past two years have been ma in what is called 'country,' i. e., are outside the logical trading zones."

The cities included in the A. N. A tabulation are Los Angeles, San Fra cisco, Washington, Chicago, Indianapoli New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston, D troit, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Jersey Cit Newark, Buffalo, Rochester, New Yor City and Brooklyn, Cincinnati, Cleve land, Portland, Philadelphia, Pittsburg Seattle, Milwaukee.

VALPARAISO DAILIES MERGE

Vidette and Messenger Combined wit Vidette Publisher as President

The Valparaiso (Ind.) Daily Videt and the Valparaiso Messenger, evenin papers, have been merged as the Vidette Messenger, published by the Vidett Printing Company, Inc.

J. M. Mavity, owner of the Vidette, i president of the new corporation. J Earle Mavity, business manager of th Vidette, retains that position on the new paper. Lynn M. Whipple, managing edi tor of the Messenger, is managing edito under the consolidation.

Inland Newspapers, Inc., Chicago an New York represent the Vidette-Mes senger in the national field. The pape is being published from the Messenge plant, which is being completely remod eled and medernly equipped. A twenty four page Scott rotary press is being installed.

The Vidette was established in 1842 the Messenger in 1856.

Mr. Mavity has owned the Vidette since 1902.

A. P. INSTALLING 60 PRINTERS

New Machines to Be Placed in Operation in Kansas Aug. 1

A total of 60 new printer machines will be put into operation by the Associated Press in Kansas, Aug. 1, serving 33 member newspapers, W. J. McCambridge, traffic executive announced this week. The A. P. has installed 240 printers in the last three months, McCambridge said. This caused temporary loss of work to 150 Morse operators, but practically all of them have now been placed at other points, he claimed.

Iowa members of the A. P. will be printerized commencing Aug. 14-15. Forty-two serving twenty-seven newspapers will be put into operation in this state.

CHARGE PRESS FAKED IN DR. HOUCK CASE

Many Distinguished Scientists and Educators Issue Remarkable Statement to Clear Individual of "Outrageous Charges" and Awaken Press to Abuses in Sensationalized Science

SWEEPING and circumstantial charges of fact-distortion by the press are contained in a statement issued and signed by 25 distinguished scientists and educators, acting under the auspices of Harold de Wolf Fuller, the editor of the social organ of New York University. This extraordinary indictment of the press bears on the case of Dr. Knute Houck, whose disappearance from his home in Washington, followed by the finding of his wife's body in the Potomac River, last winter, was given wide publicity. The purpose of the statement is declared to be "not merely to clear one individual of outrageous charges, but to illustrate by this grievous instance a widespread abuse which will only be corrected when both the public and the press fully understand its dangers." The reference is to the alleged "sensationalizing of scientific investigations."

The statement is signed by the following: E. T. Bell, Professor of Mathematics, California Institute of Technology; Calvin B. Bridges, Department of Zoology, Columbia University; Charles Watts Burr, Professor of Mental Diseases, University of Pennsylvania; Robert Daniel Carmichael, Professor of Mathematics, University of Illinois; Ross McC. Chapman, Superintendent, Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Hospital, Towson, Md.; Sherwood Cobb, Principal, Chevy Chase Country Day School; David Fairchild, Botanist, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Philip S. Graven, Psychotherapist, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Anacostia, D. C.; Harry LeRoy Haywood, Editor, New York Masonic Outlook; C. Judson Herrick, Professor of Neurology, University of Chicago; L. O. Howard, Chief of Bureau of Entomology, United States Department of Agriculture; Smith Ely Jelliffe, Neurologist; Jeremiah W. Jenks, Research Professor of Government, New York University; David Starr Jordan, Author and Educator; Cassius J. Keyser, Professor of Mathematics, Columbia University; John T. Madden, Dean, School of Commerce, Accounts, and Finance, New York University; Basil Maxwell Manly, Director, People's Legislative Service, Washington, D. C.; Thomas J. McCormack, Principal, LaSalle-Peru Township High School and Junior College; William Allan Neilson, President, Smith College; Alexander Petrunkevitch, Professor of Zoölogy, Yale University; Walter Nicholas Polakov, Engineer; G. Y. Rainich, Professor of Mathematics, University of Michigan; William E. Ritter, President, Science Service, Washington, D. C.; William Morton Wheeler, Dean, Bussey Institute for Biological Research, Harvard University, and Cora L. Williams, President, Cora L. Williams Institute for Creative Education.

The statement was also approved in principle, but without reference to the accuracy of the facts, by Edwin E. Slosson, Director of Science Service; Vernon Kellogg, Secretary, National Research Council, and Earl Raymond Hedrick, Professor of Mathematics, University of California.

Following is the full text of the statement:

On Saturday, December 18, of last year, a man of thirty, scantily clothed, walking aimlessly, and muttering incoherently, was discovered on the streets of Hornell, N. Y. He was Dr. Knute Houck, the police discovered, a physician attached to the staff of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, an institution for the insane in Washington. Three days before, Dr. Houck had disappeared from his apartment in Anacostia, a suburb of Washington, leaving his two-year-old son alone. His wife, it transpired, had left the same morning; she never returned.

Enter science, escorted by a sensational press. Reporters covering the case for a Washington paper, on December 20, proceeded to introduce a mysterious Polish count with an unearthly device. "The device known as an 'anthropometer,' was supposed to register the innermost thoughts of a person and aid them in a psychoanalysis of themselves." "Dr. Houck," said the report, "had permitted the thing to prey on his mind so much that it had become a Frankenstein that struck him down." "Leading physicians at the hospital," the report continued, "admitted their own inability to understand the device, but Dr. White (head of the institution) expressed a belief that it had possibilities to a certain extent." "One of the devices was found in the Houck home, and relatives said they had been informed that it had even enticed Mrs. Houck into a study of its possibilities."

The device was photographed and the captions on the picture read "Mystery laid to 'Thought Machine.'" "Deep study of the 'Anthropometer,' designed by its inventor, a Polish count, to 'diagnose thoughts' is blamed by associates of Dr. Knute Houck for his breakdown." It should be said in passing that only a few of the physicians who, according to the article, had expressed their inability to understand the anthropometer had given any attention to it.

These are extracts from a long account which was extended in a later edition. The case was one which was sure to attract nation-wide attention because of its strange circumstances, because of Dr. Houck's position as a member of the staff of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and because of the promise he had shown professionally. He had graduated with honors from the medical school of Northwestern University and for more than two years had worked at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. At the time of this mental breakdown it looked as though he might have killed his wife, whose body was found three months later floating in the Potomac, a clear case of suicide, the evidence showed.

A murder "story" containing strange elements appeared to be in the making. The mysterious count, it should be noted, had not been asked for an explanation of his relation to the case when the report went to press. The next day the reporters visited him and, after seeing the nature of his work, apologized for the article. They attempted to make amends by quoting Dr. White as saying, "Dr. Houck's mental breakdown was caused by circumstances that were not born while he was connected with St. Elizabeth's Hospital."

But the mischief had been done. The account appearing in the one Washington paper of December 20 furnished sensational copy for papers in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities. In a few days, by means of newspaper syndicates, the wild story, made progressively still more sensational, had been spread widely over the land, reaching even Texas and Florida. The Polish count in all these versions was provided with a "thought machine" capable of diabolical machinations. The headlines left no doubt about that: "Victim of mate crazed by thinking machine. Police hold to killing theory; wife, too, deranged by device." "Houck mystery laid to his study of 'mind meter.'" "Mental meter floored Houck." "Friends believe 'thought meter' drove wife of demented doctor to suicide." "Thought machine sends Dr. Houck mad," etc., all of which was said to be the opinion of St. Elizabeth's physicians, a statement which if true would be a very serious reflection on the count's work.

Now for a few facts. Dr. Houck had suffered a previous mental breakdown while working at the Mayo Clinic, though this was not generally known by the physicians at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. His mother and his wife were greatly worried about his condition and, as the papers reported, there had been serious quarrels at home in the weeks preceding his disappearance. Dr. Houck was manifestly approaching another mental collapse. Some of his colleagues feared this and had urged him to go away for a rest.

The mysterious count is no other than Count Alfred Korzybski, author of The Manhood of Humanity, a volume which at the time of its appearance, some six years ago, was highly praised by leading scientists of this country.

In 1924 Count Korzybski presented a paper before the International Mathematical Congress in Toronto under the title, "Time-Binding, the General Theory," introducing on that occasion a relief diagram, called the anthropometer, to illustrate his theory. In 1925 he began to study and to carry on researches in St. Elizabeth's Hospital. During the two years that followed he was invited to address the Washington Society for Nervous and Mental Diseases and the Washington Psychopathological Society. These addresses were published with the title "Time-Binding, the General Theory (second paper)." His time-binding theory, of which the anthropometer is a convenient diagram, nothing more, expresses a point of view as to man's capacities compared with those of plants and animals. There is nothing occult about it. Count Korzybski is attempting to build a non-Aristotelean system, which would put the study of man on a modern scientific basis.

As to the merits of his theory this is not the place to speak, but he has labored in the ways of strict science and in the company of distinguished men. To manhandle this work, to sensationalize it and link it with insanity and the possibility of suicide or murder, as numerous representatves of the American press repeatedly did, was to treat this talented visitor to our country with criminal brutality.

And there was little or no excuse for such misrepresentations. For whatever others may have said, Dr. White, a man of international reputation, had told the reporters that in his judgment the anthropometer served a useful purpose. What, if any, Dr. Houck's personal relations with Korzybski were was not known to the reporters. These, it transpired later, had been casual.

On November 27, 1926, thus approximately two weeks before the disappearance, Count Korzybski became acquainted with Dr. Houck for the first time. It was at a scientific meeting which both attended. Dr. Houck asked him about his theories, expressing a desire to study them. The anthropometer which Dr. Houck bought for the purpose a few days later is, as The New York, (organ of New York University) stated in its issue of February 12, merely "the kindergarten method of visualizing an idea." There were a few other meetings with the count of similar nature. On the day of the disappearance, December 13, 1926, Korzybski, quite by accident, called at Dr. Houck's home. A staff physician of St. Elizabeth's Hospital asked the count to accompany him on a visit to Houck, who had summoned the physician by telephone. The visit lasted but a short time, both men trying to cheer up Houck, about whose condition they were very much concerned. Mrs. Houck the count had met twice for five minutes at a time after November 27, 1926. It is important to remember this chronology and the nature of the count's acquaintance with the Houcks, in view of what the newspapers made of it.

Such, in brief, is the story of the way in which the press linked a bit of dignified, scholarly research with an alleged murder mystery. But the case unfortunately does not end here. There has been no genuine effort on the part of the press to correct the wrong impressions given. One of the New York papers, to be sure, showed a half-hearted desire to undo its former mischief.

The result is that numerous false impressions concerning Count Korzybski and his work have been spread abroad and have been allowed to take root. Persons unfamiliar with psychiatry may assume that this work is dangerous. One particularly unfortunate result is the fact that in newspaper offices, all of which have "morgues," or space in which reference material is filed, the name of Korzybski will be associated for years with the Houck mystery, and if new factors in the case are discovered, he will be trotted out again in that connection. He apparently has no redress.

This is no fanciful conjecture. An illustration of the relentless way in which newspaper machinery may operate unless closely watched is furnished by the very New York paper which, as we have seen, attempted to correct its former misstatements—this in spite of the fact that the managing editor had been fully acquainted with the situation. Thus, on March 23 Mrs. Houck's body was found. The following day this same New York newspaper put the fat again in the fire. In a long résumé of the case, the "thought machine," with its infamous connotations, was repeatedly mentioned, the name "Korzybski," wrongly spelled, being lugged in. For Istance, "He (Dr. Houck) had studied at Northwestern University and under the Doctors Mayo at Rochester, Minn., and was gaining fame at St. Elizabeth's as an expert in the treatment of the mentally afflicted when the course of his life was changed by the 'Thought Machine.' This is the invention of Count Alfred Kurzypyski (sic), a Polish mathematician living in Washington. To the layman it is a meaningless contraption but the inventor claims that through elaborate mathematical formulae it will disclose to one who has mastered it, the innermost thoughts of any person using it." And the article concluded as follows: "Washington believes that the 'Thought Machine' brought discord and tragedy to the little home on Congress Heights."

Again the story seems to have been syndicated, for it appeared, further embroidered, in a Detroit paper and a Minneapolis paper, both bearing the date of April 17 (Sunday) the anthropometer being pictured. In the account Dr. Houck's mother was made to say: "When I would find my son poring over that thought machine or studying the occult, and my daughter-in-law reading up on psychiatry, I would caution them both not to take life too solemnly." As a matter of fact Mrs. Houck senior had not seen her son for some weeks before he met the count and first became acquainted with the latter's work on November 27, 1926.

This is a distressing bit of injustice brought about not with any malicious intent, but through the willingness of the press to seize upon anything for sensational purposes.

If it were an isolated case, there would perhaps be no reason to make much of it. But everyone is familiar with the tendency of the press to sensationalize science, especially scientific discoveries. It was only a few months ago that the headlines announced, on the authority of no less a person that Professor Pupin, that the sun was sending messages to the earth. A bit of figurative language, which was clear in the context, had been thus distorted. This sort of thing will go on unless newspaper proprietors can be made to see their responsibility in the matter.

We desire to give this particular case wide publicity in the hope that as an awful example it may have a wholesome effect both on the reading public and on the press.

JUNE LINAGE SLIGHTLY LESS THAN 1926 IN 36 LEADING CITIES

ADVERTISING volume carried by large newspapers in 36 important cities of the United States during June totalled 140,568,599 lines as compared with 147,240,905 lines in June, 1926, a loss of 6,681,306 lines, according to records gathered by the New York Evening Post Statistical Department, Inc., and EDITOR & PUBLISHER. All of the figures published below were obtained from the Evening Post service except those for the cities of Atlanta, Kansas City, Memphis, Newark, Pittsburgh, and Portland, Ore., and of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

McKISSICK HEADS SCHOOL

Named Dean of Journalism at University of South Carolina

J. Rion McKissick has been named dean of the School of Journalism in the University of South Carolina, it has been announced by President Davison M. Douglas of that institution. He succeeds Dr. W. W. Ball who resigned to become editor of the Charleston News and Courier.

Mr. McKissick has had 16 years' newspaper experience, having served as reporter, assistant editor and chief editorial writer of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, editor of the Greenville (S. C.) News and editor and owner of the Greenville (S. C.) Piedmont. In 1926 he sold the last-named newspaper and retired to enter historical work, serving as lecturer on South Carolina history in Furman University, Greenville, S. C. For two terms he was president of the South Carolina Press Association.

At present he is attending the summer session of the School of Journalism in the University of Wisconsin.

Trolley Company Aided Daily's Made-in-Springfield Week

In connection with its special 48-page edition June 29 celebrating the 75th anniversary of Springfield, Mass., as a city, the Sunday Union-Republican and the Chamber of Commerce sponsored a week's display of made-in-Springfield products in the various retail stores of the city.

On Friday, July 1, the local trolley company gave free transportation on all lines leading into the city during three hours in the morning. Merchants advertised special bargains and it was estimated more than 50,000 out-of-town residents visited the business district during the day.

FORD DEALER SUES OVER NEW MODEL STORY SENT BY PRESS SERVICES

Asks $10,000 Damages from Watertown (N. Y.) Times Claiming Libel Upon Business But Judge Dismisses Case—Alleged His Sales Fell Off

AN attempt of a Ford dealer in Watertown, N. Y., to collect $10,000 damages from the Watertown (N. Y.) Times for publication of the "new Ford car rumor story" failed recently when the Supreme Court of Jefferson county, N. Y., dismissed the case with costs to the plaintiff.

The Perl W. Devendorf Corporation, the Ford dealer, alleged that the firm's business was injured by the newspaper's stories, and in the complaint sought redress on the grounds of "slander of title or property" and "libel upon business or occupation."

The court held the plaintiff had insufficient cause for action, declaring there was no malice shown by the defendant newspaper, that the dealer did not own the Ford cars and therefore could not claim slander of title, that the words in the published story were not actionable per se, and no special damage was shown.

The story upon which the Watertown dealer sought to base his unsuccessful suit was one sent out by all press associations last March, and was not the recent false report based upon specifications which N. W. Ayer & Son claim were stolen from its offices in Philadelphia.

The dealer alleged that he had informed the Times directly that these rumors were without basis and on this ground tried to support his allegation of malice. He alleged that the stories were published "with a deliberate disregard for the effect thereof upon this plaintiff; with knowledge that the publications thereof had and would cause this plaintiff financial loss, and with every reasonable and ordinary ground for believing that said statements so published were mere rumors, and without basis; and that said articles were published after direct information had been given to the defendant that the said rumors were without basis or foundation in fact."

In the decision the court held in part:

"Slander of title has been defined as 'a false and malicious statement, oral or written, made in disparagement of a person's title to real or personal property, or of some right of his, causing him special damage'. The first essential cause of action for slander of title is ownership of the property involved.

"There is no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff was the owner of any Ford or Lincoln automobiles, the only allegation being that the plaintiff is engaged in the business of selling Lincoln and Ford automobiles and automobile parts, and is the exclusive distributor of and has the exclusive agency for the sale of products of the Ford Motor Company and for the sale of Lincoln automobiles in and abut the city of Watertown, N. Y. If the articles in question can be considered as a slander upon the products of the Ford Motor Company, the cause of action is vested in the Ford Motor Company, and not in the plaintiff in the absence of any allegation that it was the owner of any of those products.

"The second essential of a cause of action for slander of title is that the words were maliciously spoken or written and published. The words contained in the articles are not libelous per se. Therefore, it is necessary that it be alleged and proven that defendant was actuated by malicious or a wilful purpose of inflicting injury. There is no allegation in the complaint that the articles were maliciously published or with a wilful purpose of inflicting injury to the plaintiff * * *

"The third essential of the cause of action for slander of title is that it should be followed as a natural and legal consequence by pecuniary damage to the plaintiff which must be specially alleged and proved. There is in the first count of this complaint no allegation of special damage, the sole statement being 'that by reason of the foregoing facts, the plaintiff has sustained damage in the sum of $5,000.

"It is therefore evident that the complaint cannot be held to state a cause of action for slander of title.

"In the second cause of action the plaintiff has reiterated the allegations of the first count and has added certain allegations in the nature of an innuendo for the purpose of connecting the plaintiff with the articles. It will be noted that the plaintiff is nowhere mentioned or referred to in any of the articles complained of. Plaintiff has not availed itself of the simplified method provided for by Rule 96, Rules of Civil Practice, of connecting itself with the publication by alleging that the defamatory matter was published concerning it. Therefore it is necessary that there should be in the complaint allegations of extrinsic facts showing the application to plaintiff of the defamatory matter.

"The allegation relied upon to meet this situation is as follows: 'That said articles referring to Ford automobiles and Lincoln automobiles necessarily by innuendo and by direct application, referred to the plaintiff's business and that the defendant had knowledge of such reference; and that the said articles above referred to, when published, as a matter of fact, referred to Ford and Lincoln distributors and created the impression in the minds of the readers of defendant's newspaper that the distributors and representatives of the Ford Motor Company were carrying out the policy ascribed to the said Ford Motor Company, and that by concealing or attempting to conceal the facts, plaintiffs and its representatives were not dealing fairly with the buying public.'

"I am of the opinion that the words in the published articles are not actionable per se. The ordinary test is whether the words charge the plaintiff with the commission of crime or expose him to contempt, ridicule or disgrace and that in determining that question they are to be considered as a whole and in their ordinary meaning. There is, however, another class of words, which are libelous per se. and that is words used concerning a person in his business, which are defamatory in themselves and injuriously and directly affect his credit and directly occasion pecuniary injury, and it is for words of that character only that a corporation can maintain an action of slander or libel.

"The ordinary rule for determining the character of the words is from the words themselves and there is respectable authority for the contention that words cannot be actionable per se, if aid to their meaning must be sought within coloquim, inducement or innuendo. That rule, however, does not seem to be in force in this state.

"The quoted portion of the complaint does not contain any allegations of fact, but is purely in the form of an innuendo, and as was said in Corr vs. the Sun Printing and Publishing Association: 'An innuendo does not enlarge the matter set forth specifically in other portions of the complaint. It only explains the application of the words employed and when not justified by the antecedent facts to which it refers, so that rejecting it the words are not actionable, a demurrer will lie.'

"There is not a single allegation in any of the articles referring to the distributors or representatives of the Ford Motor Company or that they were carrying out the policy ascribed to the Ford Motor Company except to bring out a new model and to reduce the price of the present models; nor is there any allegation anywhere in the complaint or in any of the articles that plaintiff or its representatives were concealing or attempting to conceal the facts from the buying public. There is nothing, therefore, from which it can be inferred that the publication assails the credit or management of the business of plaintiff or directly occasions pecuniary injury to it. The publications, therefore, are not libelous per se.

"When the published words are not actionable per se, no action can be maintained unless they have occasioned actual damage to the plaintiff. Damages of this character are termed special damages, and a complaint is fatally defective unless those special damages are specifically set forth. There is in the complaint in this case no allegation of special damage, and it is, therefore, insufficient to state a cause of action."

WISCONSIN PRESS ON TOUR

150 Take Four Day Trip Through State—Glenn Frank Speaks

One hundred and fifty Wisconsin editors, members of the Wisconsin Press Association, completed their annual four day motor tour of the state Monday night, July 18, with a program at the state capitol building in Madison at which they were addressed by Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin.

The tour began at Black River Falls in 50 automobiles, continued to Winona, Minn., for a dinner and meeting with Minneapolis editors, and included among its stops, La Crosse, Prairie du Chien, Richland Center, Cuba City, Monroe and Madison. The editors were entertained in each city.

John Kuypers, De Pere, president of the association, led the party.

"Lumber Capital of the South"

THE largest lumber market from Maine to Texas is at Jacksonville, Florida. About 60,000 carloads or more than a billion feet of lumber pass through Port Jacksonville each year.

These shipments consist chiefly of Southern Pine, Gulf Red Cypress and Southern Hardwoods. Their total value is more than $35,000,000 annually.

Jacksonville is also the world's largest shipping point for naval stores, about ten million dollars' worth of these products being shipped from here yearly.

These basic industries account in part for Jacksonville's continued and steadily growing prosperity. No dull seasons; no dull years. Always a ready market for good products that are favorably known.

Make your products known to this market by advertising in Florida's greatest newspaper (daily and Sunday)—

What the 12-hour News Service of the St. Paul Dispatch & Pioneer Press means to advertisers

THE 12-hour news service of the St Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press is one of the unique features of these newspapers

It is the most valuable reader-interest asset any newspaper can offer an advertiser

It is offered, so far as we know, by one or perhaps two other newspapers in the entire country

WITH these unusual newspapers the newsday is divided into two 12-hour periods. The news from 9 P. M. to 9 A. M., is gathered into the morning issue, the Pioneer Press, served by the Associated Press and other important news services and supplemented with suitable morning paper features. The news from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M., is assembled in the afternoon edition, the St. Paul Dispatch, served by the afternoon Associated Press and other important news services and augmented liberally with suitable evening paper features. In the city of St. Paul and in 76 other Northwest cities and towns where the carrier delivery organization is similar to that of St. Paul, the St Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press are delivered by carrier right into the homes of our people. This 12-hour home delivered service represents approximately 134,500—80%—imagine it!—of the combined daily circulation.

The morning and evening editions within St. Paul and these 76 other cities and towns are absolutely distinct. Not a line of news matter, not an editorial, not an illustration or feature which appears in the Pioneer Press in the morning is repeated in the Dispatch in the evening. Each paper is complete in itself and represents the full newspaper service of the 12-hour period in which it is issued.

Beyond these "12-hour" cities and towns and out in the country where a less intensive news service is required, the morning and evening papers are considered separately, and go to separate homes and subscribers. These mail editions of both the Pioneer Press and the Dispatch cover a 24-hour news period. They constitute approximately 33,500 of the combined daily circulation which added to the 12-hour editions already referred to, together with news-stand and street sales, makes up the total combined daily circulation of more than 168,000. So far as we know, there are but one or two other strictly 12-hour newspapers in America which thus fully meet the news requirements of their people, furnishing the speedy 12-hour service to the urban and suburban reader and the 24-hour service which fully meets the needs of the outlying towns and rural districts.

In every other city . . . save these exceptions . . . the national advertiser or his agent must study the newspaper situation with great care. He must consider the morning versus the evening, must analyze the character of the papers and the classes of their readers.

As far as St. Paul is concerned, the problem of medium does not exist! The problem of fully reaching the families and fully reaching ALL the individual members of these families with a sure, strong, solid newspaper coverage adapted to their requirements, is solved by the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press.

These unique papers alone and unaided give the advertiser the same remarkable access to the homes which these papers themselves enjoy.

And there is a notable reader responsiveness to these papers which is hardly to be found in the customary 24-hour newspaper.

Morning, evening and Sunday home delivered circulation gives the advertiser contact with every member of the family, regardless of his preference for a morning or evening paper. Because of this almost perfect coverage of homes, and perfect coverage within the family, the advertiser passes over no part of the available market. His message is presented to every one concerned with the distribution, purchase and consumption of his product, regardless of which member of the family is the buyer, or what his habits of reading a newspaper may be. St. Paul and its rich trading territory are thoroughly and effectively covered at one low cost by the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press.

NEARLY FIVE MILLION BEING SPENT FOR COMMUNITY ADVERTISING

51 Cities and 5 State Groups Investing $4,703,333 This Year A. N. P. A. Reports—Much of This Sum Going to Newspapers

FIFTY-ONE cities and five state groups of the United States are investing $4,703,333 in community advertising this year according to a compilation which will be published shortly by the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

The cities in the list, from Maine to California, account for $4,350,000 of the Bureau's total, with the five state or regional associations having a total appropriation of $353,333.

The Bureau's book, which William A. Thomson, the director, announced this week is now on the press, will be entitled "The Panorama of Community Advertising." Well illustrated with cuts of modern types of community advertisements, the contents are designed to help other communities in their advertising plans and to comprise a sort of clearing house of ideas on this branch of advertising. The book cites the Department of Commerce as authority for the statement that 329 cities invested an average of $11,000 each in advertising during 1926.

C. G. Milham, executive secretary of the All Year Club of Southern California is quoted as saying:

"A survey of the community advertising panorama at the beginning of 1927 is bewildering.

"It is doubtful if anyone can say how many community advertisers there are and just how much they are spending. There are dozens in the national field, scores advertising on a regional basis and hundreds engaged in more or less local appeals."

The list of 51 cities compiled by the Bureau shows only a portion of the community advertising appropriations for 1927. These appropriations range from as low as $1,000 to as high as $700,000.

California can probably still claim leadership among the boosters. The citizenry of two cities of the state, anxious to have easterners come there to live and spend their money, contributed $1,100,000 this year for advertising, while it is Vancouver that has only $1,000 to spend on advertising. The two proud California cities are Los Angeles, with an advertising appropriation of $700,000 and San Francisco with $400,000.

Other California cities are also advertisers, including Oakland with an appropriation of $36,000; Pasadena with $2,500; and San Diego with $150,000.

Florida as a state is second to California as a believer in the power of advertising. Some of the cities with money available this year to be used to tell about themselves include Daytona Beach, Jacksonville, Key West, Miami, Palm Beach, St. Petersburg, St. Augustine, and Tampa.

It is noted by the Bureau of Advertising that there is a trend toward the use of newspaper advertising by cities with appropriations.

"Most communities which advertise, do so in the newspapers," the book will declare.

"The reason for this is apparent. Community advertising is no longer merely 'general publicity.' Community advertisers like other modern national advertisers are selling their goods in selected markets. The economical—the ideal—method of covering adequately any market chosen is, of course, offered by newspaper advertising.

"Community advertising has evidently become a recognized factor in our social and economic life. An ever-growing number of states, cities and localities appear to be discovering that they have something which they can offer with profit to residents of other localities. Then they do it—usually through newspaper advertising.

"Community advertisers are growing in number so rapidly it is probable a compilation made at the end of 1927 will disclose a larger list even than that recently announced by the government."

PRINTS QUALITATIVE SURVEY

St. Louis Post-Dispatch Completes Elaborate Circulation Analysis

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch has just completed a qualitative analysis of its circulation and published the findings in an elaborate promotion booklet.

Unusual precautions were taken to insure freedom from prejudice and bias, the booklet states. A Bureau of Advertising Research was formed with quarters in a downtown office building with instructions to conduct the research in such a way that no one concerned in gathering information would know that it was being done for the Post-Dispatch.

More than 120,000 homes were visited and interviews obtained from 91,756 families. The cost of the survey totaled $20,000.

C. E. Campbell of Edmonton Bulle Claims Sum as Commission on Paper Sale—Paper Company Is Defendant

Pleadings have been filed in the act in which Charles E. Campbell, of Va couver, publisher of the Edmonton Bul tin and Calgary Albertan, is plaintiff a claim for $1,200,000 against E. Wallberg, of Toronto, and the Lake John Power and Paper Company, Mistassini, Quebec.

Campbell alleges that Wallberg, w is president of the defendant compar promised him commission on all sales newsprint resulting from introductions him. He says that as a result of intr ducing Lester J. Clarke, president of t Newspaper and Magazine Paper Cor pany, of New York, that company e tered a contract for 60,000 tons of new print a year for 10 years, the value which would be about $40,000,000.

The defendants deny that Wallberg wa authorized to make any such arrangemer as to commissions, or that any such a rangement was made. Wallberg admi that Campbell introduced him to Clark in Toronto, but says he thought Campbe was acting for Clarke. The defendant deny that the contract was the result c the introduction or that there is an guarantee that $40,000,000 will be re alized thereunder.

A. P. PICTURE SERVICE TO START AUG. 1 SERVING 100 MEMBER PAPERS

Richard G. Massock of New York Staff Named Picture Editor —Arrangement Made with Paramount for News Reel Enlargements

RICHARD G. MASSOCK has been appointed editor of the Associated Press News Photo Service which will start operation serving close to 100 member papers on Aug. 1. Announcement of the appointment was made this week by Norris A. Huse, member of the A. P. executive staff, who explained to EDITOR & PUBLISHER the detailed plans of the new service inaugurated by the co-operative news distributing agency.

RICHARD G. MASSOCK

"The new service will start out furnishing members who desire it with about 60 pictures a week," Mr. Huse said. "No mats will be sent out, glossy prints only being used.

"Ours is not a complete service. It will be merely supplementary to what the members are already receiving for the present. But we expect to grow. Members are to be assessed to cover the cost of this new service. The assessment is relatively low."

Mr. Huse explained the arrangements made between the Associated Press and Paramount News Service, a moving picture concern which will furnish the Associated Press with "clips" from the news reels.

"The reason that motion picture clips have not been used in the past for still pictures for newspaper reproduction is that up until very recently the enlarged pictures have been full of what is technically known as grain," Mr. Huse said.

"Our arrangement with Paramount was contingent upon the moving picture company's ability to have a process worked out to eliminate the grain. During the last four months lens experts have worked out a method for enlarging the clips which is entirely satisfactory. The grain has been eliminated and the resulting pictures are admirable for newspaper reproduction.

"What is more, the Paramount company has designed a special machine which prints the enlargements at a rate of more than 1,000 an hour. We will receive news pictures from the moving picture firm far in advance of the screen showing. The moving picture reels brought to the Paramount studio in New York from all parts of this country and abroad will be in our office within three hours and we will have them in the mails to our member papers."

The pictures furnished by Paramount will be copyrighted by the moving picture company and must be so slugged in the A. P. member newspapers, Mr. Huse said. Pictures obtained by A. P. member papers and correspondents will probably be slugged "Picture by Associated Press."

Mr. Massock, who will edit the Associated Press News Photo Service is at present a member of the staff of the A. P. Feature Service. He became a member of the old A. P. general mail staff after an experience in the Middle West which extended from Texas to Wisconsin. He was interested in newspaper writing and editing at the University of Illinois.

His first connection after leaving college in 1919 was with the Springfield Illinois State Journal. Entering the A. P. at Chicago as assignment man, he was later identified with three state mail services.

As the first bureau correspondent of the A. P. at Jefferson City, he established the Missouri state mail service. In the subsequent three years, he was correspondent at Fort Worth, Tex., state editor at Austin and pony and wire editor at Dallas. He was sent to Madison, Wis., as correspondent and after two years there was transferred to New York.

G. D. Seymour of the Chicago A. P. staff has succeeded Massock on the New York feature staff.

SOURCE OF ATTACK ON U. S. WRITERS SOUGHT

Swing of N. Y. Post Credits British Foreign Office with Saying Steel Trust Dominates Geneva Correspondent

That intangible line between private conversation and a statement for publication may possibly be behind an amazing statement credited to the British Foreign office this week charging that the American correspondents at Geneva are dominated by the "steel trust" and other armament interests. At this writing that is the only answer EDITOR & PUPLISHER was able to obtain to a mysterious cable dispatch which came from London on July 19 under the by-line of Raymond G. Swing, correspondent of the New York Evening Post.

No other paper or press association, as far as could be ascertained, carried any statement comparable to that sent by Swing, leading EDITOR & PUBLISHER to start an inquiry.

Julian S. Mason, editor-in-chief of the New York Evening Post, checked up with his London office by cable on July 21, and received word that the statement had been made to a member of the Post's London staff other than Swing by the head of the press department of the Foreign Office.

Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, likewise cabled his London office, and informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER that his staff correspondent abroad confirmed the Swing dispatch, saying the statement had been made "in confidence" and that the Foreign Office had "nothing against the Associated Press correspondent at Geneva."

F. T. Birchall, acting managing editor of New York Times, explained that he had checked on the Swing dispatch and was satisfied that a "private conversation and not a formal statement for publication" had been the source of the British Foreign Office attack. He had decided, therefore, not to handle it.

Assisting EDITOR & PUBLISHER further in its inquiry, A. R. Holcombe, managing editor of the New York Herald Tribune, cabled his Geneva correspondent, Harold Scarborough. He reported that no statement had been given out by the British Foreign office, attacking the American correspondents, and asserted there were no steel trust propagandists at Geneva.

Mr. Swing's story credited the British Foreign office with accusing the American correspondents at Geneva of "behavior unparalleled in the history of journalism." The story continued: "According to the British view, correspondents at Geneva have been dominated by 'men in big Panama hats, with big stomachs, smoking big cigars and spending money freely, who, disguised as journalists, are, in fact, secret agents of the steel trust and other armament interests.'

"Instead of trying to get the facts on the British viewpoint first hand from W. G. Bridgeman, head of the British delegation, the American correspondents, the British charge, have taken their information from these secret agents who deliver to them alleged facts supposed to have just come from Mr. Bridgeman and which, upon being published, are proved to be absolutely false.'"

Richmond Times-Dispatch Defendant in Van Dyck Gravure Action

Suit for $100,000 has been entered against the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch Publishing Company in the United States court for the Eastern district of Virginia here by the Van Dyck Gravure Company, of New York, charging infringement of patent.

The plaintiff alleges that the publishing company conspired with the Art Gravure Company in the alleged infringement. It was declared that in 1909 Charles W. Saalburg obtained a patent on certain improvements in pictures, and that since that date the publishing company has infringed upon the rights of the Van Dyck Gravure Company, which was assigned the patent by Mr. Saalburg.

Association Unanimously Indorses Five Year Co-operative Advertising Campaign—Research to Be Made to Determine if Profitable

The convention formed a trade extension council to conduct a survey to determine whether or not an advertising campaign would be profitable for the industry. The Gardner Company, St. Louis advertising agency, was in the field seeking to create this new account, urging advertising in newspapers, magazines and trade papers.

V. C. Houser, of the Barnes-Crosby Company of St. Louis, and chairman of the association's publicity committee proposed a five-year co-operative advertising campaign involving an expenditure of $1,000,000. The proposal was unanimously indorsed.

The Gardner Company prepared a series of tentative advertisements around the theme of photo-engraving as an "interpretive art." The types and processes of photo-engraving and its use in depicting various human activities are shown.

IOWA FARM INCOME GAINS $60,000,000

FARMERS WANT NEWS AND PAY TO GET IT

Daily Newspaper Has Become a Farm Habit in Iowa

To executives whose mental pictures of Iowa are taken from the days before the war, it may seem difficult to regard Iowa as a daily newspaper state, but reading habits during the last ten years have shown a decided trend toward daily papers.

Iowans are no longer content to take their news in one or two installments a week. Instead they want news while it is news and they are willing to pay in order to get it.

Circulation of Iowa daily newspapers, according to latest publishers' statements and A. B. C. reports, is nearly 600,000. Comparison of this total with the 550,000 families in the state, shows how completely Iowa has become a newspaper reading state.

The annual expenditure of Iowa families for Iowa newspapers is nearly five million dollars, more money than is spent for all other periodicals. This preference for home daily newspapers, as expressed by the money Iowa families actually pay for them, will help executives to understand the tremendous influence of Iowa's daily newspapers in the sales of products both to farm and to city homes.

Hog Income Alone Totals Almost $306,000,000

Ames, July 23.—Iowa's income from agricultural products last year increased nearly $60,000,000 over the year before, according to a tabulation recently completed by statisticians of the Iowa State College of Agriculture.

Total income for the year was $719,145,000, as compared with $659,348,000 for 1925.

Up More Than $200,000,000

Gross Iowa farm income, according to the report, far exceeds that of any other year since 1920, and represents an increase of more than $200,000,000 over the low point in 1921.

The greatest single factor in the growth of Iowa's agricultural income in the steady increase in the value of livestock products during the past six years. Since 1921, the income from livestock and livestock products has increased about 60 per cent, while the returns from grain have remained about the same. In 1926, less than 15 per cent of the agricultual income of the state came from the sale of grain, while nearly 86 per cent of the income came from the sale of livestock and livestock products.

$26,000,000 Gain on Hogs

Hog sales alone totaled nearly $306,000,000 in 1926. This represents a gain of more than $26,000,000 over the previous year and, all conditions considered, sets a new high mark for returns from this source for any state, and probably represents a higher net profit on pork production than Iowa has ever before made in a single year.

Proportioned among Iowa's 213,000 farms, the gross income shows an income per farm of more than $3,500. This figure has special significance for the executive charged with the selection of markets and establishment of sales quotas. It shows the completeness of Iowa's recovery from conditions following the World War, and gives a true picture of the opportunities which the Iowa market holds for profitable sale of any general product.

Expects to Reach Increased Quota

Cedar Rapids, July 23—"Our quotas are set for approximately one-third increase for the balance of the year, and there is no reason to believe that these will not be made," according to T. F. Winans, district manager for The Hoover Company.

"We are using newspaper advertising extensively to connect up with our national magazine program, and our results this year, particularly during the spring, have showed a substantial increase over previous years."

LOAN RECORD SHOWS FINANCIAL STRENGTH

Federal Land Bank Reports Little Interest Overdue

Council Bluffs, July 23.—"Farming conditions in Iowa are better than they are ordinarily pictured," said John Carmody, secretary of the Federal Land Bank here referring to the amount of delinquency on installments due the bank from farmers of the state.

"We have out more than $68,000,000 on first farm mortgages in Iowa upon which the farmers are paying interest and a part of the principal semi-annually. Delinquency on installments, sixty days over due, amounts to only $15,900, a record which surpasses the three other states in this district.

"Any institution which has outstanding nearly $150,000,000 in loans, and has been lending on farms for the last ten years, is bound to accrue some farms," continued Mr. Carmody. "The fact that we have such a small number of farms shows the stability of Iowa farms and their intrinsic worth from a farm production standpoint."

Mr. Carmody's statement reflects the experience of virtually all companies which have extensive loans on Iowa farms. The Equitable Life Insurance Company, which has loaned more than fifty million dollars on Iowa farms, reports: "The large majority of farmers are making a profit."

ADVERTISERS who understand the Iowa situation know from experience that the consumers' market there cannot be properly sold without the use of newspapers in these twenty-one key cities.

DALE ESCAPES PRISON SENTENCE FOR CONTEMPT BUT MUST PAY FINE

Penal Farm Trustees Recommend Parole and Gov. Jackson Assents—Editor Views Fight as Victory for Journalism

GEORGE R. DALE, editor of the Muncie (Ind.) Post-Democrat, will not have to serve 90 days on the state penal farm to which he was sentenced by Judge Clarence W. Dearth.

After a hearing of the state parole board last week Governor Ed. Jackson on July 15, acting on the recommendation of the parole board, declared it his intention to parole the editor. Editor Dale, however, will have to pay the $500 fine which was imposed by Judge Dearth in connection with the prison sentence. Three trustees of the penal farm voted for the parole and one against.

Payment of the fine is expected to be the last chapter in the bitter fight waged by Dale in which he sought to establish truth as a defense in a contempt of court case. The case was the outgrowth of the editor's fight against the Ku Klux Klan and attracted nation-wide attention. It was appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court but the appeal was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. During the progress of the fight Judge Dearth was impeached and tried before the state senate, resulting in his acquittal. The trial followed Judge Dearth's attempt to suppress an issue of Dale's newspaper by having newsboys brought into court and their papers taken from them.

Editor Dale's editorial comment on his parole follows in part:

THE END OF A LONG FIGHT

"The action of Governor Jackson and the parole board of the state penal farm in striking out the imprisonment part of the 'contempt' penalty inflicted on the editor of the Post-Democrat, and at the same time requiring that he pay the $500 fine, may seem to some to be an inconsistency.

"But taking everything in consideration the governor and his board conceded much more than many politicians would have done under similar circumstances.

"The Post-Democrat fought the Klan and Ed Jackson to a standstill. Our close personal and political friends are bitter enemies of the governor. Tom Adams and Boyd Gurley, who stuck to us thorugh thick and thin, have done more to embarass Governor Jackson and his administration than all other agencies in the state, combined.

"Right at this time Governor Jackson's back is to the wall as charges of his connection with Stephenson are being hurled in his teeth by the Indianapolis Times, which newspaper had much to do with bringing about the impeachment of Judge Dearth.

"Governor Jackson knows that the Post-Democrat will not allow a sense of gratitude for 'mercies' bestowed to deter it from publishing truthful criticism about Governor Jackson or any other individual on earth.

"The governor knows that some of his own intimate friends, political and otherwise, were demanding that the pound of flesh be exacted. From a political and factional standpoint, and from the standpoint of the old Klan mania, Jackson and his pardon board might reasonably have turned thumbs down and said, 'send him to the penal farm where he belongs.'

"Thus, in merely demanding the payment of a fine, it may be considered that Governor Jackson and his board conceded a great deal, even if they did refuse to 'go the whole hog' and wipe out the fine as well as the prison sentence.

"Of course we feel, personally, that being compelled to pay this fine is an enormous injustice all things considered. We feel that the Post-Democrat has performed a public service for the citizens of Muncie and Delaware county and that it should not be compelled to pay out a large sum of money in the way of a fine for speaking truthfully concerning the acts of public officials.

"If some one should knock at your door in the night and tell you your house was on fire, you would hardly knock him down because you didn't like the way he parted his hair, or because he was a Ku Kluxer, or a negro, or a Catholic, or a Jew.

"Four years ago the Post-Democrat knocked at your doors and told you that Muncie was on fire. We didn't start the fire, but we saw it threatening destruction. We yelled 'fire' and asked patriotic citizens to help quench the flames.

"Instead of thanking the Post-Democrat, and putting out the fire, a majority of the citizens in whose behalf we sounded the alarm, took the peculiar view that all hands should take a swat at the one who was warning them of the peril they were in.

"Business boycott and burdensome penalties in the way of fines and jail sentences were inflicted. but good has come of it all. Never again, we believe will any newspaper man in the state of Indiana be compelled to go through the fiery furnace whose heated blasts have all but destroyed our confidence in the boasted freedom of the press and the vaunted right of citizens to free and open discussion of governmental affairs.

"Unfortunately the dictum of the court, that 'the truth is no defense,' still stands as the law in Indiana, but when the Post-Democrat pays the $500 fine, and the incident is closed, we believe that no other judge will ever again attempt to enforce it on any other newspaper in the confines of Hoosierdom.

"Public opinion, the greatest court of all, will never again permit a repetition of the experience which has cast disgrace upon the state of Indiana.

"In the termination of this long fight we are obsessed with mingled feelings of triumph and defeat. We have failed so miserably in some things and have won so magnificently in others, that the balances are about even, so we will go forward, with enthusiasm and optimism, fighting the good fight for good government and political decency."

WORLD PRESS MEET IN GENEVA AUG. 24

Newspapers and News Agencies Will Be Represented at International Conference Under League of Nations

Representatives of the important newspapers of the world and news distributing agencies will attend the International Press Conference under the League of Nations to be held in Geneva, Aug. 24.

Scheduled for action is the enactment of a resolution unanimously passed last year at a preliminary conference attended only by heads of news agencies.

The resolution was passed under the leadership of Roy W. Howard, chairman of the board of directors of the Scripps Howard Newspapers, who was representing the United Press. It reads as follows:

"Convinced that the fullest and freest exchange of news and information between nations constitutes one of the surest guarantees of international understanding and friendly relations as well as one of the most certain means for preventing those misunderstandings betw nations and peoples that often lead war, and

"Whereas, the Telegraphic News Ag cies constitute at the present time p haps the greatest as well as the quic est means for this exchange of news a information between nations, and

"Whereas every facility thus accord these agencies for the fulfillment of th national and international task cons tutes a safeguard for the peace of t world as well as a sure furtherance those highest ideals of internation understanding and collaboration that a the fundamental basis of the League Nations, therefore,

"Be it resolved: That all governmen of the world be requested to grant ar to assure absolute equality of treatme to all telegraphic news agencies, whethe official or independent:

"1. In the matter of distribution of a official news;

"2. In the matter of priority or orde of transmission of their telegrams;

"3. In the matter of telegraph, tele phone, radio and cable rates;

"4. In the matter of treatment by th censor, whenever the internal or interna tional situation of any country may ren der the establishment of a censorship o press dispatches necessary."

Karl A. Bickel, president of the Unite Press, is planning to attend the confer ence, as is George B. Parker, editor-in chief of the Scripps-Howard News papers. Kent Cooper, general manage of the Associated Press, who just thi week returned from a European trip, tol EDITOR & PUBLISHER that he may attend but said it has not yet been decided. Otto Tolischus, head of the Berlin bureau, will represent the International News Service.

"Keeping Abreast of the Times"

"Keeping abreast of the times, The Mahoning Dispatch today appears in a new type dress. The face is seven point Ionic No. 5, developed after several years of research and experiment in which eye specialists as well as type designers had part. Readability radiates from every letter and figure, inviting reading, it is held by these experts; that its even tone is restful without being monotonous. The letters themselves are full, round, clear and well proportioned, and, as a whole, the pages of The Dispatch will be found to be more attractive in appearance and greater in capacity than in the old dress with which readers are familiar. The Dispatch, we believe, is the first Ohio small town newspaper to adopt the Ionic face although it has been taken on by a number of large city papers. The Dispatch follows no ruts."

THE GREAT CANTON MORAL

IT was true, as Don Mellett charged—Saranus A. Lengel, Chief of Police of Canton, O., sworn champion of law and order, a man approaching sixty years of age, of venerable appearance, living in a family environment of respectability and culture, was the secret ally of thieves, scoundrels, dope peddlers, white slave traders, bootleggers and assassins. It took a year of legal process, whipped on by a coterie of newspaper men who would not permit Mellett's supreme sacrifice to go for naught, and supported by a few such honest and courageous citizens as Henry Timken, to establish the ghastly fact and send Lengel to the penitentiary for life as a conspirator in the murder of Canton's best citizen. The story is now all in—four underworld criminals of the lowest type and the former Chief of Police of a leading American city have been convicted of the conscienceless jungle plot. The unholy alliance of law and crime that the editor had alleged, that "respectable" Canton had long refused to believe, and that many officials of government were pitifully slow to punish, was all too true. The convictions seem a paltry, almost meaningless social revenge.

How wierd, almost idiotic, seems the babble of those who would suppress the unpleasant facts of life, on a sweetness and light theory, when the Mellett case is taken into consideration. If the suppressionists had prevailed at Canton, two years ago, Canton News would not have published any of the ghastly "crime news" that Mellett gave to the community. All the "nice people," in the security of their homes on the beautiful, wide, elm-lined avenues, would have basked in a fool's paradise, ignorant of what was happening at their doorstep. What would have happened? How far would the Canton "underworld" have extended its poisonous tentacles into the Canton "upperworld" by this date on the calendar? How many of those shallow critics of Don Mellett would have learned the poignant lesson, perhaps from family tragedies, that vice is an insidious monster? How many of their daughters would have found the way from good homes to brothels? How many of their sons would have tasted the hell-fire of dope? How many wives would have turned faithless and husbands been submerged in secret debauchery? What, in a single year, would have been the crop of insanity, poverty, criminality and general defeat of the principles of right-living and honor?

It must never be forgotten that Don Mellett's righteous crusade was opposed by many of the most respectable and most powerful people of his community. Here is the great moral that journalists may find in the Canton case. It was a signal proof, confirming an established American journalistic rule, that editorship must be both fearless and independent, making no compromise with conscience.

Many small advertisers beat a few big ones.

HELPFUL CO-OPERATION

ONE of the achievements of the Better Business Bureaus, recently observed, is in bringing about co-operation between the newspapers of a city and their local advertisers. It is sometimes possible for a third or conciliatory party to accomplish harmonious relationships that would be difficult of attainment by the principals. The manager of a local bureau in a Western city the other day called a conference of the heads of six local department stores and representatives of the newspapers to discuss the question of correcting errors in advertising, always a vexatious problem. It was decided to adopt a correction and retraction system, a committee to assist the bureau in the operation. The advertiser who has published a statement which is in violation of any of the advertising statutes or is otherwise in error is required to publish a correction in the same paper in which the error was made. In case of dispute the committee will hear the facts and if the advertiser refuses to make amends to the public the newspapers will be requested to refuse further advertising until the correction has been made. This same committee, if composed of representatives of all of the papers and stores, under the auspices of the bureau, might also adjust such differences as may arise from typographical errors, when the newspaper management has failed to agree with the advertiser on terms.

The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.—Isaiah, LX; 20.

NOVEL INTERVIEWING

NEWS enterprise is highly developed in America, but the same spirit that animates our reporters and editors is present in many foreign lands. We recently received from George Groom, of the Melbourne (Australia) Herald, an account of a reportorial adventure which is novel in our experience. Two newspaper men, one reporter and the other a photographer, were assigned by the Melbourne Sun News-Pictorial to cover the grounding of the liner Riverina, during a terrific storm, at an isolated spot on the coast some 300 miles away. The men covered the distance in motor car, by horse, on foot, wading through mud to their hips, and by swimming, in driving rain and fog, finally to reach the scene of the disaster and find it apparently impossible to communicate with those on board or do anything save make long-distance photographs. However, the ingenious pair suddenly hit upon a means of communication that has perhaps never before been used in newspaper interviewing. They found a long, sloping bar of sand which they believed was visible from the decks of the stranded steamer. The top sand was wet and brown, but when dug into several inches showed white. The reporter, with a shell as a tool, wrote questions in huge letters in this sand, asking the crew of the ship to reply by floating bottles containing messages. By these extraordinary means the newspaper men learned the facts and after two sleepless days and nights returned to Melbourne, the reporter in the meantime having made a side journey of more than 100 miles to file telegraph copy. The incident offers an insight into the spirit of journalism in the antipodes, where some of the most wonderful newspapers we see are produced.

"There isn't a writer in the world, from the greatest down, but would be benefited by a careful course of advertising writing. Every writer would be made better if, for a change, he had to pay so much for every word he wrote, instead of being paid FOR it."—Arthur Brisbane.

AN ADVERTISING HUNCH

IN this day of bally-hoo advertising, wherein vast spaces are used in all sorts of fantastic appeals to the mere, unreasoniing, gregarious multitude, there is an excellent opportunity for dealers in quality merchandise to cash-in on advertising that appeals to the common sense of the average intelligent man or woman.

As a nation we may be a bit flightly and easily convinced, but everyone isn't foolish in this civilization of ours. There are people who want to buy goods that are well-made, that possess quality, that will stand the test of wear and use. High-powered salesmanship has been effective, no doubt, but to many people the unsupported assertions of the blow-hard have become rather painful to hear. Smart slogans may impress a name and bring response, but there are people who are not taken in by the snappy sayings of the ad-writers. Oh, yes, many will walk a mile for this or that, but we have in mind intelligent people who will do no such thing, and are really craving for advertising that tells the story of the merchandise—that is information, not hot air.

How startling and interesting it would be to read an advertisement for an automobile, for instance, that would plainly and authentically state what grade of material has been used in the manufacture of parts that drivers know are subject to early replacement if of inferior quality. Would it not be str to read such a line such as, "The high-class mate used in this car give it a natural use expect of 150,000 miles, with ordinarily careful driving."

It is but a mere generality to say that a refriger is "economical"; but why not tell the story in figu It does not suffice to say that an oil burner is "c easy to operate, inexpensive"; why not tell many gallons it will consume per month at ave stated temperatures? Excellent grades of fab metals, chemicals, woods and so forth should depend merely upon brand names, since imitat and quacks may also have brand names that are q as interesting, but should be announced to the pu for their splendid worth. Our point is that the vertiser of quality goods is making a serious blu and neglecting a natural advantage if he is u the same advertising methods and copy allurem that are common in the announcements of advertis of inferior goods who cover their faults with pala

"Who will believe us?" someone asks. "The fa can yell as loudly as can we." Yes, as loudly, but in the same tone of voice, if you have the goo There is such a thing as writing advertising wh commands the full confidence of intellingent peo Certainly, the way for quality merchandise to co pete with shoddy is not actual imitation of che hedging copy. Nail the facts to the good old ba door of common sense and you will be belie by folk who are dead weary of exaggeration a empty puffery and are also dead sore on merchand that is made to sell and fail in use.

Flexible first pages, displaying the news big when it is big and small when it is small, with inside feature pages of inflexible high quality is a formula that stands the test of time.

ONLY A "BUSINESS"?

"THE truth about the newspaper business is— is a business," was the profound observati of a "heady" young man of this writer's a quaintance a few months after he had been promot to a position of power on the editorial staff of h paper. Naturally we have watched the progress that newspaper with considerable interest since th remark was made, about four years ago.

It was once the leading paper of its town—it isn now, and its friendly readers wonder what has hap pened to it. The temper seems to have gone ou of the metal and it easily bends. The circulation off—very badly—and as a consequence advertisin patronage has lessened to a rather startling degre The paper is not bright, except in a few old, familia places, and its enterprises are weak and ineffectiv It is painfully conservative, speaking to its reader in the tone of the wheedling business man to hi good customer, the latter always being "right." Some weeks ago it was necessary to reduce the staf How much of a loss the proprietors are suffering, w may only estimate.

The newspaper business is a business that, operate strictly as a business, is no business worth owning in about five or six years. Every successful pub lisher is aware of that fact. Therefore men who have qualities that are diametrically opposed to those of the cautious business man are usually selected to fill editorial positions and men with first-class busi ness sense are put in charge of the paper's commercial affairs. It is just as much of a tragedy to get a good business man upstairs as it is to get a good editor man downstairs.

Good editors, now as 25 years ago, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding, do not get their inspiration in the business office. Good business men have sense enough to let good editors have their way. That system works—always has, and always shall. It is based on a fundamental principle.

The truth about the newspaper business is—it is a business, plus vital elements that are wholly unbusinesslike.

It is a trifle odd to read in an English newspaper a condemnation of the "pornographic literature" now running in the press of the United States. The rottenest English language newspaper we have ever read is published in London and claims one of the world's largest circulations.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

J. T. HORAN, recently appointed Rome correspondent of International News Service, has lived a human interest story more interesting, perhaps, than he will ever write as a newspaper man.

J. T. HORAN

A native of the sidewalks of New York, born on the east side, Horan worked his way by job and scholarship through Columbia University, from which he was graduated in 1921. While in Columbia he was on the staff of Henry E. Krehbiel, at that time the dean of music critics in New York. In the fall of 1921 on a scholarship given by the French government he went to the University of Paris, where he attended courses in the Sorbonne, the Institute Catholique and the Ecole des Sciences et Politiques.

During 1924-25, he returned to New York and took several courses in Columbia Law School. That same year he began tutoring the sons of William Randolph Hearst, W. R. Hearst, Jr., and John Hearst. In the fall of 1924 when William, Jr., entered the University of California, Mr. Horan returned to Paris on the staff of International News Service, where he covered Geneva and the League of Nations. Now his cable dispatches are reaching this country from Rome.

Pressruns vs. Prospects

There's no limit to what you can buy—but there's a very definite one to what you can sell.

The newspaper publisher can inflate circulation to almost any extent you want but he cannot create a single new prospect for your product.

To be specific: Harrisburg's population of 83,422 justifies an advertising expenditure of 11c per line and a newspaper circulation of 45,000 . . . . but very little more.

The advertiser has the alternative of paying a rate that is sufficiently large to cover most cities of 150,000—but his sales here must inevitably be those of any average city of 85,000 population.

The Busiest section of the Country!

"Comparatively New England will do more business this year, than any other section of the country," is the confident report of E. B. Freeman, Vice President of the B. F. Sturdevant Company of Boston.

"New England is gradually but surely readjusting its organizations, plants, equipment and distributing facilities, to the new condition and requirements, and will retain its better quality by comparison is the summary of a highly favorable report.

New England, according to the last census of manufacturers, holds first place in 36 leading commodities, and takes high rank in 42 others.

New England with 7% of the population and 2% of the United States area, has 15% of the depositors and 16% of savings deposits, the savings per capita being the highest in any region.

You can't make any mistake by concentrating your advertising energy on this market—particularly where business is good and where there is so much wealth and buying power.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Wardell of Famous Features Spends 12 Minutes in France—Harry Staton Ill in New York Hospital—"Ritzy Rosey" Taken Over by King

W. L. WARDELL, vice-president of Famous Features Syndicate, Inc., is back in New York from a European trip with a record in his pocket. He sailed July 5 and was back on July 18, and this is the record: he spent 12 minutes on the continent.

Mr. Wardell went to Europe with Leslie Fulenwider, the syndicate's president, to confer with Lt. George O. Noville, flight engineer of the America, whose first personal story of the trans-Atlantic flight was handled by Famous. Enroute they learned the flyers would leave July 13, the day their ship, the Mauretania, would arrive.

It was agreed that Fulenwider would go on to Paris and London to attend to some business affairs, while Wardell would return on the Leviathan, if connections could be made. It seemed that the connection would be a matter of minutes, and so the syndicate men radioed Lt. Noville asking if he could arrange some means of rapid transportation from the Mauretania to the Leviathan. He did.

When the Mauretania came to rest in Cherbourg harbor, Wardell boarded the first tender to leave the ship. At the pier he was the first to land, and there he found American Vice Consul Fred H. Houck. The vice-consul, under the direction of Consul S. H. Wiley, had already arranged to have the French customs authorities dispense with baggage examination, so Wardell was able to rush through to a waiting automobile of the French naval aviation unit. The car speeded through Cherbourg to the naval aviation station where departure ceremonies had just been held for the American airman. There Wardell climbed aboard a fast launch with Lieut. Noville, Bert Acosta and Lieut. Balchen, and in a few minutes was aboard the Leviathan.

Harry Staton, manager of the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate is ill at St. Francis hospital, New York. He was taken there June 30, following an infection which developed after he had a tooth extracted. An operation was performed, and for several days Mr. Staton was in a critical condition, but on Wednesday of this week he was reported to be improving.

A series of "Fifty American Soldiers of Fortune," a picture strip with text by Albert Payson Terhune, is being offered by the New York World Syndicate.

King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York, has obtained the rights to "Ritzy-Rosey," a one-column daily cartoon by Faith Burrow.

John Johns is author of a new feature called "The World's Greatest Extremes" now being handled by the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate. Mr. Johns is on the road selling the feature to editors himself. It is a series of 54 articles.

George McManus, creator of "Bringing Up Father," left July 25, on an extended trip to the Pacific Coast with a group of railroad executives. McManus will be the guest of J. M. Davis, president of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad.

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

Organized Local Teams as a Promotion Stunt—Now Is the Time to Entertain Your Newsboys—And Here Comes "A Perfect Foot" Contest

THERE are circulation managers who swear by the promotion idea of organizing teams among the young boys of the city. Such a one is O. O. Scattergood, circulation manager of the New York Evening Graphic.

New York, Mr. Scattergood has found, is nothing but a big overgrown town, after all, and, he has added to this none too novel thought, the idea that a paper in New York can get close to its readers by playing with the reader's children. For the second year, therefore, the Graphic is conducting its "punch ball tournament." Literally hundreds of boys all over Manhattan are organizing teams and reporting their scores to the Macfadden tabloid. It sells papers, says Mr. Scattergood.

Out in the desert country also, the Salt Lake City (Utah) Telegram has organized the Telegram's Kid Baseball League, open to all boys of the city, and about 500 have already joined, divided into 32 teams. The paper provides the balls and the umpire.

All-year-round, of course, is the time to keep the newsboys happy; but just about at this present writing entertainment of the newsies outdoors is most easily arranged for by the circulation staffs. Still, if you want some tips on what to do for that carrier staff of yours, you might get in touch with A. M. Weinrich, of the circulation department of the Chicago Daily News, which treated 2,000 newsies to their annual frolic on July 18; Charles A. Comiskey, Chicago Herald and Examiner, who entertained 1500; or Eddie Reilly, circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Herald, who was host to 47 agents and distributors at Savin Rock, New Haven, Conn., last Tuesday.

The Boston (Mass.) Evening American is conducting a Perfect Foot Contest. Because of the large number of entrants, the newspaper has been forced to open its own photographic studio. The contest, open to all in New England, will result in the winner receiving a prize of $100 in gold from the American and the Kid Tanners' Association. The next 24 "near winners" will also receive prizes.

Nearly $1,000 in prizes were distributed July 16, at the Sioux City Tribune's free picnic and water carnival at Crystal Lake, sponsored by that paper with the support of nearly half a hundred local merchants.

In conjunction with a local theatre the Spokane (Wash.) Press was host to all red-headed girls of that city at a performance recently.

TABLOID ADVERTISING SECTIONS NEW "SALES DYNAMITE" FOR STORES

Offer Opportunity for Special Treatment When Public Is Accustomed to Pages and Double Trucks—Successful in Birmingham

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

THE use of special eight and twenty page tabloid sections by department and other retail stores as "sales dynamite" to get big, quick response as a change from straight full pages and double trucks is advocated by "Charlie" Miller, former newspaper executive now assistant general manager of the Pizitz department store of Birmingham.

CHARLIE MILLER

"A wide field exists for newspapers to sell additional space through the means of tabloid sections" states Mr. Miller, after a convincing experience in this form of advertising the past month. "The tabloid idea has proven itself so popular with readers that it offers a new and profitable field for large local advertisers.

"For 25 years, I have sold newspaper space to local as well as national advertisers and, frankly, I believe that the newspapers are diminishing their value to department stores by constantly urging them to use more and more pages—I believe the public is overfed with the multiple pages used by department stores.

"How can Mrs. Housewife have any faith in newspaper advertising when in one issue she sees a double page spread from one store, three pages from another or four from another, all yelling that they are offering the best values in town?

"I believe that the best proof of my convictions is one of our recent sales. Last year when conditions in the retail business world were considerably better than they have been this year, we used 12 full pages and this year we used only 10 full pages, but to the public presented 20 pages in tabloid form and did 28 per cent more business when conditions were fully 15 per cent off.

"The public has seen so many full-size 8, 10 and 12 page sections from department stores that they have become tired of them, so in presenting a 20 or even a 16-page tabloid, the public is seeing something new, more compact and easier to keep and refer to. I believe further proof of this statement can be had by asking the large space users in New York who are finding it profitable to use space in the tabloid papers."

The store's 28th anniversary sale, which opened June 16, was preceded by an eight-page tabloid section of bargains printed partly in two colors on Wednesday, the day before, as part of the Birmingham News. The front page showed a line drawing of Louis Pizitz, his modest store in 1899, larger headquarters in 1910, still bigger building in 1924, and huge present establishment. Free parking was offered. The public was asked to carry small parcels. A page blowing a horn with the slogan, "You will never forget," acted as an announcer.

Inside page after page of specific items at slashed prices gave the appearance of a mail order catalog. The use of red was reserved for front and back pages and the inside spread.

The store ordinarily would have used four or five full page announcements and let it go at that, but by buying 16 tabloid pages or the equivalent of eight full pages, the store was able to make a noise which echoed far and near around Birmingham and identified the birthday as something more than "just another sale."

During the event, generous space was used steadily by the store. Several times an advertisement spread all the way across two pages with a column of reading matter at each end yas put to work. Prior to the sales event, teaser copy with the figure of the herald was released.

"Charlie" Miller for nearly five years was assistant to the publisher and advertising manager of the Birmingham News. Later he became business manager for W. R. Hearst on the Atlanta Georgian, assistant publisher of the Baltimore News and American and for three years was president of the National Association of Newspaper Executives. Since returning to Birmingham because of Mrs. Miller's health, he has been attracting much attention through his sensational use of the medium, newspaper space, he long sold, and through the many unusual stunts he has pulled off.

With the 16-page tabloid as the heavy dynamite, Mr. Miller employed newspaper space on another day of the sale to offer $100 free for birthday cakes to celebrate the store's 28th anniversary, with four prizes, $50 for the best, $25 for the next best, $15 for the third and $10 for the fourth. The judges were three authorities on cake-baking. To enter, women called at the cashier's desk of the home furnishing department on the fourth floor and filled out an entry blank. All cakes had to be delivered at the call desk of the store not later than Friday, June 27. The entrant agreed the cake would not be larger than 12 inches in diameter and eight inches in height, and that her cake, with all others entered, would be distributed among charitable institutions in the city. The public also was asked to write suggestions for articles to be sold during the anniversary sale. More than 500 cakes were entered.

Two young ladies, one garbed as the 1927 flapper and the other a belle of 1899, appeared in boxes of theatres, baseball games, local functions, etc., and distributed "lucky tickets" which explained, "June, 1899, was lucky for Pizitz when he located in Birmingham—to show his appreciation for your patronage, he is going to make June, 1927, lucky for you. Watch Pizitz windows for the June celebration bargains and if you find the lucky number shown at the left, you will be given the merchandise on which it appears free of charge. When you see the duplicate number in our windows, simply present this ad to our advertising offices for your free gift."

Lucky number slips also were dropped from airplanes. Twenty-eight 20-feet-high candles each with a 1,000 watt lamp decorated the outside of the store. Roses and birthday cakes adorned the inside of the establishment. The sales force was divided into two teams which opened the sale with a confetti battle.

Last March the store broke southern records for volume of business when it sold $128,000 in merchandise in a single day, as previously described in EDITOR & PUBLISHER. In connection with this event a 20-page tabloid was published.

Any newspaper can print a tabloid as part of its regular edition. With the Pizitz example in mind, doubtless many sizable local advertisers will see the possibilities in this form of advertsing.

J. E. WHEELER INDICTED IN PORTLAND

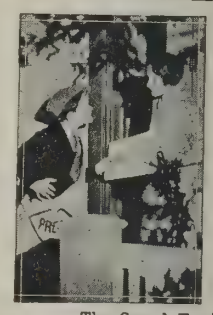
Former President of Telegram and Former Bank Official Charged with Misappropriation of Bank's Funds

A Federal grand jury, sitting in Portland, Ore., on Wednesday returned indictments charging Emory Olmstead, former president of the Northwestern National Bank, defunct, and J. E. Wheeler, former president of the Telegram Publishing Company, with misappropriation of funds of the bank.

Both were taken into custody by deputy United States marshals.

The charges state that the alleged peculation was accomplished by Wheeler's issuance of checks against the McCormick Lumber Company, of which he is president. The checks, the indictment sets forth, were held in a Pennsylvania bank and destroyed when they were returned to the Northwestern National Bank whereupon Olmstead permitted Wheeler to draw new checks upon the Northwestern National Bank in sums more than sufficient to cover the original checks.

These excess sums, it is alleged, accumulated to the figure of $796,000, and the action of the pair is believed by local financiers to be responsible for the failure of both the bank and the newspaper.



The Northwestern National Bank was subject to a run March 28, and that night was taken over by two other banks. Olmstead had been replaced as preside O. L. Price, trustee of the Pittoc tate, owners of the Morning Ore and other large holdings, early in M

VASHINGTON PAPERS WIN RATE CASE

Iterstate Commerce Commission .wards Reparations on Newsprint hipment Complaint—Finds Freight Charges Were Unreasonable

y telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER

/ASHINGTON, July 21.—Reparation in h amount of alleged overcharges on hment of newsprint paper in carloads, rn producing points in New England, Nw York and Canada to Washington, z awarded by the Interstate Commerce Cmission today to eight Washington nishing companies. The companies dh will benefit under the award are ning Star Newspaper Co., Washingn Post Co., Washington Times Co., Vhington Daily Newspaper Co., Washgn Herald Co., Pathfinder Publishing o and the National Tribune Co., all hich are corporations, and Capper's Vkly, published here by Senator rur Capper. The exact amount of the rations to be awarded in each case not stated, however, in the Comision's order.

Te order of the Commission brings to ose one of the rate cases instituted everal Washington publishing corpotns, and upholds their contention that rates on newsprint paper from points igin to Washington have been unreanle. Several months ago the Comson found that the rates on newsr paper in carloads from various ts in New England, New York and rda to Washington were unreasonable t extent that they exceeded the rates fect to Baltimore by more than 2 t per 100 pounds and that the rates Philadelphia to Washington were rsonable to the extent that they exed the rates to Baltimore by more n3 cents per 100 pounds.

Te Commission found the parties to in reparation is to be paid made shipr of newsprint from the points of g covered by their complaints to ington; that upon such shipments ypaid and bore the charges at rates ie the Commission found were unsnable; that they were damaged ny in the amount of the difference wen the charges paid and those ie would have accrued at the rates n reasonable in previous reports, and they are entitled to reparation with erst.

Aorneys for the railroads contended treparation should not be awarded th ground that the proceedings before ommission involved a general readtent of rates and that under such cstances the Commission does not irily award damages.

NAVY HONORS McCLATCHY

Veteran Coast Newspaper Man Given Naval Reserve Commission

V. S. McClatchy, former publisher of the Sacramento Bee, and former chairman of the State Reclamations Board in California, has been commissioned a lieutenant commander in the U. S. Naval Reserves. Mr. McClatchy will be 70 years old next month, having been born in Sacramento Aug. 29 1857. He is the father of eight grown children and has ten . grand-children. Three sons served in the Army during the World War, two of them overseas. A daughter was with the American Red Cross forces in Poland.

V. S. McCLATCHY

Mr. McClatchy's commission comes as a result of what the navy regards as his thorough knowledge of communications systems. He is the author of a number of monographs and reports on the question of trans-Pacific communication. He appeared before Congress, and otherwise took a leading part, in the the campaign that resulted in the existing legislation under which the naval radio can be used for transmission of press messages across the Pacific.

VIRGINIA PRESS NAMES WHITMAN PRESIDENT

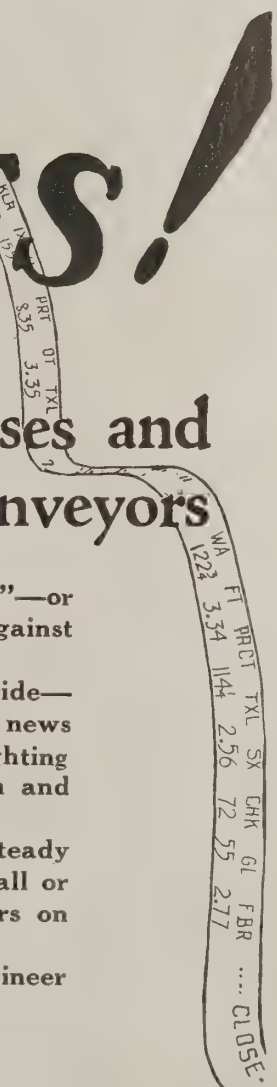
Publisher of Wytheville Enterprise Elected to Succeed J. Barrye Wall at Williamsburg—Legal Printing Discussed

John A. Whitman, editor and publisher of the Wytheville Southwest Virginia Enterprise, was elected president of the Virginia Press Association at the final business session of the thirty-ninth annual midsummer session held July 15 in the Phi Beta Kappa hall at the College of William and Mary, at Williamsburg.

He succeeds J. Barrye Wall, editor of the Farmville Herald.

The chief matters brought to the attention of the association were failures of counties of the state to publish reports required by state laws and the necessity of a full-time secretary of the association.

The business of the delinquent county reports was referred to the legislation committee for further action, and it is expected that at least a temporary full-time secretary will be placed in the field as soon as finances can be arranged.



Other officers of the association elected are: C. L. Weymouth, secretary, editor of the Ashland Herald-Progress; George O. Green, treasurer, of the Clifton Forge Review; Col. E. G. Mosley, chaplain, Danville; L. E. Luckabill, Roanoke Sunday Critic, sergeant-at-arms, Vice-presidents: W. Y. Morgan, Warsaw Northern Neck News, first district; T. B. Taliaferro, Virginia Beach Weekly, second district; R. B. Edwards, West Point News, third district; George Killpatrick, Lawrenceville-Brunswick Times, fourth district; R. A. James Danville Register and Bee, fifth district; Claude Harrison, Bedford, sixth district; George Buck, Warren Sentinel, Front Royal, seventh district; W. F. Carne, Fairfax Herald, eighth district; Charles Harkrader, Bristol Herald-Courier, ninth district, and Col. Heirome L. Opie, Staunton Leader, tenth district.

Charles M. Meredith, president of the National Editorial Association, spoke at the closing session.

A pilgrimage to Yorktown, Newport News, Langley Field and Buckroe Beach on Saturday brought the meeting to a close.

FIGHTING MINUTES!

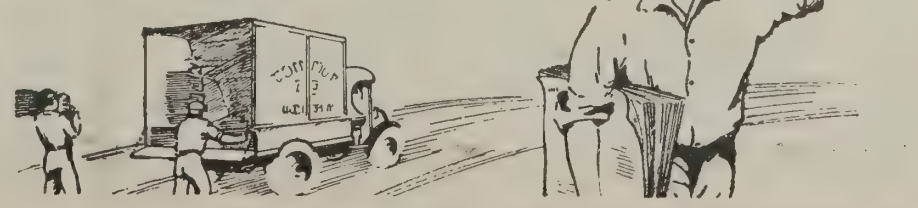
Cutting the time between presses and the "street" with C-H Dispatch Conveyors

A SHOUT—"Go Ahead." The ticker has tapped out "Close"—or ball teams are trotting to the showers—and the race against time in the newspaper plant begins.

For that special edition in which your paper takes especial pride—that edition you headline as an example of your speed in getting news on the street first—C-H Dispatch Conveyors will aid you in "fighting minutes" between the "Go Ahead" of the press-room foreman and the first "Here's your paper, Mister" of the boy on the corner.

Right off the presses, these conveyors take the papers in a steady stream as fast as they are printed. Around a corner, thru a wall or floor—plant arrangement makes no difference in getting papers on the delivery tables in record time.

Gone are shouting, struggling "fly boys"—the skill of the engineer again triumphs over manual labor.



C-H Dispatch Conveyors take papers to the delivery room as fast as they are printed. The illustration is from the plant of the San Francisco Daily News.

As the first step in "fighting minutes", arrange for a C-H engineer to visit your plant—to tell you what C-H Conveyors will save and what they accomplish.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

F. L. Crafft Appointed Classified Manager of Philadelphia Public Ledger—An Advance Tip for Labor Day—A Denver Stunt

F. L. CRAFFT has been appointed classified advertising manager of Philadelphia Public Ledger and Philadelphia Illustrated Sun, Curtis-Martin newspapers. He was formerly associate classified advertising manager of the New York World, and, between the time of his resignation from the World and his coming to Philadelphia, was in charge of advertising development for Denver Post.

Labor Day holiday is coming, and stunts that worked well last Fourth of July are being filed away for repetition or first try-out, as the case may be, on this date. One stunt that worked well for A. H. Todd, classified manager of Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, required the special heading "Get Your Car Ready for that Fourth of July Trip," and was used over the auto supplies and repairs classification. Some 25 advertisers used spaces of 20 lines for three days, June 30, July 1 and 2, to advertise their products and services. Commercial Tribune also used a special holiday appeal to obtain advertising for their summer classification "Vacation Suggestions." The subhead "Where to Go and What to Do on the Fourth" was used under the classification head. Seven-time orders were obtained from bus lines, eating places, and picnic parks around Cincinnati. This started July 1 and after the Fourth the subhead was changed to apply to week-end and evening trips. A first page promotion advertisement was used.

A feature that has no actual relation to the classified advertising page, but which, nevertheless, gets readers thinking along classified advertising lines, and which is easy to read, is making a hit on Denver Morning Post. It is being printed in classified ad style headed: "Space in this column is governed by your conduct. It is not for sale, and therefore cannot be bought. If you break into the news of the day, either favorably or unfavorably, you may 'make' this column."

Missing children and animals are mentioned and quirky briefs from the police runs, treated humorously. Samples are:

"NEEDED—One pair of pants by John Flavin, Jr., 10 years old; original trousers stolen while John swam in Charles park pool, near 38th st. police station; youth forced to walk to his home, 3254 Marion st., a la what he had.

"WANTED—Solution of a mysterious report to police last night that a restaurant at Eighteenth and Larimer streets was held up by four unidentified Negroes. Police found no restaurant there. They found no holdup. They found no negroes."

Lancaster (Pa.) News Journal has cleaned-up its classified pages in a creditable manner, listing 142 different classifications, and following the A. B. C. method.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Federal Trade Commission Dismisses Complaint Against Agency—Means with C. P. McDonald Company—New Firms in Toledo and Reading

THE Federal Trade Commission has dismissed its complaint against the Kling-Gibson Company, which it had attempted to prosecute on the ground that it handled copy for Hobart Bradstreet, Inc., charged with fraudulent advertising.

Explaining the dismissal the trade commission said that the agency had severed its connections with Hobart Bradstreet, Inc., 18 months before issuance of the complaint.

A cease and desist order has been issued against Bradstreet. Advertisements showing "before and after" pictures claimed to be taken five weeks apart, but in reality only taken a few minutes apart with a professional model posing, was one of reasons for the federal citation against the advertiser, which is a seller of physical exercise instructions called "Spine Motion."

Advertisements had been placed through the chief copy writer of the agency, William R. Durgin, and he was also cited by the commission and the complaint against him now is dismissed.

S. C. Cole, formerly on the San Francisco Call, is now with the Western Agency, Inc., as director of production at the Seatle, Wash., office.

The Kolb Building Company, Inc., New York City, manufacturers of sectional bungalows, garages, churches, and schools, have placed their advertising account with the C. P. McDonald Company, Inc., advertising agency, same city. This company also has secured the accounts of the Dover, Milburn, and Gramercy Park Hotels, all of New York City.

J. W. Sanger, Director of Foreign Service, Frank Seaman, Incorporated, New York, sails for England on July 29th, in the interests of the clients of that agency.

Horace B. Means has joined the C. P. McDonald Company, Inc., New York advertising agency, as account executive. He formerly was a special representative for the Westinghouse Electric Company and, until recently, was with the Street Railways Advertising Company.

The Campbell Advertising, Inc., has been incorporated at Toledo, O., with a nominal capital by Glen H. Campbell, P. L. Sanford, Fred W. Thomas, and others.

A Pennsylvania charter has been granted to the Mayes Advertising Service of Reading, Pa. The incorporators are A. H. Mayes, Robert F. Heller and Henrietta Schnable. The capital stock totals $10,000.

OIL HEATING INSTITUTE MODIFIES ITS FREE PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Abandons Idea of Flooding Editors with Free "Features" but Will Furnish Material on Request—May Eventually Use Dailies

MODIFICATION of publicity plans of the Oil Heating Institute was announced to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week by Rufus Richart, the assistant director.

The Institute, organized by leading manufacturers of oil burners, has a fund of $300,000, half of which is being spent for paid space in the magazines. The remaining $150,000 was to be spent in research work and to furnish newspapers with "features and news" in the now more press agent manner. EDITOR & PUBLISHER in its issue of May 7 told of these later plans under the heading: "Multi-Millionaire Advertisers Beg Space." This week Mr. Richart said:

"Mature consideration has resulted in modification of the publicity plans of the Oil Heating Institute.

"We don't want to push our story down the editors' throats. We are not going to beg free space in the newspapers. We realize that editors are confronted with an overwhelming pile of free publicity requests daily and we don't care to add to their burden.

"We have so many requests for information, however, that it keeps three men busy writing it and sending it out. It is our opinion that newspaper editors are always receptive for news and information that is truthful and helps them increase their circulation. If they wish information about the oil burning industry or about oil burners in general, we are equipped here to furnish it to them.

"While we, as an association, are so committed for the present that we must use only magazines exclusively to tell our positive story, this does not mean that we don't appreciate the value of newspaper space. We may eventually be in position to buy paid space in this medium. Until then we must depend upon the newspaper advertising which is carried on by the oil burner manufacturers who comprise this organization.

"The 27 oil burner manufacturers who make up the Oil Heating Institute will spend $1,345,000 in newspaper advertising during 1927, out of a total advertising appropriation of $3,500,000.

"And this newspaper appropriation can be increased if the newspapers themselves will sell the advertising idea to the local distributors. Lord and Thomas & Logan, the advertising agency which directs the account for the Oil Burner Manufacturers Association, will supply mats which can be used for local advertising purposes."

Mr. Richart said that the requests for information which the Oil Heating Institute is receiving were largely from people using the coupons in the magazine advertisements. He had, he said, received some requests from writers for business magazines and general magazines, and he thought that staff writers on newspapers might also wish to take advantage of the research work which the Institute is doing.

"We believe," Mr Richart continued, "that there are many writers for the home economics departments of the newspapers who are at their wits end to know what to write about. We believe we may be of assistance to them.

"Newspapers are always looking for up-to-date information to pass on to their readers. The topic of oil burners ought to interest them. We will not bother them with our own feature ideas, but we invite them to bother us with requests for information. They can write the story to suit themselves."

In the May 7 issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, an official of Lord and Thomas & Logan was quoted as saying that in addition to news of the oil burner industry the plans of the Institute would include the issuance of "features" to be sent out to the home economic editors. This official stated that there were at least 111 newspapers who "fell" for free publicity.

Why have to Tinker with Dry Mats?

The new process mill conditioned WOOD DRY MAT reaches you ready for molding. No preparation in your plant is required. It needs no conditioning or seasoning. Simply take from storage box and roll it. No babying or petting. Always ready and always alike. Has eliminated 90% of troubles with dry mat.

The mechanical superintendent of a prominent metropolitan newspaper has written us:

"After giving your conditioned mats a good trial have decided to use them altogether. They are a decided improvement over our own humidoring, and eliminate the little troubles which sometimes caused delay at the crucial moment. The plates are better, too, giving improved printing."

The call for these scientifically perfected dry mats from newspapers hitherto using German or transplanted German mats indicates the insistent demand for dry mats that can be depended upon at the "crucial moment" and to cast better printing plates.

Once tried your stereotyper will use no other dry mat. Cuts his responsibilities in half. Is a boon for him.

By MARLEN PEW

YOU were saying, Mister Sweeney, that "them were the good old days," but it is my opinion, based on some painful experiences, that they were not so blankety-blank good and your ideas of romance give me a stitch in the seventh vertebra. What I got out of the "good old days" was a humped spine, a streak of grey over the left temple, a bare living from a mule skinner's hours of toil and a soul so tainted by fraud and deceit that it has taken a life-time to fumigate it. Mr. Sweeney, sir, I could give you some history that would shatter your glowing retrospect and convince you that the public service that is rendered by the present generation in journalism compares with that of a quarter of a century ago as the iceless refrigerator compares with the old brine pork barrel. Indeed, if you will sit with me for ten minutes, I shall exhume just one relic of the past which should indicate how great has been the progress of our journalism in 25 years. My story may now be told, skinning nobody's nose.

THE years 1899, 1900 and 1901 were notable for the following world events: The South African war was begun; the Philippine war started; the Windsor Hotel in New York, one St. Patrick's day, burned and 45 guests died in the flames or by leaping to the pavements; the Paris Exposition opened; the Boxer Insurrection occurred in China; the Hoboken docks burned and a dozen ships, wrapped in flames, drifted in the North River while 145 sailors and firemen roasted or perished in the water; Queen Victoria died; Aguinaldo was captured by Gen Fred. Funston; Jacksonville was swept by fire; President McKinley was assassinated by Czolgosz while attending the Buffalo Exposition; Marconi signalled the letter "s" across the Atlantic; and—the Publishers' Press, by force of circumstances, suddenly entered into competition with the Associated Press in the Saturday night field, undertaking to supply to about a dozen newspapers whose publishers could not get A. P., a complete, world-wide, telegraph and cable service. Of course you know, Mr. Sweeney, that the Publishers' Press was at that time a thriving evening service, co-operating with the Scripps-McRae Press Association, and that in later years it was sold and became one of the component parts of the United Press Associations of this day. Your humble servant was selected as manager of the Saturday night service. The decision to start this wire report was suddenly made when an important newspaper in the West decided to get along without A. P., or, perhaps, the act was dictated by the A. P. directorate. At any rate, P. P. A. opened a Saturday night wire from New York. My original staff consisted of Charles DeCamp, newspaper man of sterling ability, one telegraph operator and a husky newsboy to carry copy and other things. It was later augmented by a dear old gentleman who was once on Charles A. Dana's staff and could write the long windedest alleged cable despatches from far-away ghostly correspondents that have ever killed wire space for any service. We had no wire to Washington, but we got a fellow down there to send overhead a skeletonized story if anything "big" broke loose—such as the collapse of the dome of the Capitol; one of the regular day men, in London, promised to bulletin anything important, like the fall of the French Government or the death of the Kaiser, if he could pick up the fact along Fleet Street; we might have had a dozen correspondents in American cities willing to tip us if the story were really good, such as a theatre fire or shipwreck, but I solemnly declare that there were whole tiers of states in our own dear country that might have been blown from the map without the P. P. A. having the slightest inkling of the tragic truth—until the New York Sunday morning papers hit Park Row. What the clients along our leased line didn't know concerning our slender resources naturally didn't bother them and we edged along, as a rule, very well, but not without a certain nerve pressure on the P. P. A. staff. However, we were alert and not too modest and I happily recall receiving from one client editor a very glowing message congratulating us on our "beat" on a story which we had lifted from an A. P. paper. The way we made Funston leap from isle to isle in the Pacific in pursuit of the savage brown men who were defying Uncle Sam's authority; the way we trekked Gen. "Bobs" over the South African veldt in pursuit of Botha and Oom Paul Kruger, kraags vs. Bibles; the dope we ground out of the thin night air on the world consequences of the Boxer uprising and other trifles too numerous to mention, was quantitatively, if not qualitatively, astonishing, and I wish to inform you that our lone telegraph operator, by use of the fast Phillips code, could scarcely keep pace with the deliveries made to his desk by De Camp and I, gloriously aided from the rear by our husky newsboy messenger. The immensity of our responsibility to the readers of our client papers did not bother my conscience, then. It has only been in recent years that the hot iron has rankled in my bosom.

YOU understand, Mr. Sweeney, that those were free and easy days. The New Honor had not then been born. News "lifting" was not stealing—it was a journalistic institution practised by all clever newspaper folk. What the other fellow had, which you didn't have, was yours by right of appropriation in the next edition. The Supreme Court had not yet decided that current news was "property" and if the A. P. had something that read interestingly it was not only my privilege, it was my bounden duty to seize it as quickly as might be and in select language get the facts on our wire. We were not always even very careful to camouflage the swag. I distinctly recall pasting up, when hurried, long "lifts" from Shanghai, or Manila, or Cape Town, pencilling in here and there my own improved synonyms, antonyms, prepositions and other little, sly changes in phraseology all calculated to keep Melville E. Stone from suspecting that his new night rival was not wholly capable of taking care of the business in hand. Our wire opened at 6 p. m. and closed at 3 a. m. What with stock tables and sports, lifted from late editions of the evening papers, and bits of imaginary news from safely distant places, we were able to keep the sending key busily clicking in our tiny Park Row news-room until shortly after midnight when the tide of real information began to sweep our way. Its source was the husky newsboy messenger, who would come puffing up the stairs with the first edition of the Sunday New York Press under his arm. For hours he had been lurking in Spruce and Frankfort streets awaiting this boon from heaven. He always had a couple of dollars to shove to a press-room assistant for the first copy off the press, and it would come to my desk with the damp ink all smudged and smelly but when it revealed that 19 were dead in a Cincinnati wreck, or that Mark Hanna had had another secret conference with the President, or that Queen Victoria was sinking, or such tidbits, we would stand over the operator and flash, flash, flash, bulletin, bulletin, sub-bulletin and lead-all to our heart's content. How jolly that all was, Mr Sweeney! How pleasantly did our Sabbath morning dawn!

IF we had time, you the patience and I the breath, quite a long story could be spun from those dear old times, but I'll only take you down the line for one story, at this session, and from it you may draw your own conclusions about the moral responsibilities of at least my section of the press in the golden era you so feelingly bespeak. On June 30, 1900, something happened, right on our doorsill, that figuratively tore the suspender buttons from our worldwide news service. The event was far too tragic to warrant jests even at this late date. I shall give you the unhappy facts. On the evening of that memorable date, which was Saturday, along about six p. m. I heard the stock ticker in our office rattle and saw tape spin out. The market had long been closed an afternoon sports were out of the and I assumed that the operator wa ing his machine, but inspection re this flash: "Fire has broken ou Hoboken docks—two ships blzg at —Hoboken mayor asks N. Y. fir for aid—Good-night." I glanced o our Park Row window toward the River and in the distance could column of oily smoke. To the op I yelled: "Flash—fire raging Ho (N. J.) docks." "Bulletin. New June 30.—A fire that threatens a caust broke out on the docks tha the North River in Hoboken, op Manhattan, shortly after 5 o'clock evening. In an incredibly short tim flames had communicated to two merchant ships that were tied t docks A huge column of black s mushroomed against the sky and dreds of thousands of New Yo witnessed a wondrous spectacle in th Crowds quickly gathered on the Ma tan piers breathlessly watching the gry flames leap from dock to dock.

Mayor of Hoboken, realizing that the conflagration was beyond control of the local fire department requested aid from the New York fire department. Ferry boats have been ordered to stand by to convey apparatus across the river. At 9:14 the fire was spreading and millions of dollars worth of ships and merchandise stored on the docks were in peril. More, more." Charlie DeCamp looked at me and I looked at Charlie—which should it be? Fate decreed that one half of the editorial staff of the P. P. A. must rush over to Hoboken while the other half remained to keep the wire busy. Charlie took the reporter role and scampered down the stairs, calling back that he would telephone when he arrived at the scene. I filed the stock tables and box scores, lifted from late editions of the evening papers. The wire ran on for half an hour when some impetuous, blundering editor, out west, wanted to know what progress the Hoboken fire was making. I cautiously replied that we would bulletin the facts after the stock tables had been cleared. It was nearly 7 o'clock before our trusty Artful Dodger came in from Park Row with an extra edition of an evening paper, I think the Journal. From it I gleaned a few additional facts, but they were disappointing. Darkness was falling but I could see the smoke from the window and I flashed a few little messages about the spread of the conflagration and the possibility that lives had been lost. Eight o'clock came and no word from Charlie DeCamp. The operators along the line were tipping us that client editors were busy and wanted the lead to start. I began to pull out my hair. Where was Charlie? The hand of the clock was beginning to reach nine and an editor had sarcastically reminded the P. P. A. that he was in the habit of sending a bull-dog edition for country consumption to the press room at 10 o'clock—did we think we could make a showing on our chicken feed from Hoboken? Forty times I had fought to get a telephone call through to Hoboken, but without success. At 9:30 I did manage to get a call through to the Hoboken Observer, and the very frail editor of that paper listened to my tale of woe. He had sent an extra to each street an hour before and he proceeded to read from it. My startled ear caught: "Police estimate more than 100 dead and 200 injured * * * hospitals filled * * * corpses line floor of armory * * * seven blazing ships drifting North River, imperiling ferryboats and other minor craft * * * agonizing scenes, sailors roasted alive in hulls of ships, heads protruding port-holes * * * police boats and small craft picking up scores of bodies in river * * *," at which point I urged my Hoboken friend to hold the line, while I rushed to my own leased wire rudely breaking into a salt-water editor that the disgusted operator was cursing, and started the big "lead all, Hoboken fire," deciding that it would be time to waste wire space with bulletins when editors wanted to set type and go to press.

Indignation at poor Charlie DeCamp turned to awful fear. As I was grinding out the details of the historic disaster my mind was picturing my dear and faithful assistant on a blazing excursion boat drifting off Ellis Island. Dying short of death, I felt, could account for his failure to deliver on such a story, in the circumstances here related. My agonizing thoughts concerning him, however, suddenly vanished when he dashed into the office, shortly before midnight, a bundle of copy in his outstretched hand. "In God's name, are you fined?" he begged and then babbled that he had gone aboard a Hoboken ferryboat whose captain had decided, while in mid-stream, not to risk making his way to the opposite shore and had run straight out down into New York bay and then here for more than five hours before returning to Manhattan, "shanghaing" every per cent of the total staff of the P. A. Good old Charlie had exhausted all his resources to get ashore and had then written a marvelously picturesque feature story of the harbor circle. But when I told him the news, that some 150 were dead, and the loss high in the millions, he learned a startling truth that he had no way of getting on the ferry-boat or on the streets leading from the New York slip to our office. Presently the Artful Dodger brought in the first edition of the New York Press and our night's troubles and worries were at an end. We ran the wire a half hour overtime, to clear the casualty list. On Monday one client editor wrote the "boss" that the fire story was "all right when it came, but it was slow and ragged at the start."

YEA, I tell you those were the good old days, Mr. Sweeney, and I have a mind, at some later session of this "thirty" congress, to relate more incidents along the same line. It does seem to me that the information might tend to make the present generation of journalists more appreciative of modern luxuries in the newspaper trade.

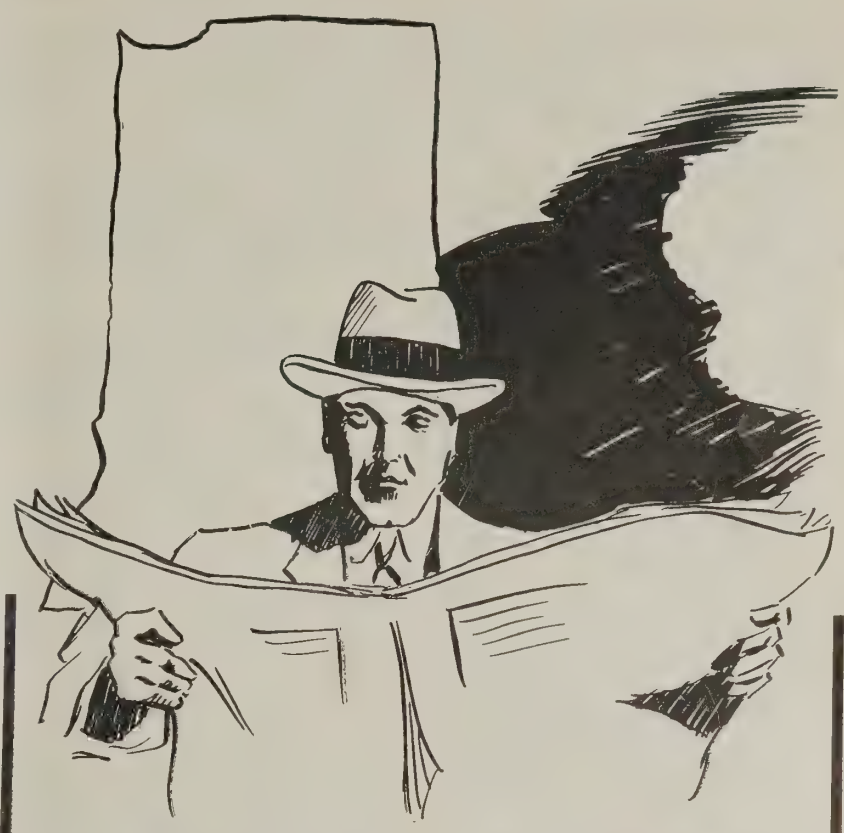
MIXING POLITICAL OIL AND WATER SMOOTHLY

Unusual By-Laws Adopted to Cover Policies of Merged Clarksburg Exponent (Dem.) and Telegram (Rep.)

How the problem of merging two newspapers of different political affiliations under the combined direction of the former owners was solved in Clarksburg, W. Va., is revealed in the by-laws drawn up for the new company and printed recently.

The Exponent, morning, and the Telegram, evening, were the papers involved in the merger. The former was Democratic and the latter solidly Republican.

The by-laws follow:



"Political Policy; By-Laws—The parties hereto agree, and the by-laws of the Clarksburg Publishing Company shall provide, that the political activities and policies of the Clarksburg Telegram, as well as the particular matter it shall or shall not publish in its columns, shall at all times be and remain wholly under the control and within the discretion of the three directors who were nominated by the holders of shares of the Telegram stock, and that the political activities and policies of the Clarksburg Exponent, as well as the particular matter it shall or shall not publish in its columns, shall at all times be and remain wholly under the control and within the discretion of the three directors who were nominated by the holders of shares of the Exponent stock.

"Political Parties; By-laws—The parties hereto agree, and the by-laws shall provide, that the three directors exercising the control of the political and economic policy of the Clarksburg Telegram may freely, and without interference on the part of the remaining directors, in their discretion, in and by the said paper, and through its columns, support or advocate any political party, organization or faction, or the policies thereof, which they may or shall at any time desire to support; and that the three directors exercising the control of the political and economic policy of the Clarksburg Exponent may freely, and without any interference on the part of the remaining directors, in their discretion, in and by said paper, and through its columns, support or advocate any political party, organization or faction, or the policies thereof, which they may or shall at any time desire to support."

The Devine-Wallis Corporation, which represented the Telegram will represent the combined papers in the national field, with the George B. David Company continuing to represent the Exponent, for the time being.

DAILY IMPORTS PULP

Fifteen hundred and fifty tons of Canadian spruce wood pulp were brought to Chicago for the Chicago Daily News on the Norwegian freighter Biskra from Oslo. The wood pulp was consigned to the Waterway Paper Products company, a subsidiary of the Daily News, which manufactures paper in a large plant at 32nd street and Kedzie avenue.

INDIANA'S
Buying Power is worth cultivating

The desirable feature about the Indiana Market is that it does not constitute two markets, one urban and one rural. Urban and rural populations are so closely united, so blended together, so homogeneous, that they are practically indistinguishable, from any point of view, particularly so for the distribution of merchandise.

It is worth while cultivating the buying power of this compact, unified market, because the Hoosier State is a thriving industrial community, set in the very heart of the country's richest agricultural region.

Its people are thriving and industrious. They live in accordance with the standards of our American well-to-do families. They are intelligent, most of them are educated, nearly all are literate and practically all newspaper readers.

The newspaper is the logical way to reach them. If your product has special merit, if it has a utility in the home, by all means enlist the aid of the newspapers listed below.

WITH THE GENERAL ADVERTISERS

Postum Cereal Company Buys Walter Baker & Co.; Ad Policy Unchanged; Something New in Book Advertising—Kellogg Does a Little Entertaining

A NEW style in book advertising has been set by Simon and Schuster, successful publishing house of New York, and the other day in its regular paid space in the New York World, some of the theories they have evolved were passed along to readers generally.

The copy carries the masthead "From the Inner Sanctum of Simon and Schuster," and the advice it contained on book advertising follows:

One of the phases of publishing that is discussed more often perhaps than any other is what sells books, and what sort of advertising is best.

Our own theory as to the former is this: A book sells itself. No matter how good the reviews, no matter how large the advertising space, fully three-quarters of the books sold are by word of mouth recommendation.

Now as to advertising: It seems to The Inner Sanctum the height of futility to use shortt quotations from the reviews. "An excellent book," "Splendid writing," "Excellent prose style," "One of the finest novels of the year" . . . Were we members of the lay public, encomiums such as these would keep us from a book rather than attract us to it. Excerpts from reviews are easy enough to find, and the use of them seems to us to denote:

1. A lazy advertising man.
2. A book that can not bear the publicity of extended, full length quotations.

Postum General Company has bought Walter Baker & Co., famous makers of chocolate, and a big user and believer in newspaper space. Ralph Starr Butler, advertising manager of the Postum company, is authority for the statement that the Baker advertising will continue to be handled by Barton, Durstine & Osborn.

W. K. Kellogg of the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Company at Battle Creek, Mich., entertained western magazine and newspaper representatives at the Battle Creek County Club Tuesday, this week.

Photographers are being asked to advertise locally in newspapers, but, according to plans announced this week, the Photographers' Association of America are spending their entire advertising appropriation in magazines and trade papers. The Association is said to have raised "the greater part of a $2,000,000 fund." The Millis Advertising Company of Indianapolis is handling the account. Free publicity is being sought in the dailies.

Shippers and Growers Clearing House of the Northwest, a consolidation of the prune growers, has established headquarters at Walla Walla, Wash., and is starting a newspaper campaign through the Izzard Company of Seattle. J. H. McBirney, Boise, Idaho, is president of the association, and Frank Shields, Walla Walla, is secretary treasurer.

Ralph M. Douglass has been made assistant director of advertising of the Kelvinator Company, succeeding George G. Whitney, resigned.

ADVERTISE TO MAKE MEN BUY SHOES

Retailers Hope to Raise $1,000,000 for Campaign to Be Handled by Kenyon Ad Agency of Boston

Men are buying shoes for mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts, but not for themselves. What they do buy are heavy brogues and are marking deep footprints in the sands of time. And, even the soles are lasting longer than they should, because they are being used merely to press down the accelerators of automobiles.

These, it was explained, were some of the reasons that prompted the National Retail Shoe Association meeting in Boston last week to announce a four-year campaign of national advertising to increase the consumption of men's shoes, with a contemplated expenditure of $1,000,000 annually.

Anthony Gueting, of Gueting's, Philadelphia store and president of the association, made the announcement. Newspapers, trade papers, and magazines will be used, he said. The Kenyon Company of Boston will place the copy.

The retailers of the country will be supplied with an advertising service to tie up during the four years of the campaign with the national movement. It is expected the campaign will start Jan. 1, 1928.

Statisticians of the shoe trade have figured that from 1914 to 1925 there has been a 17 per cent decrease in the manufacture of men's shoes. When this percentage is compared with the increase of population, it is estimated that the drop in consumption amounts to about 25 per cent.

For about five years now advertising has been discussed. The Boston action is the first positive step towards a comprehensive campaign.

A. N. A. DIRECTORS MEET

Directors of the Association of National Advertisers were guests of S. E. Conybeare, association president, and advertising manager of the Armstrong Cork Co., at Scranton, Pa., on July 21. Plans were discussed for the Fall convention of the Association, and the directors played golf in the afternoon. The plant of the Armstrong Cork Company was also inspected.

WILLIAMS GOES ABROAD

J. B. Rickatson-Hatt Substituting for New York Reuters' Chief

J. B. Rickatson-Hatt is temporarily in charge of the New York office of Reuters Limited, during the absence of F. Douglas Williams, on vacation in England. Mr. Williams is expected to return late in August.

J. B. Rickatson-Hatt

Mr. Rickatson-Hatt was a lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards when he first became associated with Reuters in 1923. At first he was assigned to the London office. In December, 1924, he was sent to Egypt as a special correspondent to cover the uprisings following the assassination of Gov. Gen. Stack.

Last year he went around the world with Sir Roderick Jones, managing director of Reuters.

He was with Sir Roderick when the latter was in New York last October, and was then assigned as assistant to Mr. Williams in the New York bureau.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

ARE German newspapers becoming like those published in America? That is the question with which Emil Dovifat opens his book, "Der Amerikanische Journalismus," (Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt, Stuttgart, Berlin, und Leipzig). In some places in Germany American journalism is admired without limit, but in others it is very much condemned.

To get first hand information Mr. Dovifat came to the United States in 1926 to study how American newspapers are edited and made. The results may be found in his book. He thinks the United States is almost an ideal country to study the evolution of modern journalism. In the first place the history of the American press is comparatively brief when compared with that in European countries. Consequently there is not a long period for the research to cover. In the next place official statistics have been compiled by the United States census from time to time. He commends the practice of circulation statement which the press today must furnish twice a year to the postal authorities. In passing it may be said that Mr. Dovifat has both an academic and a practical interest in journalism.

The first part of "Der Amerikanische Journalismus" he devotes to the historical development with separate chapters for the colonial press, the beginning of the political press, the party bound press, the penny press, and a chapter which he calls the flower of the press that molds public opinion. In the chapter last mentioned great praise is found for those American editors of yesterday who molded public opinion through what they wrote for their editorial pages. Possibly the reason why he commends so highly Greeley of the Tribune, Raymond of the Times, Godkin of the Evening Post, etc., is that these editors produced papers more like those appearing today in Germany. Consequently he can understand them better.

Part II is devoted to American Journalism of today. He practically gives America first place in the gathering and printing of news. The American machinery for publishing news (Die Nachrichtenmaschine) gets a very fine tribute for its wonderful efficiency. For the American reporter who gets the raw material for the news machine Dovifat has great admiration.

Mr. Dovifat quotes, evidently with approval, the words of Horace Greeley to a young friend about to start a newspaper: "Begin with the clear conception, that the subject of deepest interest to an average human being is himself." Dovifat's comment about this remark by Greeley is "Das ist der Kern aller amerikanischen Zeitungsarbeit" (That is the kernel of all newspaper work in America). The ideal of American journalism Mr. Dovifat finds in the tablet erected in the World building to the memory of Gregory T. Humes, who mortally wounded in a wreck at Stanford still covered the story for his newspaper (Die Tafel zeigt das grösste Ideal des Journalismus in Amerika. Dies Ideal ist der Rekord).

A separate chapter in Part II concerns itself with technical news writing. The stereotype news story which gives the gist of the matter in the opening paragraph and answers the six questions of who, what, when, where, why and how Mr. Dovifat commends for its clearness and its force in the presentation of news.

Another chapter has for its subject matter the mechanical make-up of the American newspaper in general and the first page in particular. For the first page make-up Mr. Dovifat finds three typical forms. These forms are determined by the arrangement of the headlines on the page. First is the arrangement of the headlines in the form of an inverted pyramid such as is so frequently found on the first page of the New York Times. The next type specifically noted by Mr. Dovifat is the headline for the big story at the right hand side which together with the other headlines make a sort of brace as is illustrated frequently in the New York World. The third type is the seemingly haphazard make-up known as the "circus." The illustration for this unsymmetrical page selected by Mr. Dovifat is the Detroit Times.

The place of pictures in American journalism has a chapter by itself. While the news photo gets its attention, the wordless editorial (the cartoon) is overlooked. For the sensational pictures printed in some of the tabloids Mr. Dovifat has only contempt and anxiety lest this practice spread to Germany.

The chapter which has the most interest for the American reader is the one that limits itself to a discussion of public opinion. For the editorial page of the American newspaper Mr. Dovifat has no such admiration as he has for the news pages. He opens his discussion of editorial writing with these words from the pen of Arthur Brisbane: "Editorial writing is the art of saying in a commonplace and inoffensive way what everybody knew long ago." A fair criticism of Mr. Dovifat's comment would be that he gives too much space to the human interest editorials and not enough to the instructive editorials of those newspapers which address themselves to an intelligent clientele.

The chapter on the ideology of American journalism leaves the reader with the impression that the newspapers in the United States do not practice what they preach, especially if they take their text from the Bible. Mr. Dovifat reprints the "Journalist's Creed" compiled by Walter Williams of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, but it is evident that he does not think that most American newspaper men live up to this creed—especially those who work on the so-called sensational papers.

Still another chapter takes up the social and economic side of the American newspaper. Here Mr. Dovifat seems to find too much commercialism to suit his ideal. He does not overlook, however, the saying of Adolph S. Ochs of the New York Times—quoted under a chapter heading—"More readers, more independence." Another thing that Mr. Dovifat does not like is the influence of the press agent upon American journalism.

The volume concludes with a comparison of the newspaper press of the United States with that in Germany. The fundamental distinction is that in Germany the press stresses views while in the United States it stresses news. In Germany every paper is hooked up with a political party as a sort of official mouthpiece, while in the United States the newspaper, though supporting party measures, boasts of its independence. In Germany even those papers which have adopted American make-up have not surrendered their emphasis on political views. The German papers that show the greatest American influence are said to be, by Mr. Dovifat, the evening papers of Berlin.

In conclusion Mr. Dovifat thinks that the professional standing in Germany is higher than in the United States, for in the former country the publisher cannot interfere with the expression of opinion by the editor. The latter must be allowed to write what he thinks is for the best interests of the state regardless of what may be the views of the publisher.

As a sort of appendix Mr. Dovifat adds to his volume a description of the system for teaching journalism in the colleges. This part of the volume practically appeared previously as a special article and was mentioned in "Our Own World of Letters" at the time of its appearance.

"Der Amerikanische Journalismus" is illustrated with numerous pictures and diagrams and one map which shows the telegraph connections of the Associated Press. Among the charts given are those which show the plan of organization of the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Dovifat has unquestionably given a great deal of time and thought to his research work in American journalism. He has produced a book that is extremely well proportioned in its distribution of material illustrating various phases of American journalism. He is to be commended for his lofty conception of what an ideal paper should be and he may be pardoned if at times he thinks the American newspaper is commercial when it is acting from altruistic motives. It is interesting to get the view point of how American newspapers appear to an outsider. That point of view is well given in "Der Amerikanische Journalismus."

CENSORSHIP
The New York Times' rules of censorship operate to the advantage of both avertiser and reader. Readers are protected against frauds, catch-penny offers and all extravagant claims, while the confidence established by Times' censorship gives additional value to all space in its advertising columns.

The Boston Evening Transcript for the first six months of 1927 outstripped immeasurably every other strictly evening Boston newspaper (i. e., not part of a compulsory combination) in financial advertising lineage.
And more than that even—The Boston Evening Transcript showed a gain of 31,683 lines in financial advertising, while the compulsory combination that exceeded it in total showed a loss of 16,524 in its A. M. editions—and a loss of 21,516 lines in P. M. editions.

RURAL INCOME TAXES

To Editor & Publisher: Can a farmer pay an income tax if he wants to?

A nearby Vermont farmer (name on request) with a yearly income of $10,000 to $25,000 depending upon how many registered cattle he sells in each year submitted his return in 1923 and offered to pay a tax.

"What! A farmer paying a tax! Have you depreciated your cows 20 per cent?" they asked him.

No, he hadn't. But he did, and found that his taxable income was less than zero.

The income tax was not designed for farmers. Talk with any Federal Collector and you will learn why this is so. The reasons political, practical, psychological are too intricate to take your space here.

During the years of low exemptions, that is up to and including 1924, the Federal income tax yielded data, which properly interpreted and understood, was of tremendous value in analyzing markets.

The world that is looking for short-cuts had to wait until 1927 for the Seubert formulas. He alone of all market analysts has that blind faith in income tax returns that shows forth on every page of his "Key to Consumer Buying Ability" series in the Editor & Publisher.

On page 20 of your July 9 number he overstates his case so strongly as to show himself as the faithful zealot rather than a cautious analyst.

After this series has run its course and has been variously classified by space-buyers as of great, possible, or dubious value, may I suggest that Editor & Publisher supplement it with some practical field investigations before going on record as calling it a dependable formula.

For example, take the actual sales of Cadillac cars and stack them up against the simple formula. Take Buicks, Frigidaires and possibly Victrolas if you can get access to the figures and find out where these units (which can be traced to definite consumers and which are marketed with fairly uniform efficiency and pressure) are being bought. Take the national figures of any such products and have them laid down side by side, state by state by some cool market analyst, whose mind and pencil do not slip.

In the meantime other fields are calling Mr. Seubert to practice his doctrine of simplification. A soup canner might let him simplify a recipe of a dozen ingredients down to two and mix up a trial batch. In that field, however, even Mr. Seubert on tasting might admit that extremely simple formulas need the addition of many grains of salt.

Very truly yours,
Burlington (Vt.) Free Press,
David W. Howe.

EL PASO TIMES CO.

To Editor & Publisher—The quoted item from your issue of July 2 is misleading, and it is requested that a correction be published as soon as practicable.

"The El Paso Times, El Paso, has filed an amendment to its charter changing its corporate name to El Continental Publishing Company, Inc., and increasing capital stock from $1,000 to $75,000."

It is easy to understand how the error occurred, but we do not like the item to stand that way.

"El Paso Times Company" (capital stock $100,000) owns the El Paso Times (Morning and Sunday English language newspaper established 1881).

The stock of "El Paso Times Company" changed hands in November, 1925, but the purchaser did not acquire the stock of a subsidiary corporation called "El Paso Times Publishing Company" and issuing a Spanish language weekly newspaper. The Spanish language paper changed its name to "El Continental" but retained the corporate style of "El Paso Times Publishing Company." The use of this corporate style caused so much confusion in the mixup of mail deliveries, official documents, financial affairs, etc., that the Spanish publication was induced to change its corporate style from "El Paso Times Publishing Company" to "El Continental Publishing Company."

Please make it clear that the original item referred only to a Spanish language newspaper which has no connection whatever with the El Paso Times; and that the El Paso Times has not changed its name nor has the authorized capital stock been changed.

El Paso Herald and El Paso Times.

MAGNIFICENT WORK

To Editor & Publisher—In your issue for July 9, 1927, we find a splendid tribute to Mr. William Yeates written by Mr. Fred. L. W. Bennett.

There seems to be no doubt that both Mr. Yeates and the Telegram of Salt Lake City did a wonderful piece of work in exposing fraudulent Building and Loan Associations operating in Utah.

Nowhere in the article written by Mr. Bennett is there any reference to criminal prosecutions growing out of the 50,000 words of exposure original with Mr. Yeates.

In the County Prison of Philadelphia, Pa., you will find records covering twenty-two men committed to that institution for Building and Loan frauds. These men were sentenced to terms in prison ranging from six months to ten years. All of the exposures and all of the material that landed these men in the Philadelphia County Prison was "dug-up" by Mr. Mark Mason of the Sunday Transcript who not only sent the swindlers to prison but forced the complete reorganization of the Building and Loan Associations involving nearly $100,000,000. As most of Mr. Mason's men are still in prison with from three to seven years yet to serve the facts are easy to verify. Putting the matter on the basis of mathematics Mr. Mason sent a man to prison for every 2,000 words written by Mr. Yeates.

This information is sent to you simply in the interest of historic accuracy.

A. B. Clarke, Secretary
Philadelphia Sunday Transcript.

BARS HANGING EXTRA

Joliet Herald-News Refuses "To Capitalize Morbid Interest"

The Joliet (Ill.) Herald-News handled the hanging of three prisoners in the Illinois state penitentiary July 15 for the slaying of a prison guard during a desperate jail break attempt a few months ago, as routine news. The night before the executions it announced in a front-page black-face boxed statement, its attitude toward sensationalizing such news.

"Indications are that morbid curiosity concerning the hanging tomorrow morning will create an unusual market for extra editions of newspapers," the Herald-News stated.

"Thousands of copies doubtless can be sold. Viewing the prospect entirely from a commercial point of view a newspaper in the situation of the Herald-News should issue one or more extras.

"However, we believe that a newspaper should have higher ideals than the commercialization of morbid curiosity. In accordance with this belief the Herald-News will not issue extra editions tomorrow, if the execution of the sentence is carried out as scheduled and with no unexpected interference or development. If however, there should be attempt at another jail delivery or resort to violence in behalf of the three convicts or developments of an unexpected nature and of legitimate news interest, the Herald-News will be prepared to and will issue extras."

The hanging went off as scheduled; there were no untoward demonstrations —and the Herald-News printed no extras.

FREE "PUFFS"

The fire insurance underwriters of the country are due for a setback. Not financially, perhaps, but indirectly their business may be affected. According to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, proposals for a million dollar co-operative advertising campaign by fire insurtance firms using paid newspaper space were turned down, temporarily at least, and the national board of fire underwriters accepted a "free puff" plan as advocated by the insurance advertising conference.

Now, the "free puff" plan of mooching space from the newspapers of the country has reached such proportions in the past few years that editors generally have developed the gentle habit of dropping all of it into their waste baskets. Every day the mail arriving at The Gazette office contains from a dozen to 50 such so-called news articles—more than enough to replace all The Associated Press dispatches received the same day, if set into type. The time soon will come when a large number of companies realize that their efforts to get free advertising under the disguise of news are wasted, that they are spending money foolishly. EDITOR & PUBLISHER is one magazine which had taken the lead in exposing all such schemes and hundreds of newspapers have been forced to adopt a rule against printing stories of any kind which give "free puffs."—Editorial in William Allen White's Emporia Gazette.

CONSOLIDATION

The merging of newspaper interests is a subject that has received special study and investigation by this firm for nearly 17 years. It is a big subject and requires considerable technical knowledge, both as to valuation and operating methods. When properly organized, the results are never disappointing.

We have been factors in many important consolidations, sales and appraisals.

GET the chamber of commerce or Merchants' Organization in your city to stage an "August Bargain Week." One big edition to start the event properly will be necessary. Business men could also get others in line to sell one item at cost every day in the week to stimulate trade from distances. It would take an ad from each firm every day during the week to turn the trick properly.—Davis O. Vandivier.

BON VOYAGE! Under this general heading may be grouped ads of gift merchants, stationers, florists and the like, who may feature the going-away gift to be sent to train or steamer of departing friends at this vacation season.—C. M. L.

The business staff of the Kokomo (Ind.) Dispatch noticed the widespread popularity of community golf and put on a good contest. Sixteen merchants took space on a page on which different cartoons of golfers were featured in each ad, each picture making a play that never is made in golf. Cash prizes were given the three highest scorers who figured out the faults the cartoons represented. Some of the false cartoons showed players drving out of the rough with a brassie, driving with a bag on his shoulder, taking a putt with a full stroke, caddy driving for player, etc. It's a good stunt for a page any time this summer.—Don Richardson.

Each week under the streamer heading, "We Believe in St. Louis" the St. Louis Times runs a two-page classified, display business directory. The ads range in size from one column one inch to one column 4 inches. These are secured, for the most part, from concerns who do not use other display advertising.—Norman B. Terry.

The "serial ad" has made its appearance on the Pacific Coast, being a development of the newspaper advertising of the City Dye Works of Los Angeles, Cal. From week-end to week-end the serial ad, the only one of its kind in the paper, holds the interest of the reader through the suspense created, and the small chapters or bits of information and suggestion given each week.

The phrase: "To be continued next Saturday," printed prominently in the upper left hand space of each ad, serves to let the public know that there will be more information given next week about "The Plant That Service Built," the slogan that is placed beneath the picture of the cleaning and dyeing plant in its beautifully landscaped setting.

While the layout is the same from week to week, there is a small amount of space available for a paragraph or two of real newsy ad copy. From time to time, announcements of new developments of the plant are made in the serial ad, of new departments of the cleaning and dye works opened, or of new facilities created, such as in the opening of a new fur cold storage vault.—C. M. L.

A Texas newspaper in a town of 15,000 uses a red tag to advantage in its circulation department. The card is similar to those used by the police department to enforce "Two Hour Time Limit" parking ordinances. The circulation department, however, hangs it on the doorknobs of houses where the collector has called and found no one at home. It carries a brief message calling attention to the amount that is due for the paper.—R. W. J.

REPORTER UNWITTINGLY SAVES MAN FROM JAIL

LEONARD ORTH, a reporter of the Sioux City (Ia.) Journal had a most unusual experience while covering a federal court session recently when his identity was mistaken for that of a bootlegger on trial.

Lester Dunnigan, a worker for the federal prohibition department when on the stand testifying was asked to identify the man who sold him alcohol. He pointed out the Journal reporter. When asked by the commissioner if "Molla" Guire, the legally accused who was seated next to Orth was not the individual, Dunnigan insisted the reporter was his man.

Amidst an uproar of laughter the case was dismissed. The close resemblance of the reporter probably saved defendant from a stiff fine and sentence to jail.

"CAN a Criminal Come Back?" is the title of a series of articles published in the Milwaukee Journal, based upon records of the probation department of Milwaukee county, Each article deals with an individual person (name disguised), tells the causes of his crime, the details of imprisonment, and the progress after release.—R. L., Milwaukee, Wis.

The Boston Transcript carried on Saturday, July 16, a full page of cuts from pictures taken by a staff photographer, of children dressed for recreation. They were singles and pairs, mostly in bathing suits, and the cutlines carried the names of the children and those of their parents. L. D. Chamberlain.

"It was like this, your honor," is the title of a two-column, hand lettered heac under which the Dayton Daily News runs short police court items.—Jack Sedwick.

A visit to police headquarters and a survey of the list of missing persons will give you some interesting material for a good story. In Boston, a Post reporter found that the list is growing steadily from year to year and that this is rapidly becoming one of the most difficult problems confronted the police.—D. P.

The summer season brings thunderstorms. To some people they are a source of beauty, to others a real terror. Why not write a feature story explaining the cause of thunderstorms, the beauty that can be seen in the flashes of lightening, precautions to be taken during an electrical storm, etc. It will be timely and very interesting. It is also not difficult to obtain.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

The Columbus (O.) Dispatch polled its radio readers on local interference and then, with the co-operation of the local radio fans' organization, succeeded in eliminating a large portion of it. Needless to say, the stunt made a big hit with every fan.—B. A. T.

Pennsylvania's income tax payments increase 17%

During the first 9 months of the fiscal year of 1926 Pennsylvanians paid income taxes amounting to $141,868,721.63. For the same 1927 period it jumped to $165,897,587.83 an increase of over $24,000,000—or 17%.

It is an established rule that income tax returns are a good index to Buying Power. This 17% increase is conclusive then that the Keystone State's buying power has materially increased this year.

Since it has always been a State noted for its great wealth, its diversity of buying power and a most desirable market for the national advertiser, its present unusual prosperous condition should influence every advertiser to go after this desirable market.

The newspapers listed below can help you materially. They all have a merchandising department which they will place at your disposal. They will furnish route lists, give you facts and figures on each trading area they cover, and their assistance will be especially valuable to reach their readers who represent their market and Pennsylvania's great wealth.

How Rich is New York?

The Golden Zone

Some idea of the wealth of New York City and its neighborhood is conveyed in the prim figures of the Treasury Department's report, published recently, on the income taxes of 1925. In round numbers 700,000 persons who live in this town or the New York community zone made returns to the Government, as follows:

New York City	526,126
Westchester county, N. Y.	29,250
Nassau county, N. Y.	8,778
Rockland county, N. Y.	2,260
Hudson county, N. J.	30,368
Bergen county, N. J.	10,697
Essex county, N. J.	37,524
Union county, N. J.	12,542
Passaic county, N. J.	9,514
Morris county, N. J.	3,368
Somerset county N. J.	1,084
Middlesex county, N. J.	5,868
Monmouth county, N. J.	5,643
Fairfield county, Conn.	16,723
	699,745

New York City:	No. of Returns
Manhattan	342,531
Brooklyn	122,852
Bronx	32,290
Queens	24,820
Richmond	3,633
Total	526,126

Chicago	232,830
Detroit	98,675
Philadelphia	95,177
St. Louis	63,455
Boston	51,655
Cleveland	36,614

As the total number of Americans making returns was 4,171,051, it is apparent that more than one-sixth of them live in and about New York. The residents of the city proper turn in more returns than are written by the people of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Kansas combined. Brooklyn sends more returns than Texas or Missouri. The Bronx outdoes Alabama. The sparsely settled Borough of Richmond has more income tax payers than the proud city of Charleston, South Carolina. There are eighteen States that do not score as many returns as Westchester county.

From Manhattan the Treasury received 342,531 individual reports in 1925—more than flowed from rich California—but the Congressmen of the island can't get rid of the gray monstrosity known as City Hall Post Office!

—Editorial from THE SUN of June 27, 1927

TO manufacturers and merchants who have commodities of good quality to sell to the people of this wealthy, responsive market, The Sun is the most effective medium available. Its circulation is concentrated among people of moderate and more than moderate means—people who have money enough to buy what they need and want.

21 of 23 million dollar Bellwethers

Prefer

The Tribune

above all other Chicago Newspapers

BY a vote of 21 to 2, the "million dollar" national advertisers pick The Tribune above all other Chicago newspapers. All but two of 23 manufacturers who spent $1,000,000 or more for advertising in Newspapers in 1926* gave more of their appropriation to The Tribune than to any other Chicago newspaper.

An overwhelming decision which leaves no doubt as to The Tribune's overwhelming leadership!

Can the man who spends more than a million dollars a year for advertising be far wrong? Could you fool 91% of the largest advertisers in the country? Read the list at the left of big newspaper advertisers and note carefully how they spent their advertising funds in Chicago.

Making It 100%!

All but one advertiser in this list used The Chicago Tribune—and that one, Lever Brothers, is spending approximately $50,000 for advertising in The Tribune during 1927. The other 22 spent more than $1,500,000 in The Tribune. The rest of their appropriations were divided among several newspapers.

Can They Afford to Be Wrong?

Follow the lead of those who have made great advertising successes. When you buy The Chicago Tribune you are getting a tangible force.

You get more families in Chicago and suburbs than any other newspaper can give you.

You get more readers in The Chicago Territory outside Chicago than you can get with any other newspaper. You are given exact information on circulation in the city districts of Chicago and in every city, village and hamlet outside Chicago. You can easily check the quality of the circulation.

There are many evidences of the value of Tribune good will built in The Chicago Territory for 80 years. Manufacturers who have made the greatest advertising successes have not placed their money on the strength of theory and intangible claims. They knew they were buying an actual value which no other newspaper could give them.

Increases in sales in The Chicago Territory have so substantiated their judgment that they have continued to use The Tribune each year in increasing measure.

From the list prepared by the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. If there are any "million dollar" newspaper advertisers omitted it is because the bureau of advertising was unable to secure estimates of their newspaper expenditures. In the list are 21 of the 23 million dollar bellwethers. Two who used more advertising in The Tribune than in any other Chicago newspaper asked that their names be omitted.*

Miss Wills Is Double Victor At Manchester

British Champion Wins in 2d and 3d Round Singles; Triumphs in Doubles Also

By The Associated Press

MANCHESTER, Mass., July 26.—Miss Helen Wills, the new British women's singles tennis champion, and Mrs. Molla Mallory, American titleholder, continued to-day to dominate play in the Essex County Country Club's third annual invitation tournament as play moved forward to the round of eight.

Miss Wills polished off two opponents with the loss of but eight games, her victims being fourteen-year-old Sarah Palfrey, Massachusetts girls' champion, and Miss Penelope Anderson, of Richmond, Va., eighth ranking woman star on the United States list, who last week defeated Miss Helen Jacobs at Maidstone.

Miss Wills eliminated Miss Palfrey, 6—1, 6—2, and then complimented her as "the best player I ever saw fo age." Miss Anderson went dow 6—2, in a baseline duel which able to break the new pion's service i

On Wednesday, July 27th, the New York Herald Tribune began using Ionic No. 5 type for its text matter. This type has been chosen because it conserves eyesight without sacrificing space.

The New York Tribune was the first newspaper to adopt the Bodoni Bold headline in upper and lower case, a style which has since been adopted by hundreds of newspapers all over the world. Careful tests proved that headlines in this type were more quickly read and with less strain to the eye.

To the better headline type the Herald Tribune adds a body type of greater legibility, thus maintaining its standard for typographical excellence among American newspapers.

Knocks 'Magic' From Store Advertising; Results May Be Accurately Gauged

Analysis of 6,560 Advertisements Show Medium Space Brings High Percentage of Whole-Store Sales Increases When Regularly and Frequently Scheduled

By GUY HUBBART

Copyright, 1927, by Editor & Publisher Co.

During 18 years as retail advertising expert for the Bureau of Retail Advertising Research of the Dry Goods Economist, Mr. Hubbart has analyzed thousands of newspaper advertisements and corresponding sales volume data. Using a uniform standard of measurement, developed by him for gauging the capacity of specific populations to absorb merchandise at retail, he has methodically analyzed volume returns in relation to circulation on the basis of total daily sales and the volume made by departments represented in the space.

Article No. 1, illustrated with cases and facts, deals specifically with the effect of a single newspaper on the daily returns of several stores advertising in it, the same day. Article No. 2 demonstrates how a given circulation affects the returns of a single store, and the relative effect of part and full copy in morning and evening papers.

MERCHANTS who buy advertising as regularly as they restock their shelves and racks, and newspaper men who sell advertising space and concomitant service for their daily bread too often hold in common the belief that the thing they deal in is a subtle kind of magic, magnificently potent to influence sales, but elusive to any and all attempts to gauge or direct its power. This belief isn't universally held, to be sure, but its professors on both sides of the advertising counter are legion, and by their words and acts they fall far short of doing justice to their enterprises and to the wondrous instrument it is their privilege to wield.

This article has only one object. It is to offer merchants and newspaper men like fact-illustrations of two points concerning the direct selling-power of newspaper advertising as utilized by retail stores in general and department stores in particular.

The first point is that newspaper advertising properly used produces definite results far beyond those indicated by the percentage cost of advertising in relation to daily sales volume.

The second is that results from space and circulation (the prime elements of newspaper advertising) are definitely measurable by a practical standard equally fair to merchant and publisher and applicable to any advertisement containing items and prices.

Facts and examples presented here are taken from a special research covering four years—1922 to 1926 inclusive—and include detailed analyses of the newspaper advertisements of 70 department stores ranging in daily selling capacity from $700 to $36,000 volume in cities having populations of 20,000 to 400,000, including trading areas.

A total of 6,560 advertisements were analyzed, together with the corresponding day's sales volume returns furnished by the store management and detailed as to (1) total volume for the day as done by all departments of the store; (2) separate volume as done by each department having space in the advertisement (3) the number of transactions and (4) the average sale at which the transactions were made.

Other data furnished with each advertisement included: daily net paid circulation of papers used, city population and trading area population and a statement of the store's average day and its typical day. The latter figure is the sales volume made on the date of the advertisement the year preceding. Other facts were gathered from the advertisements. These included the specific merchandise advertised, the number of items in the advertisement the prices for each item and the amount of space used.

Originally, the main object of this research and a more extensive one made during the ten years preceding 1922 was to discover the relative movement value in specific populations of different types of merchandise retailing at specified price ranges through stores of varying daily selling capacities, also to develop standard ratios for the variation of retail volume in each month of the year.

Naturally, as the checking of results went on day after day other considerations came to light—among them, the results from different quantities of space applied to different store events and to advertisements mentioning many and few departments, many and few items and prices; results from the same and varying amounts of space by stores catering to high, medium and popular class of trade; results from full copy in more than one paper and from morning, evening and Sunday editions, and in the leader and trailers in circulation in the same field.

Space does not permit lengthy detail on all these points beyond these two outstanding facts:

(1) That without exception medium space advertisements, four to five columns, brought greater whole-store increases and greater direct returns than larger space, seven columns and more, on the basis of population response.

(2) Space scheduled regularly and frequently invariably gave better returns over a specified selling period than larger space concentrated in short periods and scheduled irregularly.

These rules held good ten years ago and hold good today but are given small consideration by either merchants or publishers, in view of the fact that much of the waste and attendant high cost of advertising is due to lack of attention to them.

The idea here is not to present proof that newspaper advertising sells goods—every-day experience of advertisers proves that—but to demonstrate with tangible factors that its pulling power is in the nature of a definite force rather than a variety of sales magic.

A specific example of circulation drawing power in actual sales is illustrated on Chart A. In columns one and two are shown respectively the 1925 and 1926 volumes of five stores in the same city. Volume figures are those of the same business day one year apart; that is, the 1925 figures represent the day the store had to beat the same day in 1926. The advertisements of the five stores appeared exclusively in the same newspaper both days. The day happens to be the poorest business day of the week in this city, the volumes the most typical for all stores and the aggregate space used the smallest average for all stores concerned.

In the fourth column is listed the volume made by the advertised departments for each store, and in column five the volume done by the advertised items and prices by which the advertised departments were represented in the advertisement—direct returns, in other words drawn from space and circulation.

In columns six and seven are shown respectively the number of items advertised by each store and the space used for the day.

The population of the city served by these stores is 70,000 exclusive of trading area, and the circulation of the newspaper used in this instance is 35,000 daily.

Three general principles of newspaper drawing-power and a basic principle of circulation-selling power are illustrated by the situation pictured on Chart A.

First is the fact that the selling power of the newspaper is not diminished by the number of competing advertisements carried, as the aggregate volume of the five stores is $21,000, a population-response of 30 cents per capita on the basis of whole-store sales volume and an average of six cents per capita per single store.

As a matter of fact the excess load apparently increased the paper's selling power since the population response of store No. 1, the largest in whole-store volume capacity, averages 6 cents 300 days a year and on this day ran up to 8 cents. The average of six cents for the entire five is an increase over their aggregate the same day the year preceding when it was 25 cents for all, an average of five cents per single store.

It should be noted that the newspaper on the day in question carried the advertisements of many smaller stores and of other retail establishments. Also in passing, ten extra columns of space were used by the five stores the year preceding to get the volume shown in column two.

CHART A.

Showing the relative volumes done by five stores on the same day 1925 and 1926 respectively, advertising in a single newspaper the same day, and detailing the response in volume on advertised departments and advertised items and the drawing-power per family-reader of the circulation.

Second, crediting the newspaper with only the volume returns from advertised departments, which include direct returns, the circulation drew 20 cents per copy, or, more accurately, per unit-reader. This amounts to crediting each copy with the entire purchases of all the readers in each family reached by a single copy. The unit-reader (single reader) method is the correct way to credit but since some stores and practically all newspapers compute on the family-reader basis, which is this instance divides the selling power per copy by five, the circulation drew 4 cents per copy on the aggregate volume done by the advertised departments of the five stores, or $7,000, as shown at the foot of column three. This is a third of the total volume done by five stores in one day—a remarkable performance for a single newspaper.

Third, and most important, the drawing-power of this circulation measured in direct returns (that is volume actually done on the specific items and prices appearing in the advertisement) was $3,500—exactly half the volume done by the departments represented by the items. This is a drawing-power of 2 cents per family reader on the 35,000 circulation and should be compared to the population response per capita on direct returns volume which is five cents. (Computing on the unit-reader or per copy basis, the circulation really drew 10 cents per single reader on direct returns and for ordinary purposes should be so credited, especially on the figures of a single store.

Either way, single or family reader, it is an impressive object lesson in newspaper drawing-power, especially in view of the fact that circulation keeps this up day after day. It is difficult to conceive of a direct selling force so powerful as this, even at many times the cost.

These three general principles, while they vary with different stores serving the same population and only then because of differing methods of selecting items to advertise, are definite enough as a basis for gauging circulation drawing-power and to illustrate a basic principle applicable to any store, any population and any circulation.

This is the specific principle:

When several stores, three or more, advertise the same day in a single newspaper the circulation of which is numerically a 25 to 50 per cent of the city population served by the stores, population response per capita invariably increases in relation to the average whole-store volume done by all the stores, and increases in the same relation on the average daily volume of the individual stores.

Chart B illustrates this principle as it applies to a single store.

In the example shown on Chart A Store No. 2, the second of the five in selling capacity, had an average volume of $3,500 in 1925 and the same in 1926. (Average volume is annual sales divided by 300.) Its typical day, Oct. 8, 1925 was $4,200 ($700 above average) and the same day 1926, 5,600, an increase over average of $2,100.: These are normal increases, due to the fact that typical days always run high in October, higher than average and higher than typical days in February or August, because people normally buy more goods in October. This has only one application to the point in question, namely, that on a $3,500 day this store drew its whole-store volume at a population response per capita of five cents, its typical (October) day, $5,600, at eight cents per capita, and with only three columns of space advertising 21 items, it drew its advertised department volume at two cents per capita, one fourth of the whole store per capita response.

During 66 days checking this happened every time the store advertised, and every time it did not advertise the per capita response fell back to five cents. Every time space was used, the per capita response on advertised departments was one fourth of the whole-store per capita volume, no matter what the variation might be on whole-store volume day after day.

This is ample indication that the newspaper circulation pulled with the same strength every day and in a definite ratio between advertised and non-advertised departments.

This example is only one of many in more than 32,000 similar analyses made on the returns of hundreds of other stores, many of them covering 100 to 120 days checking and including days representative of satisfactory returns and many admittedly poor days.

Yet, the principle never varied except for the natural variation due to differences in the daily selling capacities of small, medium and large stores. Even with poorly selected items, a not uncommon failing now and then in the best of stores, and adverse business and weather conditions, the per capita response to advertised departments went up much or little on 80 per cent of the days included in the research.

The drawing-power of circulations in both unit-readers and family-readers was plainly discernible and paralleled the degree of increase of volume on advertised departments.

Unless the population served by a store shrinks or expands several thousands overnight that store must draw its daily volume day after day from the actual population within reach of the store, and just as clearly, whatever gain in volume is made, one day against another, must come either from increased expenditure per capita for goods or the purchase of higher-priced goods by an increased percentage of the population.

When volume made by advertised departments shows an increase in per capita response and a corresponding increase per reader of circulation, either a subtle magic is at work along arithmetical lines, or a fundamental principle is operating with startling precision.

Any store owner or newspaper publisher who doubts either the principle or its action can, if sufficiently interested, demonstrate both by doing some careful research work over a period of ten or twenty days, using store volume figures and newspaper circulation as a basis.

For populations of 20,000 to 140,000 the entire population should be used as the basis for computing population-response per capita; in metropolitan cities up to 400,000, 60 per cent of the population gives an accurate basis, providing alike for floating population and allowance for adjacent suburban population.

This particular store, No. 2 on the chart, draws its volume from the same 70,000 people from which the other four draw theirs. It has no better goods and no special facilities or better standing with the public than the others. Its copy and layout are no better. Yet, on the same circulation, the same day, its advertising cost less and drew more volume on advertised departments and greater direct returns than any of the others drew. There is a reason and it will serve to illustrate the practical value to a store of the principle of population-response as applied to newspaper advertising.

On the day described Store No. 2 paid attention to two points the other stores neglected and that the average run of stores neglect every day:

It selected items known to run high in consumer demand in October and priced the items to insure the greatest possible population response.

The list of items are shown in the center of Chart B with three sets of price ranges for each item. The first column of price ranges are base prices, those at which the greatest number of people respond to these items in October; the second column are 20 per cent higher and the third 20 per cent lower than the base prices. Each store in a given city knows best, or ought to know, what values its clientele demands on a specific item of merchandise and by pricing a little above or below that price can get response from a large percentage of the population served. The management of Store No. 2 featured its seven items, each representing a department, at the base price level because it knew from experience that these prices would bring a large volume of direct returns, that is, direct response to items in the advertisement. It also knew that when direct returns run high on a day's advertising the volume on advertised departments, at prices other than those in the advertisement, run high and volume on non-advertised departments is likely to increase. Notice three values on each item were offered, thus making 21 price items.

The totals at foot of the volume columns on Chart B show the volume done that day; direct returns, $1,400; departmental returns, $2,800, non-advertised volume, $4,200, and whole store, including volume from non-advertised and advertised departments, $5,600.

In the average city, 60 per cent of the population responds to advertised items at the prices below the base range, 10 per cent at the prices above base ranges and 30 per cent at the base price on a daily basis.

Store No. 2 is careful of another fundamental of newspaper advertising illustrated by the figure $560, the sums of all the prices in its advertisement, at the foot of the price range columns.

It never allows this figure to exceed one tenth of its typical daily volume, $5,600, because it knows any larger total of prices in one day's advertisement will cut down response.

The reason is plain enough: There are not enough people in the population to respond to larger price sums in view of competition of other retail stores.

There is a direct relation between this $560 (price sum total) and the circulation of the paper used: $16 of price sum for every 1,000 of circulation, and $8 of price sum for every 1,000 of population. These figures go up or down on greater or smaller daily selling capacities of stores and on larger or smaller circulations.

This is the only consistent principle for adjusting prices to newspaper circulation and newspapers interested in definite research could do well for themselves and their advertisers by working up tables to cover the weeks and months of the year on this basis, since the principle varies with normal movement of goods by weeks and particularly by months. But the variation is absolutely definite on specific store volume, specific circulation and population.

Many stores would co-operate with newspapers, especially those stores which most appreciate the selling power of newspaper advertising, if they were convinced that such co-operation would result in better returns and lowered cost. It is perhaps pushing the millennium forward too fast to presume all the stores in a given city would co-operate, but it is a constructive thought anyway, well worth the attention of publishers and merchants.

The second article by Mr. Hubbart will appear in an early issue.

WAGE RAISE AWARDED PRINTER-OPERATORS

Arbitrator Holds Morse Telegraphers of News Service to Old Scale—Acceptance of Award Not Yet Decided

Judge Edward Owings Towne, arbitrator in the negotiations between the United Press, the International News Service and Universal Service on one hand, and the Commercial Telegraphers' Union on the other, on Thursday handed down his recommendations which would provide a new two-year contract, with an increased wage scale for the printer-telegraph machine operators, but with no increase for the Morse operators.

The press association managements and the men took the recommendations under advisement and have until midnight, July 30, to file notice whether they accept or reject the award.

Judge Towne recommended the following weekly scale for printer machine operators:

	Present Scale	Proposed Scale
Bureau points (day)	$37.25	$40.00
Bureau points (night)	$39.75	$42.50
Bureau-relay points (day)	$37.25	$42.50
Bureau-relay points (night)	$39.75	$45.00

New York and Chicago operators were recommended to receive a $2.50 a week differential in addition to the above scale, thus making the new proposed minimum $40.00 a week, and the maximum $47.50.

Judge Towne also recommended that overtime for day machine operators be increased from .875 per hour to .95, and night machine operators from .975 to $1.05, and that the printer machine operators' scale for Saturday night work be increased from $7.50 to $8.00.

Vacation allowances (two weeks with pay) and provisions for holidays were recommended to remain the same as in the expiring contract.

No indication had been given either by the managements or by the operators up to the time of going to press, whether the recommendations of the arbitrator would be accepted.

The Morse operators had demanded an increase in their minimum weekly scale from $44.75 per week to $60.00, and the union demands called for parity of wages between Morse and printer operators.

DEALERS CEASE SUBSCRIPTIONS

Ford dealers on Wednesday received orders to cease taking subscriptions to the Dearborn Independent, Henry Ford's weekly. "If you are in possession of any subscriptions please see that they are returned to the subscribers," the order read. It is believed that the move means that the Independent will become a house organ for the Ford company.

t us cite some examples of bunk h came through the mails only re- y.

in A. Ryan, WGN announcer and r of an interesting column for the go Tribune, spotted this one:

demon publicity man of the National casting Company, which shoots out the programs, says, in announcing that the ny has just arranged for appearances of Hoyt: "He has been one of the great rs of baseball and an outstanding star New York Yankees for several seasons. ear in the world series with the St. Louis nals, it will be recalled that Hoyt pitched both games in which Babe Ruth hit home runs." Well, now——"

We grant that Kathleen Stewart is a charming woman and a capable hostess, but the editor who would use the following story must have a space check of 705 columns for the radio supplement:

Judging by a letter recently placed by Uncle Sam's faithful messenger on the desk of Kathleen Stewart, the popular hostess-accompanist at WEAF, her latest romance is now in the making. When the envelope was opened, it revealed a communication which read as follows:

"I enjoyed the evening there and I liked the band. I think you are pretty and you ought to be seen as well as heard. I liked the way they kept our coats. My mother liked the furniture."

The letter was signed in a bold handwriting, indicating that it came from a very young radio listener.

Probably to the uninitiated an explanation of the various sentences of the letter might be in order. The communication came from a boy who had visited WEAF's studios with his mother the evening before. Therefcre, the first sentence referred to the enjoyment he received while seeing a broadcasting station in operation. Th second sentence regarding Kathleen's beauty and manner is one which receives the enthusiastic accord of all her associates at WEAF. The sentence referring to the coats is the young man's comments on Check Room facilities at WEAF, and the closing sentence, the mother's appreciation for the appointments of the WEAF Reception Room.

And then this effusion from KFI's director of publicity, which might be headed, "Who Cares":

In these days of complexes, we have become accustomed to almost any combination of talents and desires, not always of the suppressed variety. But something new has been brought to light by the publicity man at KFI, Los Angeles. He vows that Nellie Callender Mills is not only the excellent violinist that radio listeners know her to be, but also an expert racing car driver, as several of the motorcycle officers of Los Angeles County can testify. She is purely amateur in her speeding proclivities, however, but whenever she can force herself to "put up the fiddle and the bow" for a little while, she hies herself out into the country in her high-powered car and burns up the roads.

But Miss Mills, or rather Mrs. Mills, is primarily a musician. She studied violin for ten years in Minneapolis and Los Angeles, and she possesses good tone and technique and an excellent sense of the fitness of things. She is the mother of two boys, and is training the youngsters to be violinists, too. (She hasn't said anything about teaching them to step on the accelerator yet.) She is a great lover of the KFI Midnight Frolics, and says that her parents in Minneapolis heard her play on 20 consecutive Saturday nights during the past winter.

And right on the same publicity sheet sent out by KFI's publicity seeker is this, and the writer often has wondered why announcers couldn't perform:

If some evening you have your dials set at 468.5 meters for KFI, Los Angeles, and happen to hear the announcement that Leslie Adams or Dean Metcalf is about to play a piano selection, it is a safe bet that some of the artists programmed are tardy or have cancelled at the last minute. Adams and Metcalf comprise the KFI announcing staff, and their ability to play has more than once saved the day. We have often wondered what would happen if the announcers of radio stations were unable to perform.

Good Heavens! Is there no limit to taxing the editor's patience! Imagine making him read this, from WJZ:

Anyone who greets Darl Bethmann, of the Keystone Duo, with a slap on the back these days, will get nothing but a pained look in response to his heartiness. And the reason isn't that Bethmann has lost his good nature, but rather that the young vocalist, who is frequently heard through stations of the National Broadcasting Company's Blue Network, went in for some strenuous exercises over last weekend.

Bethmann has an uncle who lives in the country and who very kindly invited his nephew to spend Saturday and Sunday with him. Darl accepted the invitation. On Saturday Bethmann played six sets of tennis, swam for two hours, rode horseback, and in addition, walked five miles. At 7 o'clock that night he was ready to call it a day.

But his uncle had one more invitation. He wanted to know if Darl would help him carry some books down from the attic into the library. He had recently purchased five new bookcases, and since his nephew was visiting him, certainly he wouldn't mind helping with the books. Three flights of stairs intervened between the attic and the library, and Bethmann claims that there were many thousands of volumes. At any rate, after carrying books until 2 o'clock in the morning, he spent the next day in a state of coma, and he still winces when anyone comes up behind him suddenly.

And while still on the subject of exercise permit us to publish just one more, for chances are it has been printed nowhere else. It is from the Metropolitan Information Service, and here it is:

Even the great American pie has had to succumb, in at least one instance, to the radio. After a knockdown and drag-out affair between the two, the radio won hands down, a New Jersey baker lost a daily customer and the customer, as a result, is saving ten cents a day.

The information, or most of it, is contained in a letter which Arthur E. Badgley, Director of the Tower Health Exercises of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, received from a member of his radio gym class, the largest class of its sort in the world.

"Since I have been taking your exercises each morning it has saved me ten cents a day," the letter explains. "I work in a concrete block plant and a baker comes around about ten o'clock in the morning. Before I joined your exercise class I was hungry when the baker came around, and I bought a pie. Now, after I take your exercises, I can eat a good breakfast, and can smile at the rest of the fellows when I do not have to buy a pie when the baker comes around."

But the baker doesn't smile.

But why go on. The above are only a few chosen at random from several publicity sheets. However it is the rule of these publicity yarns that they are worthless to the editor who really strives to give his readers something worth while to read.

If it were only to prevent such matter coming to the radio editor's desk or to save the reader the agony of having to read such stuff, when it does get by, the writer suggests, one of two things:

A central clearing house for publicity, where all publicity could be written in newspaper English and the chaff discarded.

Or the employment of newspaper men as publicity men.

And neither plan will be adopted!

Radio editors are herewith advised to sharpen the shears and order another wastebasket in anticipation of an abundance of bunk during the new radio season.

To which EDITOR & PUBLISHER adds this suggestive query—If "studio notes" possess any real news interest why cannot they be gathered through the newspaper's own channels? Why give the P. A. houseroom?

GEORGE HEARST MAKES AIR FLIGHT RECORD

George Hearst (left), son of William Randolph Hearst, standing in front of his new monoplane, with J. H. Frost who drove it from Los Angeles to the Oakland (Cal.) Airport in the record time of three hours and twenty-eight minute. The distance is about 400 miles.

ADVERTISING SHOWS POWER

Patronage of hotels and resorts in the Genesee country, in central New York, is the best in history, according to records in possession of the Genesee Country Association, which has conducted this year, for the first time, a national advertising campaign.

LINAGE LOSS IN 36 CITIES FOR SIX MONTHS IS 3.3 PER CENT

ADVERTISING linage carried in 151 daily newspapers in 36 large U. S. cities during the first six months of 1927 ran 3.3 per cent behind the total for the same papers in 1926, according to figures gathered by the New York Evening Post Statistical Department and EDITOR & PUBLISHER. The tabulated summary follows:

McGEEHAN VIEWS THE "CAULIFLOWER INDUSTRY"

Chief De-Bunker of Prizefighting Says It's No Longer a Sport But a Business—Public's "Insane Sense of Values" Keeps It Alive and Forces Newspapers to Give It Big Play

By WARREN BASSETT

MILLION dollars' worth of mystery changed hands at Yankee Stadium week, the culmination of weeks of paper ballyhoo by the most talented ing writers in the country. Mr. Rickard graciously received the mil- dollars (shy $15,000 spent in adver-), while the fight customers de- d with the mystery. Sports writers, hastily left the Stadium to beat ands of words from their typewrit- n conjecture and explanation.

While the torrent of words was at its t, EDITOR & PUBLISHER asked W. McGeehan, sporting editor of the

W. O. McGeehan

York Herald Tribune, and chief de- ner of what he calls the "cauliflower dustry" and the "manly art of modi- murder," to analyze prizefighting as and prizefight reporting.

It was McGeehan who had termed the um spectacle "the Battle of the ge Coincidences" and had written ollowing:

"his had been ballyhooed as one of reat melodramas of the ring and it rd out to be something that will give t reason for puzzling for no little Somehow there seemed to be an a around this one that not all the mes of Arabia or Mr. Jack Kearns completely deaden."

Ae million dollar hoaxes being sold t public through acres of free news- space under the guise of "sporting ts"? This was the first question.

"izefighting is not a sport, but a ess," was McGeehan's answer.

"s such, it is just about as honest as ican politics, or the average busi- s and probably a little more honest the stock market.

"izefights today are merely enter- nents staged for the box office. The ng element went out when the busi- became respectable and legal. In ld days when fighters had to hop s the county ahead of the sheriff tage a bout on the quiet, prizefight- as more of a sport than it is today."

McGeehan, who says "personally I t give a damn for any fight or any r, except Gene Tunney, who is a nal friend of mine," and who has witnessed a fight except as a news- assignment, does not believe that box office attractions are over- by the newspapers.

he account of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight sold more papers than the trans-Atlantic flights, I am told by the circulation department," he said. "Of course, this reveals an insane sense of values on the part of the public, but there it is.

"There is more hysteria and more maudlin sentiment regarding prizefights than any other public event of like character. I do not believe newspapers force this interest because it has been demonstrated that the public does not respond to fights it does not want.

"At the present time fight fans are interested only in the heavyweights, and bouts in the other divisions cannot draw good houses. A specific reason for this high interest is the colorful character of Dempsey. He is a weird character, began as a hobo and became a millionaire, and the greatest drawing attraction the prize ring has ever seen. Battling Nelson and Joe Gans, in their prime, had, in a lesser way, Dempsey's hold on the public.

"A phenomenon of the public's interest in prize fighters is that their social status rises to a very high level, and is highest in the United States. But even in England, where the 'gentleman amateur' does not associate with professionals, and where Walter Hagen must use the back entrances of golf clubs, the prize fighter is highly regarded. For instance, John Gulley became a member of Parliament and 'Gentleman' Jackson was in high favor. There is no doubt that the average man is interested in fighters, especially a colorful character such as Dempsey, and enjoys reading about them.

"To the disinterested person many of the news stories sent from the training camps seem unnecessarily drawn out and filled with trivial detail. But the true fight fan has an inordinate capacity for such matter, and wants to know the most minute fact pertaining to his favorite."

McGeehan was asked whether many sports writers did not write thousands of words about nothing on dull days at the camps.

"They are there to cover whatever happens as entertainingly as possible," he replied. "I believe all news stories should be entertainingly written. The writer who would report briefly that Dempsey battered a couple of hams and then played poker the rest of the day would probably be replaced.

"Over-writing, however, is most often done by the enthusiast. The man who is too enthusiastic over any given sport is not the best writer or judge of that sport."

Prizefighting is the most difficult sport of all to report, according to McGeehan. A dozen blows are struck while one is being reported.

"The average operator cannot understand anything but the stereotyped phrases such as 'Dempsey led with his right,' 'Sharkey landed a stiff uppercut,' etc." McGeehan explained. "And sometimes they get so entranced by the action in the ring they forget the key altogether. In Toledo when Dempsey knocked Willard down seven times in one round I looked at my operator and found him oblivious to everything but the fight and his key idle. After the fight was over I had to go back and send the missing portion of that round.

"Personally, I care nothing about what happens in the ring; my only concern is to report the story and get it into the office as quickly as possible. There are many stories I get more enjoyment out of than covering a prizefight, the Dayton, Tenn., evolution trial, for instance."

Whether promoters have "pay-off" lists containing the names of sports writer who receive regular gratuities was a question Mr. McGeehan did not discuss in detail.

"I know that none of my men are on any such list," he declared. "If puffery goes on in the sporting pages the managing editors are at fault. They can tell puffery from news at a glance and have ample authority to eradicate the evil where it exists."

The Herald Tribune sporting editor has spent 25 years on newspapers in every editorial department except financial.

His first newspaper work was done for the San Francisco Examiner in his home town in 1899. He was 19 then, and had just returned from the Philippines after a year in the First California Volunteer Infantry.

McGeehan remained in San Francisco until 1914, working on the Call, Chronicle, Bulletin, and the now defunct Evening Post. For the Bulletin he was sent to Goldfield in 1906 to cover Tex Rickard's first fight between Joe Gans and Battling Nelson.

In 1914 he came to New York, joining the staff of the Journal. He later joined the New York Tribune, and after a time was made managing editor. After Frank A. Munsey bought the Herald, McGeehan left the Tribune to become sporting editor of the Herald. When that paper was purchased by the Tribune he remained sporting editor of the merged paper.

To McGeehan, Mencken's "good old days" of journalism is a "hollow shell" phrase.

"The good old days were terrible," he said. "There was no money and no future for newspaper men. Today reporters and editors are better paid and the type of men entering the business is much higher.

"Personally, I never wanted to do anything but newspaper work and I have never done anything else. If I had it to do over again, I would do just as I have done."

WRITER CAN'T ENTHUSE AFTER READING RING "EXPERTS" DESCRIBE FIGHT

The following discussion titled "The Wonderful Fight" appeared in "The Passing World" column of the Winnipeg Free Press recently, signed by T. B. R.

A CORRESPONDENT says we are an old man because we did not work up enthusiasm for the Dempsey-Sharkey fight. Not to become excited over a championship prize fight is, in our correspondent's view, the sure sign that youth has fled. Perhaps it is. We invite his attention to the following excerpts from the newspaper reports of this wonderful encounter.

On July 12, nine days before the fight, one of the newspaper correspondents, describing Dempsey said:

"Everything about the camp suggests the amazing decline of this famous athlete. In the first place, Dempsey's physical appearance has undergone an amazing change, despite the comparatively slight changes in the conformation of the body. If the eyes really are the windows of the soul, then certainly the fighting soul of Jack Dempsey has been materially altered.

"Dempsey's eyes, once keen, sparkling and penetrating, are now almost lustreless and dull. So much so that, studying them carefully, I almost imagined one of them had a cast."

Writing from the ringside on Thursday night another correspondent contributes this:

"The rip-tearing Jack Dempsey of old came back tonight to smash his way to a spectacular knockout over the young Boston heavyweight, Jack Sharkey, and gain the right to a return match with Gene Tunney.

"A terrific left hook to the pit of the stomach doubled Sharkey up and a crashing left hook to the jaw laid the Boston giant low after only 45 seconds of fighting in the seventh round."

This second expert says Sharkey was beaten by:

"A terrific left hook to the pit of the stomach and a crashing left hook to the jaw."

A few lines farther on the same expert tells us:

"Sharkey started to claim a foul only to go tumbling down in a moment from the impact of Dempsey's right hand."

One expert graphically describes how:

"Sharkey with his greater speed and skill had concentrated his attack on Dempsey's face which he chopped and cut into streams and pools of blood."

And we turn to another account from another ringside expert and learn that after the fight:

"Two small cuts showed under Dempsey's eyes, but neither was deep and no stitches were necessary to close the wounds."

Mr. Grantland Rice announces that in the seventh round—

"Dempsey drove a left hook at least eight inches below Sharkey's belt line."

He immediately improves on this—

"As Dempsey drove in his low left he followed with a right jab at least ten inches below the belt line."

A few more blows and Dempsey would have been pounding Sharkey's knee-caps.

The Associated Press reporter then comments:

"Ringside opinion varied as to Dempsey's right to the body. Some critics expressed the opinion it was dangerously close to the foul mark, at least, and others claimed it was palpably low. To the majority, however, it appeared to have been a fair blow."

Mr. Frank Getty, staring the ring, describes the knock-out as follows—

"The big Lithuanian went down as though he had been hit over the head. He was out with his face in the resin and blood of mid-ring, and the referee's count was superfluous."

Here we have a picture of Sharkey going down like a dead man. But on the same page one of Mr. Getty's colleagues, also sitting by the ringside staring at the fight, tells us—

"A straight left smash to the jaw knocked Sharkey down. Sharkey got to his knees at the count of nine, swayed and fell flat to his face as the referee counted ten."

In the round-by-round description of the fight one correspondent gives the First Round to Dempsey—"Dempsey's Round."

Another describes the end of Round One as follows:

"Sharkey licked Jack with two right uppercuts. Dempsey, reeling and groggy, moved about the ring under a fusilade. Sharkey smashed him again with rights. Dempsey was groggy as Sharkey missed a long right. The bell caught Sharkey half way through a right swing. Dempsey went to his corner very tired."

And still another eye-witness and expert, writing of Dempsey's condition after the battle, says—

"Jack was as fresh as if he were just about to enter the ring rather than at the close of one of the most terrific fights of his career."

All very interesting. We have Sharkey knocked out by Dempsey's left and also by Dempsey's right. We have Sharkey going down like a dead man, and we have him staggering up and then falling down for the final count. We have him a week before the fight a sort of physical wreck with fishy eyes, and we have him on the night of the fight a "ripping, tearing," human panther.

Let our credulous correspondent consider the sort of sport it is which produces such reporting as this. If, after digesting all the heroic letterpress produced by the fight reporters, he feels that he has enough accurate knowledge of what happened in the ring to be enthusiastic about anything connected with this battle, we leave him gladly to his delightful enthusiasms.—T.B.R.

BICKEL FORECASTS GENEVA STRUGGLE OVER "OPEN DOOR" NEWS

League of Nations Conference to Debate 1926 Resolution Giving All News Agencies Equal Rights in Gathering and Transmitting European Intelligence

IMPORTANCE of news sources free of political or commercial bias, especially in the field of foreign affairs, was forcefully described by Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press Associations, in his address before the 45th annual convention of the Photographers' Association of America at their banquet at the Hotel Astor, New York, July 28.

Mr. Bickel, whose address was entitled "Photography and World Progress," delineated the increasingly important part photographs are taking in the presentation of the day's news, saying that the news photographer, usually without the public recognition that frequently goes to the reporter, risks his life almost every time he leaves the office and has usurped the romantic position in journalism held by the reporter 20 years ago—the unsung hero of the press.

He declared that journalism in America is in a state of transition, nearing the end of "the age of flamboyancy," retaining the outer marks of the "yellow press" although adhering to the highest standards of editorial conduct in the world. He described the difficulties and hazards of gathering news, citing the false conflicting reports of the Byrd party's landing near Paris as an example of the need for resourceful and cool heads at the scene of the news and along the chain by which it is brought to the consumer.

"Many people, surprisingly many, do not seem to be able to understand that a press association does not create the news," Mr. Bickel continued. "A press association is merely a transmitter of the news. Other people, other factors, quite out of our jurisdiction and control create the situations that result in the facts that make the news. The news may be good. It may be constructive. We carry it. It may be bad. It may be destructive. It may destroy in an afternoon a business structure that American citizens have worked for years to create and who may be utterly innocent victims of forces and powers away and beyond their ken—but notwithstanding that it is our duty to carry it.

"A great press association can no more be developed on dishonest news than could a bank on crooked dealing.

"In Europe and Asia certain governments subsidize or maintain governmental news agencies. These agencies carry to their connecting or allied agencies the governmental and other news of their home countries so prepared and so edited as best to advance the policies and ambitions of the supporting nation. Certain nations give these subsidized or governmentally maintained news services special and discriminatory privileges such as advance information on governmental news; faster facilities on the governmentally operated telegraph lines, and more favorable rates. They do this in order to facilitate the transmission of the character of news material that they wish circulated.

"An outstanding asset of the United Press in the development of the world-wide extension of its service is our complete and absolute independence from any character of 'official' or governmentally subsidized or maintained news agencies. This fact alone has gone far, in the minds of publishers everywhere, to develop a sense of confidence in the honesty and impartiality of our report.

"The issue of governmental discriminatory control over official news is going to be brought frankly into the open next month at the meeting of the International Press Conference called at Geneva, Switzerland, by the League of Nations. Newspaper readers the world over should follow the sessions of that conference with keen and unflagging interest.

"At a preliminary conference of press experts a year ago a resolution was introduced by Roy Howard, chairman of the board of directors of the United Press, and unanimously adopted, calling for the elimination of all discrimination in the handling of governmental news; demanding complete impartiality in the matter of news transmission and press rates, and absolute equality and publicity in all censorship. This resolution comes up for approval at the coming August meeting and the issue, for the first time in the history of journalism, will be fairly and openly joined. The advocates of the 'open door' in news will have their chance to put the news gathering organizations of the world on record as to their stand.

"All this is a long way from photography. But above and beyond the fact that you are specialists in your chosen profession is the fact that you are citizens. Ours is a government of public opinion. News is the raw material out of which public opinion is created. If public opinion is to retain its vitality and its strength, the press of America must always have at its command a free and steadily expanding source of news supply, and the sources of this news supply must at all times conform, in every degree and particular to American standards of impartiality, honesty and freedom of the dominating factors in the preparation of the news you read.

"Never before in American history has it been as necessary as now for the American people to be certain that the sources of their foreign news are honest and uncontaminated with propaganda and governmental control."

U. S. NEWS IDEAS PROGRESS IN EUROPE, COOPER FINDS AFTER WARSAW MEET

Bi-ennial Conference of "Official" News Agencies May Lead to Meeting of Newspaper Owners—News Property Rights on Geneva Agenda

KENT COOPER, general manager of the Associated Press, last week concluded a tour of Europe, including attendance at a conference of European news agencies at Warsaw, Poland. He described the purposes and accomplishments of the meeting and other phases of his travels in the following statement prepared for EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week:

"The conference of the directors of the European news agencies at Warsaw, which I attended, appeared to me to be of real value. This was the third of these conferences. They are held every two years. Before the war no such thing was ever heard of. The directors of these news agencies from countries some of which are no larger than some of our states scarcely knew each other before the war. Now they are really getting acquainted through the contacts that these meetings afford. They discuss their problems in the greatest detail in their business meetings and they do not forget the social side. Such contacts are bound to help in the creation of a better understanding between the various European nations and as series of conferences among the proprietors of newspapers in Europe would be another step; in fact, I think that will be the next step of interest in European journalism.

"Some of the agencies in Europe were organized long ago with government affiliations. This may have been necessary owing to the lack of initiative on the part of an independent press in those countries. With the organization of these agencies there at least came into existence, however, some exchange of news between countries through the medium of these agencies. At least each country was made aware of the official position taken on any subject by another country. At one time the news of this character was filed by one agency to another but today practically all of the European agencies have adopted a policy advocated many years ago by Melville E. Stone.

"It was Mr. Stone's belief that the news coming into a country should not be dictated or selected by others than its own nationals. The adoption of this idea in Europe meant that the Wolff Agency in Germany, for example, may have its own representatives making their own interpretation of the news of the agencies of Poland, Bulgaria, England, France and elsewhere, including America, in order that the news from such countries for the German reading public may be selected and forwarded by Germans.

"Mr. Stone long ago made this policy effective as far as the Associated Press is concerned and the enlargement of the Associated Press staff abroad, obtaining much news of a controversial character from its own independent reporting, has made possible an even greater effectiveness of the policy in recent years. We do not today select from the Associated Press report in New York the news transmitted from the United States to the important countries of Europe and, likewise, the agencies of those countries do not transmit to us in America what they think should be published in the United States. We do that through the activities of an American enrolled staff.

"Further and further extension of this idea among the agencies of Europe is bringing greater independence and reliability to each of them, in our opinion. In the nature of things, of course, the agencies pretty much rely upon each other in the matter of spot news which has no controversial character. The result is that if one agency errs in announcing a death or an assassination, or an earthquake, all of the other agencies may be subjected to the error. Certainly they would be thus subjected until such time as their own representatives could investigate and correct the error or until the agency making the mistake could do so.

"Any news collection facility is human in its endeavors and thus may err. It was because the Havas Agency, which is the only really extensive agency in all of France, was imposed upon by a telephone announcement to it that the American fliers had landed at Issy-les-Moulineaux, that all the newspapers of France and many in other countries which were just going to press, suffered through this inaccurate news. It was because the Havas Agency announced the arrival of the American fliers and because a similar announcement was made at Le Bourget that the Associated Press, as well as other agencies, made the erroneous announcement of the landing of the America which, because of the isolation of the landing place, the Associated Press could not correct for an hour. The Havas Agency expressed its deep regret to those who were depending upon it and hopes that the plans that it has made to prevent a repetition of the unfortunate incident will be effective.

"We must not, of course, on this side expect that European journalism would run along the exact lines with which we practice here. Many of the countries offer only limited opportunity for extensive journalistic endeavor. The people do not read newspapers as they do here. However, I did notice that advancement seems to have been made in the last several years in Europe in almost every branch of newspaper making except the matter of rapid and economical transmission between the various countries. Lack of the existence of efficient facilities of this character is a serious handicap to the development of the exchange of news between the European countries. The telegraphs, of course, are controlled by the governments and it is difficult for us to understand why the governments have not long since grasped the desirability of expediting press matter upon an economical basis.

"Perhaps the Geneva Conference press experts which will be held next month under the auspices of the League of Nations will effect something of improvement in the matter of transmission.

"That item of the agenda at Geneva and the one which hopes to accomplish something in the matter of property right in news, in which Mr. Melville E. Stone pioneered, are the most important things to come before the Geneva Conference. We are so far ahead of this country in the matter of news transmission that America has much to contribute in the way of ideas to Europe.

"News reporting on the European continent by European differs quite a good deal from the way that it is carried on in America. There is not enough competition between reporters, as we view it, to make it interesting. In Russia, for instance, I was interviewed by representatives of ten Moscow papers. I do not speak Russian and only one of the reporters spoke English. He was asking me questions and putting down my answers when I said that it hardly seemed fair that the others could not know what we were talking about. The answer was that there is no competition among the reporters and that the interviewer who spoke English would tell the others everything that had been asked and answered. However, to relieve my worry, he thereupon began translating in full everything that he had asked and everything that I had said. It is not far different from this in other countries. Individual reportorial enterprise seemed scarcely to have developed.

"There were, of course, exceptions and the exceptions reflect themselves in the rapid strides that some newspapers are making. It was not an unusual thing to find at least one man on many of the progressive papers who had had varied experience on American newspapers. This was true in Denmark, Sweden, Russia, France and, of course, in England. There may have been other instances which I do not now recall. Thus it was that it was not unusual for an editorial executive of some great newspaper to tell me of his experience in Galveston, Springfield, Mass., St. Louis and, of course, New York. The newspapers with which they are connected I noticed, show the American newspaper making influence.

"I visited the Associated Press bureaus in fourteen countries, the first I had ever made to many of them, and the first visit I have made to any of them in several years. A great deal of credit must be given to these American members of our staff who have accepted assignments away from the homeland and are contributing their best to giving a true picture of what is going on in the old world. They are reporting through their good American eyes from direct contacts with European people and events, and altogether comprise a pretty large staff of American news writers."

EVANS JOINS GEORGIAN

Virgil V. Evans, formerly general sales manager of the Ludlow Typograph Company, and widely known young Southern newspaper man, has been named business manager of William Randolph Hearst's Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American. Mr. Evans' newspaper career began dating from 1910 when he became classified advertising solicitor for the old Birmingham Ledger. Subsequently, he has been publisher of the Huntsville (Ala.) Mercury and has held other newspaper positions. He served as adjutant general of Alabama when only 22 years of age.

SEND COLLIE TO COOLIDGE

Mary Ann and Robert Scripps, children of Robert P. Scripps, president of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, this week sent "Diana Wildwood," a four-months-old white collie pup, by airplane from Detroit to the Summer White House as a gift to President and Mrs. Coolidge. "Diana" will succeed "Prudence Prim," who died recently.

N. Y. GRAPHIC OCCUPIES NEW $4,000,000 PLANT

Macfadden Tabloid Starts Publication from Eight-Story Structure July 25—Mayor Walker Starts Presses—Daily Using 3 Floors, 90,000 Square Feet of Space

THE New York Evening Graphic, a tabloid published by Bernarr Macfadden, on Monday of this week began publication from its new $4,000,000 plant at 350 Hudson street, after nearly three years spent in the plant of the old New York Evening Mail at 25 City Hall Place.

WILLIAM O'HARA

An informal reception marked the opening of New York's newest newspaper plant with Mayor Walker as guest of honor. Huge baskets of roses filled the office of Emile H. Gauvreau, managing editor, and members of the staff acted as guides for guests who wished to see the plant in operation.

The new structure is eight stories high and contains 270,000 square feet of floor space. It is of the loft type of construction, with ceiling-high paned windows on every floor, giving the impression of a glass exterior.

Construction work was started in September, 1926. The building, occupying a ground area of 30,000 square feet between Dyer and Charlton streets and extending about half block towards Varick street from the east, was taken over in January, 1927, and from then on a group of workmen which never fell below 250 was constantly engaged in preparing it for occupancy by the Graphic.

This work was in charge of William O'Hara, special representative of the administration department, under the direction of Guy L. Harrington, treasurer of Macfadden Publications, Inc.

The site of the plant is owned by the Trinity Corporation and has been leased for 99 years by the daily.

The Graphic has reserved for its own use the basement, one-half of the first floor, all of the second, and one-half of the third floor, a total of 90,000 square feet of space. The basement is given over to newsprint storage, and it is from here that the big presses are fed. A special chute connects the basement with the loading platform to facilitate the handling of the rolls. Three thousand tons, a six weeks' supply, can be stored in the huge basement.

The press room with its line of four Scott sextuples occupies the Graphic's half of the first floor. Each unit is capable of delivering 36,000 copies of the paper per hour. Installation of the battery began in February, one month after the building was taken over from the contractors, and 20 men under the direction of a Scott press erector have worked continuously on the installation since that time. The presses have General Electric controls and are driven by 75 100-horse power motors.

An opening has been left in the concrete pressroom floor to permit installation of a new octuple within six months, and temporary flooring covers space enough for an entire new line of presses.

The second floor is given over to the editorial department, art and photographic departments, composing and stereotype rooms. Twenty-five Linotype machines have been placed in the spacious composing room, five in a line. Seven of these are new and the others are to be replaced by new models. So large is the room that the alleys between the machines are wide enough to drive an automobile through. The stones and cases, too, are widely spaced, affording ample room for the workers. The ceiling-high windows provide a flood of light for operators and proofreaders.

Adjoining the composing room, and separated by wide open spaces instead of partitions, is the stereotyping department, where two double Junior Auto-plate machines have been placed. As the plates come from the machines they ride onto a chain conveyor belt and are carried down to the pressroom.

New plant of New York Evening Graphic

On the third floor are the business offices, circulation, advertising, classified and administration, and also the office of Lee Ellmaker, general manager of the Graphic and the Philadelphia News, second Macfadden tabloid.

To provide greater efficiency in the editorial department, a row of separate offices enclosed in metal partitions which do not extend to the ceiling has been provided for editorial department executives and feature department heads. Here Emile Gauvreau, managing editor, and Martin H. Weyrauch, assistant managing editor, have their offices as well as the society, dramatic, radio, sports, art and feature editors.

In recognition of the importance of the photographic department to a tabloid, great care was taken in alloting space to this division. Each of the 18 staff photographers has his own small dark room for developing his plates, and the latest camera equipment has been installed for pictures taken in the building. A dressing room is provided for the principals in specially posed pictures. The reference library adjoins the photo rooms.

To permit for future expansion, every department has been alloted far more space than it can fill at the present time. Some idea of the size of the various departments can be gained by detailing the space allotted each. The photographic department, 60 by 40 feet; library, 40 by 30; art department, 48 by 15; composing and stereo rooms, 15,000 square feet; business and advertising, 15,000 square feet; editorial and associated departments, 15,000 square feet; press room and paper storage, 45,000 square feet.

Mail and delivery departments occupy a space 132 by 26 feet, and in addition there is a huge covered loading platform running the entire length of the building on the north.

From this platform paper and supplies can be sent via metal chutes to the basement storage rooms, and a fleet of trucks can take on their cargo of Graphic's for delivery to points in the city, New Jersey, Long Island, and the railway terminals.

The Graphic is well located for rapid metropolitan distribution and for the swift dispatching of trucks to outlying points along the big communication arteries which radiate from its location, such as the new Holland vehicular tunnel to New Jersey the entrance to which is just a few blocks away.

To make the building ready for occupancy at this time great speed was required and both day and night shifts were employed.

All of the plumbing in the eight-story building was completed in the space of six weeks, plumbers working night and day in order to get the work done on schedule.

Electrical workers have been employed for the past four months on the job of completing the complicated electrical installations necessary.

Eight hundred feet of steel partitions went into the making of the Graphic's new quarters, as did some 600 feet of terra cotta partitioning. The building has four large freight and three passenger elevators.

Space in the building, outside of that used by the Graphic, will be rented. The two top floors have already been taken by the Eastman Kodak Company.

The task of moving to the new plant was begun Friday, July 22, and continued over the week-end without disturbing any of the regular editions.

During the informal reception held at the new building Monday, Mayor Walker read copy, wrote a headline, pressed the button which started the presses on their first run, and followed the first printed edition to the circulation department. The Mayor's headline was: "The Subway Tie-up Must Be Averted."

Mr. Walker and other notables were greeted by Bernarr Macfadden, O. J. Elder, president of Macfadden Publications, and E. H. Gauvreau. Among those who visited the plant were: J. M. Powers, president, and Edward Crinham, Powers Engraving Company; Postmaster J. J. Kiely; Merlin H. Aylesworth, president, National Broadcasting Company; Tex Rickard; Thomas J. Dowling, circulation manager, Scripps-Howard Newspapers; J. J. Winters, circulation manager, New York Telegram; C. J. Randau, United Press; Abe Newman, circulation manager, New York Evening Post; and Samuel Booth, president, Interborough News Company.

The Graphic was launched by Bernarr Macfadden in September, 1924. Executives of the paper are: Lee Ellmaker, general manager; Harry Ahearn, advertising manager; O. O. Scattergood, circulation manager; William F. Metz, classified manager; E. H. Gauvreau, managing editor; Martin H. Weyrauch, assistant managing editor.

OLDEST LIVING PAPER LEARNS ITS BIRTHDAY

Annapolis Maryland Gazette Was Founded Sept. 19, 1727—Serial Numbers Now Outrun Calendar Six Weeks

That the date of the founding of the Annapolis, Maryland Gazette, the oldest existing newspaper in the United States, was Sept. 19, 1727, was announced last week by its editors. The date was arrived at, it was said, after research by members of the staff compiling "200 Years With The Maryland Gazette," the bicentennial commemorative issue of the Gazette, and will be observed each year in the future as the correct anniversary date.

The date of the first issue has been in doubt a long time. Historians of the Colonial period have arrived at several approximate dates, but as the first 64 issues never have been located, the date had not been calculated definitely.

That William Parks, the founder of the Gazette, first issued his journal in 1727 is proved by references to it by other Colonial newspapers of that year. The earliest located copy of the Gazette, however, is the 65th issue, that of Dec. 10, 1728, which is in the possession of the Maryland Historical Society. It was by reference to this issue and a calculation of the dates for more than a year before that the Gazette was able to arrive at the date it now believes to be correct.

A further obstacle in determining the correct date was that the calendar was changed from the Julian to the Gregorian reckoning after it started publication. The change, introduced in 1752 in England and the colonies, advanced the date by eleven days, and this calendar had to be brought into use by investigators for the Gazette.

A complete change of numbering of the issues of the Gazette will be necessitated in the six weeks intervening between August 4 and the new date of the 200th anniversary. The Gazette on July 21 issued its 51st number of the 200th volume, and next Thursday will issue No. 52 of that volume. Until Sept. 19 supplements of No. 52 of the 200th volume will be issued, until the error accumulated in two centuries of publication has been adjusted.

COURSE IN PRESS LAW

Mattison, Attorney and Former Reporter in Charge at Marquette

Marking what is believed to be a new step in the teaching of journalism in American colleges and universities, newspaper law will be offered as a semester course at the Marquette University College of Journalism, Milwaukee, Wis., this fall with Walter J. Mattison, assistant city attorney of Milwaukee and former newspaper man, in charge of the class.

Newspaper law, as it will be handled at Marquette, will include the right to privacy, contempt of court, criminal libel, civil libel, and the law of copyright.

GERMANIC EXTERIOR MARKS BUILDING OPENED BY JACKSON CITIZEN-PATRIOT

Limestone and Minnesota Marble Combined in Striking Artistic Effect—English-Georgian Style in Business Office

THE new home of the Jackson (Mich.) Citizen-Patriot has just been occupied and thrown open to the public. It is one of the outstanding structures of the city and one of the finest newspaper plants in the state.

Patterned after some of the newer German work, the exterior of the new building is modern in style and presents a striking appearance. Fluted pilasters adorn the east and south sides and at the corners, and at salient points in the division of the facades are plain stone pylons. The pylon on the front of the building is topped with conventional and symbolic figures, treated in architectural character. Above and forming the central figure of the parapet is a carved shield bearing the arms of the state of Michigan.

Front view of new Jackson Citizen-Patriot home

Two stories high, 132 feet long and 70 feet wide, the structure is faced chiefly with limestone, but with east and south facades, facing Jackson Street and Washington Avenue, respectively, based with polished Minnesota pink marble from sidewalk level to a height two feet above the window ledges. The north facade is of limestone full height, and the west facade, or rear of the building, is of good quality pressed brick with glazed surface and of the color of stone.

The main entrance on South Jackson street is of granite of the kind that forms the base, with the words, "Citizen-Patriot," carved on the entablature. A large bronze street lamp is located at enther side of the entrance.

General business offices occupy the front half of the lower floor, this portion of the building being finished in the character of English Georgian work. The double entrance doors as well as all the woodwork in vestibule and general business offices is American black walnut. The floor of the vestibule and public space in the general business office is of napoleon gray marble and the counters are topped with verde antique marble and the baseboards are of the same material. Midway between the main entrance and the entrance to the stairhall are two massive walnut columns from floor to ceiling. In embellishing the walnut finish the architects designed hand-carved molding and scroll work of rare beauty. The ceiling in the general offices is divided into 63 panels, each acoustically treated to prevent noises from echoing. The panels are finished in light ivory with border of the same color. Wide ornamental plaster molding of old gold and ivory in leaf and scroll design divide the ceiling panels.

Six large chandeliers artistically designed in hexagonal shape supply artificial light when needed. The glass is set in frames of bronze, the metal parts being finished in old gold and walnut. Furnishings throughout the general offices are finished to match the general surroundings.

Back of the general offices is the main stairhall leading to the editorial rooms above, and at the extreme rear of the building, are the press and mailing rooms. A new 64-page Scott octuple press has been installed in the press room, with an overhead conveyor attached, which carries the finished product from the press to the mailing-room.

A mezzanine floor houses the telephone exchange, and toilet facilities for all departments, which include shower bath.

Stairhall, mezzanine landing and lobby are wainscoted in golden-veined Tavernelle marble, and the walls of the lobby to the editorial rooms are finished in block effect in caen-stone colors.

Located at the front of the second floor, the larger editorial rooms have numerous large windows. Interiors of all the rooms connected with the editorial department are decoratively treated in keeping with the general offices, wainscots being eight and a half feet high in panels of walnut-stained and waxed gumwood. Ceilings in all the editorial department rooms are acoustically treated. One of the features of the editorial department is a good sized conference room, which may be used by the public.

On the second floor in back of the editorial room are the composing and stereotyping departments, both rooms being large and well arranged. In addition to plenty of windows on the north and south sides of the composing room, this department also has a large light and ventilating monitor, sections of which are opened and closed by an electric motor. The composing room and other mechanical departments are all equipped with the most modern machinery. Included in the equipment for the stereotyping department is a gravity operated plate dropper.

Two low pressure boilers using oil as fuel provide heat for the building. The oil feed is controlled by thermostatic and electrical devices. A modern ventilating system furnishes fresh air.

In the basement are general storage rooms and a large recreation room for carrier boys.

The Citizen-Patriot is published by the Booth Publishing Company, which also publishes the Grand Rapids Press, the Saginaw News-Courier, the Muskegon Chronicle, the Flint Daily Journal, the Kalamazoo Gazette, the Bay City Times-Tribune and the Ann Arbor Times-News.

AUTOMOBILE FIRMS OPPOSE COMBINATION PAPERS

Advertising Managers Representing 40 Manufacturers Draft Resolution Expressing Dissatisfaction at Detroit Meeting—"Uneconomical" Their Claim

DISSATISFACTION with enforced newspaper combinations was expressed t large automobile advertisers of the cntry at a meeting in Detroit, July 7, dails of which were learned by EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week.

The 40 advertising men in attendance vre members of the advertising man-aers' division of the National Automo-he Chamber of Commerce, and after the qestion of enforced combinations was dcussed from the floor a resolution op-sing the practice was adopted.

The resolution follows:

'Since it is economically sound for the avertiser to be able to purchase the v ume and kind of circulation which nets his sales problem,

'We, the Advertising Managers of the tional Automobile Chamber of Com-nrce, are opposed to the denial by any wspaper publisher of the right to pur-ase space desired in newspapers in-dividually, this denial being effected by eorced combinations."

Believing the matter one of general picy and of interest to all newspaper publishers, the group voted to send the r olution, with the following letter of explanation, to every daily publisher in t country:

"July 27, 1927.

'You are doubtless familiar with the s uation which exists in a number of c es whereby advertising space in two o more papers is sold only in enforced c nbination, the advertiser being permit-t no option.

'The advertising managers of the mem-b companies of this organization are c nfident that any enforced combina-n is unsound business practice. They a hereby presenting their view on this tter to the publishers, with the desire t t such papers as now have combina-ns or may be contemplating them, may ve a clearer understanding of the ad-rtiser's problem.

'First of all, compulsion to buy two a icles when only one may be needed c ates an uneconomic situation.

'Furthermore, even if both papers in t combine may be equally good the a ertiser must consider the problem of s ce and repetition. It may be more p portant for his selling job for him to b ten full pages in one paper rather t n twenty half pages in two papers.

In any event it is his responsibility to p lain the greatest possible buyer interest o dollar expended. In the long run t successfulness of his campaigns will d ermine expenditures for the future. A y artificial obstacle to the most effi-c nt business policies cannot be profitable t any one—even to the immediate bene-fi ary—in the long run.

We therefore invite your attention to t attached resolution and we should ap-p ciate any comment you may wish to m ke upon this stand.

"Cordially yours,
"National Automobile
Chamber of Commerce
"JOHN C. LONG,
Secretary, Advertising Committee."

Details of the Detroit meeting, which w not open to reporters, were told E TOR & PUBLISHER this week by Mr. L g.

"The general feeling was that the en-o ed combination is uneconomical," he sa. "It was viewed as a highly unusual p ctice, not to be found in any other b nch of business, which forces the buyer t take what he does not want in order t get what he wants.

"When the publisher says to the adver-s that he can have space in the even-i paper only on the condition that he t space in the morning paper also, or v versa, it is the same as the automo-bile dealer saying you cannot buy a c n unless you buy a roadster too."

According to Mr. Long, speakers declared that present advertising competition is so keen that every dollar expended for advertising must be spent where it will do the most work.

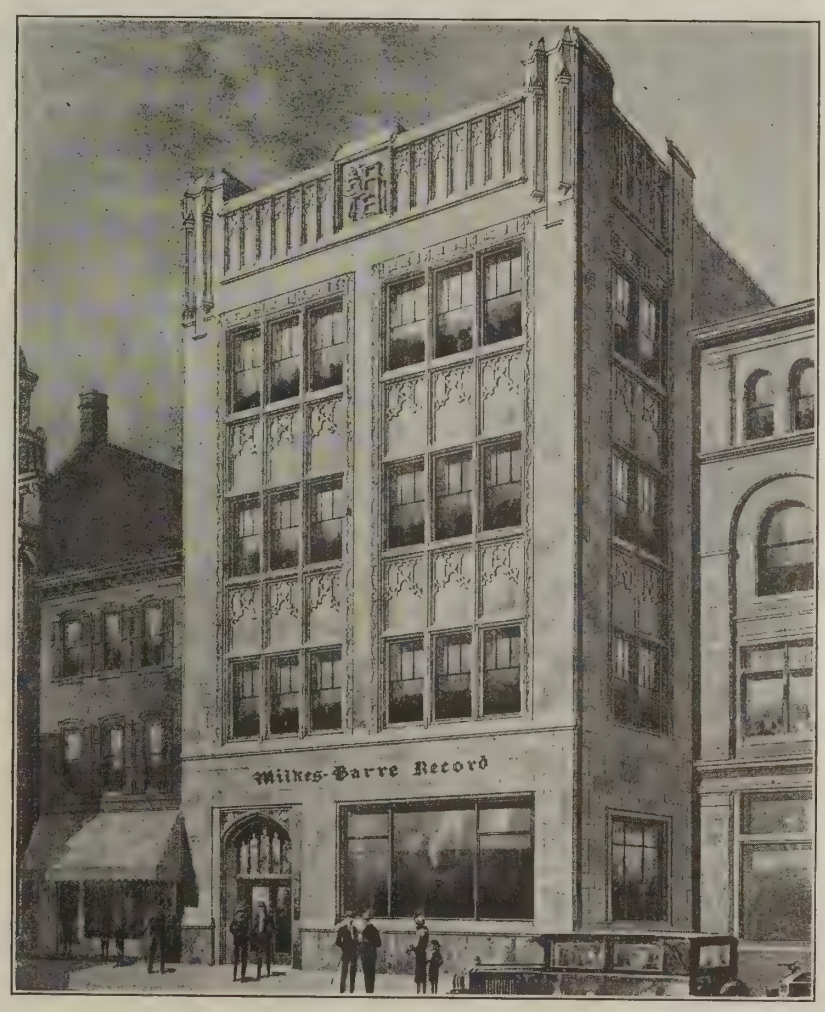
"Automobile advertisers with only a given amount of money to spend in a city, say one page a week, are dissatisfied when compelled to use a combination, a half-page in each paper," Mr. Long reported. "This may or may not be sound merchandising practice from their viewpoint."

The general tone of the meeting was one of friendliness toward combination newspapers, according to Mr. Long, but the opinion was expressed by some advertising managers present that should the situation in individual cities demand such action newspaper copy can be withdrawn and the territory covered by billboards and direct mail.

"As stated at the meeting, the value of the newspaper is that it offers a method of bringing the buyer and the seller into direct contact," Mr. Long said. "Automobile advertising usually carries the names of the local dealers and aims to have a direct local application as far as sales are concerned.

"Newspapers, however, class automobile copy as national, and enforce the combination rule which does not apply to local advertisers. Some automobile advertising managers are saying that if their copy must be placed on a strictly 'national' basis then they might as well use magazines for general prestige and good will effect. They feel that their copy is local in aim and effect and should be given consideration on this basis."

Mr. Long knew of no definite action being contemplated by the automobile men in their opposition to combination papers, beyond the adoption of the resolution quoted above.



"The entire question is viewed by the automobile firms as one of economy, and they wished to make their position clear," he declared. "The large increase in newspaper advertising volume was cited as one of the reasons why the return per dollar spent by advertisers is growing less. With this in mind they view the enforced combination as uneconomical, forcing them to spread their appropriation for certain cities over two newspapers, when they would prefer to use one.

"It is altogether possible that the companies with volume production would not change their present schedules if allowed to do so, but they would like the freedom of making their own choice."

Advertising rates were discussed at the meeting, but in a minor way, according to Mr. Long. It was stated that rates have gone to higher levels generally, and in some cities on the basis of forced circulation. The consensus was that it is the business of the advertiser to compare circulations with rates and determine in what cities is is economical to place copy.

"The publisher who has advanced his rates on the basis of sound circulation increases in his logical trading area has no reason for worry," Mr. Long said.

WORK STARTING SOON ON NEW $500,000 HOME FOR WILKES-BARRE (PA.) RECORD

Architect's drawing of Wilkes-Barre Record plant

CONSTRUCTION operations are to start soon on the new $500,000 home that has been designed for the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Record, one of the oldest morning newspapers in that state. Plans for the newspaper plant have been prepared by Knapp and Bosworth of Wilkes-Barre and the contract has been awarded to Walborn and Barney, Wilkes-Barre, with the management of the Record expecting to have the new plant ready within a year.

The Record's new home will be located at 13-15 North Main street, on the site now occupied by the newspaper. The plant is to be erected in two units. The first unit will occupy a ground site with a frontage of 41 feet and 106 feet deep. It will be four stories high and will house the business office, news bureau, administrative and advertising departments. The second unit will be two stories high and 41 feet wide and 132 feet deep. It will house the mechanical departments, including the press and composing rooms. It will also provide for the mailing departments and the circulation bureau. The second unit will be interconnected with the administrative advertising and news departments with pneumatic tubes.

The erection of the new plant is going to make the task of getting the Record out on schedule a difficult one for the next year but the management has made arrangements to handle the problem in the best possible manner. The news, advertising and business departments along with the composing room are being moved to an adjoining building. The Record intends to have all these departments, including the type setting machines, transferred to the adjoining building in 24 hours.

SANDERS IN LITTLE ROCK

Former Houston and Memphis Editor Now Part Owner of Daily News

G. V. Sanders, until recently editor of the Memphis (Tenn.) Press-Scimitar, has bought an interest in the Little Rock (Ark.) Daily News and will be its editor. John R. Frazer is president of the company and L. B. Myers is vice-president and publisher.

Mr. Sanders began his newspaper career 18 years ago with the Scripps-McRae newspapers and did his most notable work for that organization as editor of the Houston Press from 1916 to 1922 and as editor of the Memphis Press and Press-Scimitar from 1922 until recently. During his tenure in Houston the circulation of the paper increased from 16,000 to 30,000 and the concern's valuation of the paper went from $100,000 to $500,000 in the same period.

Mr. Myers, who is now publisher and principal owner of the News, had his first newspaper experience under Mr. Sanders 13 years ago when the latter was city editor of the Memphis Press, and with the admiration that the cub reporter often retains for his first "boss," believes that Mr. Sanders holds the key to success for his Little Rock newspaper.

CHICAGO POST TO BUILD $3,000,000 PLANT

Work to Start at Once on 19-Story Publication and Office Structure on Wacker Drive—Daily to U Four Floors—99-Year Lease Signed

CLOSING of a ninety-nine-year lease on Thursday released the announcement by Carroll Shaffer, general manager of the Chicago Evening Post, that the newspaper will build a nineteen-story structure, 60 by 150 feet, of the most modern architectural design, costing $3,150,000, on Wacker Drive, Chicago's newest boulevard.

Work on the Evening Post Building will commence immediately along plans already matured and complete.

Founded April 29, 1890, by the late James W. Scott, the Evening Post subsequently became the property of the late Herman H. Kohlsaat, and in 1901 was purchased by John C. Shaffer, present editor and publisher, who also publishes the Indianapolis Star, Muncie Star and Terre Haute Star.

The site for the new edifice is known as 211-15 Wacker drive and furnishes unusual facilities for development. It is on a corner, with sixty feet frontage on Wacker drive and 150 feet on Fork avenue, which will run from Lake street to the lower level of the drive almost midway between Wells and Franklin streets, while the rear will open on to Haddock court, thus insuring light on three sides.

The property was leased for an undisclosed consideration from the Marshall Field estate, the real estate transaction being conducted through Albert H. Wetten & Co., and Ralph H. Martin of Baird & Warner. Callistus S. Ennis & Co., were the original brokers, representing Mr. Shaffer. The plans were prepared by Holabird & Roche, architects, of Chicago. Contracts for construction have been let to the McLennon Construction company and the financing is being handled by Mosser, Willaman & Co., and A. C. Allyn & Co.

Attractive architects' plans specifying a modification of classic design modernized to meet the demands of a present-day metropolitan office building, assure an artistic exterior, with dignity and beauty blending for a substantial majesty worthy of the impressive drive.

The Post building will be one of the first toward the western end of the city's new river front

The exterior of the building will be faced with a granite base and with ornamental cut stone in the lower six stories with face brick and ornamental terra cotta trim for the upper stories.

The architects' drawings indicate an attractive design, its motif being a modification of the classic, modernized to meet the demands of office building design.

With the exception of the Wacker drive level floor, which is assigned to shop space, the building entrance and elevator lobby, the Post will occupy the building from the basement to the fourth floor, inclusive.

The entrance and lobby will be ornamental in design, with marble floors and walls and the paneling on the walls decorated with paintings. An ornamental stairway will lead from the first floor to the newspaper administration offices on the second floor.

The upper floors of the building are assigned entirely as rental space for general office purposes.

The entrance vestibule and elevator lobby on the first floor will have floors and walls of Roman Travertine marble. This marble will also be used for the wainscoting and stairs leading from the first floor to the administration offices on the second floor. The handrails will be of walnut and the balustrades and newels of ornamental iron.

The entrance lobby also will have an ornamental plaster ceiling and cornice, with spaces for the reception of mural decorations.

All finished wood work in the entrance vestibule, and the interior finish of the private offices will be of American walnut, in a natural finish.

Doors on the first floor will be of steel framing with etched bronze ornamentation.

A niche will be provided in the front stone work at about the second floor level for a statue. Above this there will be a terra cotta band reaching to the seventh floor, and above this the walls will be finished with a Kittaning brick. In the lower stories, on both Wacker drive and Fork avenue, there will be ornamental iron spandrels.

The top of the Post building will resemble the Parthenon—a row of tall, stately columns of stone, will surround the upper part of the building. These columns, blending well in the general architectural scheme of beauty, will balance the columnar stateliness of the lower part of the structure.

Present buildings on the site are to be wrecked immediately to make way for the Post building. Development of construction details is going ahead rapidly and excavating for foundations and sinking of caissons will start immediately after the wrecking work is done. Work thereafter will go forward rapidly, it is expected, thus bringing the building to an early completion.

The building structure will follow what is known as the skeleton type. Structural steel columns, spandrel beams and floor girders will be used, with concrete slabs up to the fifth floor level and re-enforced concrete construction generally above this point. Floors throughout the building will have cement finish, except where marble or terrazzo floors are used.

On the first floor the store fronts on Wacker drive will be of ornamental iron, and ornamental iron frames will be used in all windows up to the seventh story.

Corridors above the first floor will have terrazzo floors with art marble base and thresholds. Floors from the fifth to the eighteenth inclusive will be divided into offices for rental finished with suitable woods and interior trim.

On the eleventh floor will be the women's rest rooms, while a barber shop will find space on the twelfth floor, adjacent to the men's retiring-rooms. The fifth to the tenth and the thirteenth to the eighteenth floors will be similar in plan.

Equipped with four high-speed elevators of the latest type, residents in the Post building will be insured rapid transportation facilities between the various floors. There will also be a freight elevator.

The Post pressroom will occupy most of the basement. Pedestrians will be able to see the operation of the new Post presses by looking through the windows on Fork avenue. Special foundations will be laid to sustain these presses.

Newsprint will be moved from the lower Wacker drive level to the pressroom by means of an elevator at loading platform level, and thence on tracks to a stockroom from which, again on tracks, the rolls will be brought to the presses.

The boiler rooms, equipped with the modern heating and ventilating machinery, will be in the sub-basement at the rear of the building.

On the second floor above the upper level of Wacker drive will be the administration offices, on the third f the composing, stereotyping rooms other mechanical departments, while editorial rooms and publication of will occupy the fourth floor. On floor, also, will be the newspaper libr and artists' rooms.

The city distribution and mailing ro will be located at the lower Wacker dr level, where fine facilities are avail for the traffic incidental to the out of a metropolitan newspaper.

Situated on Wacker drive, the Post building will form an integral p of one of the biggest developments Chicago's history.

Almost directly opposite the site of Post building is the site of the projec Marshall Field building.

How new Chicago Evening Post building will tower above Wacker Drive

The News Is Preferred By Every Type of Automotive Advertiser

THE DETROIT NEWS

Leads for the First 6 Months of 1927 in Total Automotive Advertising, Retail Automotive Advertising, Passenger Car Advertising and General Automotive Advertising

THOROUGH home coverage of 54 years, standing plus great circulation concentrated in the local trading area has given The News outstanding leadership in automotive advertising just as it has in every other selling classification of advertising. The Detroit News, situated in the heart of the automotive industry, early took the lead in giving its public authoritative and important news of things automotive. The Detroit News was one of the first newspapers in America to publish a separate Sunday section devoted exclusively to such news. This section has won a commanding place in the minds of thousands of readers both because of its news interest and also because of its many touring suggestions, trail notes and other automotive helps.

A Leader Any Way You Look At It

Weekdays alone, Sundays alone or Weekdays and Sundays combined, The Detroit News carried more automotive advertising than any other Detroit newspaper. The Detroit News showed a lead in every branch of automotive advertising—in passenger car space, in truck advertising, in the advertising of tires, accessories, as well as gasoline and oil. The News thus leads in retail automotive advertising, general automotive advertising, and in total automotive advertising.

Not only does the six months' record show The News leading both other local newspapers, but it also shows The News with an increasing lead over the next newspaper. Each succeeding year since 1923 The News showed increasing leadership in automotive advertising, and during the first six months of 1927 The News led the second newspaper by 221,018 lines—a greater lead by 38,908 lines over the same period of a year ago.

"BOOSTER JOURNALISM" DOESN'T MEET DAY'S NEED, DECLARES JULIAN HARRIS

Human Advancement and Happiness Stand Higher Than Material Prosperity in Editor's Eyes, He Tells North Carolinians

THE need for editors to print the truth, whether the facts are creditable or discreditable to their community or state, has never been greater than it is today, Julian Harris, editor of the Columbus, (Ga.,) Enquirer-Sun, told the North

Julian Harris

Carolina Press Association at its annual banquet at Morehead City Thursday night, July 21.

"And never greater has been the responsibility resting on each and every editor, whether his paper be a country weekly with five hundred subscribers or a city daily with 50,000, to do his full-share toward ridding his section of the forces and ideas which are menacing its intellectual progress and spiritual growth and making a jest of justice and a lie of liberty," the editor declared.

Mr. Harris then propounded the following questions:

"Are each of you honestly and without reservations of any kind, printing all the facts relating to every form of injustice which is calculated to destroy the happiness, limit the comforts, narrow the rights or threaten the life or liberty of the people of your state?

"Or do you put industrial progress and financial prosperity above human advancement and human happiness?

"Are you working for the welfare of the people of your town, whether against social prejudice, religious intolerance or organized lawlessness?

"Or do you use your columns to clamor for a bigger town instead of a far better one, and for a wealthier community rather than for one where the less prosperous may have full opportunity to improve their condition?"

Mr. Harris turned then to a plea for the editors to fight illiteracy, prejudice and ignorance in the south. Quoting Walter Hines Page that a "South illiterate, unhealthy, poverty-stricken was a national peril," the editor declared that "to that statement I would add that it is equally true that a South illiterate and intolerant, but wealthy, is a national menace.

"If you are tempted to reply that as soon as the South is wealthy, illiteracy and ignorance, which breed intolerance, will be wiped out, my reply is that the South, even now, is rolling in wealth."

Reciting a list of figures showing the great increase in recent years in the wealth of the South, Mr. Harris said that the South is no longer poverty-stricken and unhealthy, "yet, illiteracy thrives, and prejudice and intolerance, often masked and hooded, usurps the law and administers justice with lash."

Declaring that the most potent influence to keep the South, as well as other parts of the country, "in the path blazed by its founders", must be wielded by the editors, Mr. Harris exhorted that they hold themselves "against party politics, and refuse to mistake opinion for principles, or to be limited by the prolific suggestions of sectionalism."

In conclusion Mr. Harris said he wished to lay stress on "something that is more precious than all the wealth of plutocracy, and yet which many editors seem to look on lightly, or whose significance they fail to understand. This significant possession is the right of the press to express its opinion untrammelled, and the right of the people to worship in their own way under the protection of the Constitution.

"Therefore, never yield a hair's breadth in your defense of the freedom of speech. Use it. Cherish it. . . . When freedom of speech dies, liberty of conscience will succumb and another civilization will have gone to its grave."

TIGHT AD LAW IN FLORIDA

New Statute Makes Untruth in Advertising a Misdemeanor

Advertisers in Florida hereafter must tell the truth and nothing but the truth in their copy, as a result of a lesson learned during the era of real estate speculation in 1925.

One of the first measures offered at the outset of the 1927 biennial session of the Legislature was a "pure" advertising bill. It went through the House and Senate, was signed by the Governor.

The act makes it unlawful "for any person, firm, corporation or association with intent to sell or in anywise dispose of merchandise, securities, service or anything offered directly or indirectly to the public for sale or distribution or with intent to increase the consumption thereof, or with intent to induce the public in any manner to enter into any obligation relating thereto, or to acquire title thereto, or any interest therein, to make, publish, disseminate, circulate or place before the public, or to cause directly or indirectly to be made, published, disseminated or circulated or placed before the public in this state in a newspaper or other publication or in the form of a book, notice, handbill, poster, bill circular, pamphlet or letter, or in any other way, an advertisement of any sort which advertisement contains any assertion, representation or statement which is untrue, deceptive or misleading."

Violation involves a $200 fine or 90 days in jail, or both.

STRESSES CANADIAN PROGRESS

Montreal Star Uses Novel Method to Emphasize Dominion Growth

The Montreal Daily Star in its Jubilee Edition June 29 used an unusual method to present statistics showing the growth of Canadian wealth and production.

Page 3 of the main section was devoted entirely to statistics, set in classified fashion in two and three inch spaces and separated by rules. The word GROWTH! in large black letters headed each space, while under it in lighter type was printed figures for a single industry. For example:

"GROWTH

"RAIL EXPENSES

"It cost $15,775,532 to operate Canadian railways in 1871. Last year it cost $372,149,656."

PRIZES FOR PUBLIC SERVICE AND INTEREST IN NEWS STORIES AWARDED TARHEELS

A. L. STOCKTON, managing editor of the Greensboro (N. C.) News, was elected president, and Greensboro was selected for the 1928 convention city by the North Carolina Press Association, at the concluding session at Morehead City, July 22. Mr. Stockton succeeds A. C. Huneycutt, Stanley News-Herald. J. W. Noell, Roxboro Courier, was elected vice-president. Miss Beatrice Cobb, Morganton News-Herald, was re-elected secretary-treasurer. B. Arp Lowrance was continued as field secretary, with headquarters at Charlotte.

LEARY W. ADAMS

The new executive committee is composed of the president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and J. T. Perkins, Lincoln County News; Mr. Huneycutt, James W. Atkins, Gastonia Gazette; Carey Dowd, Jr., Charlotte News, and Lee B. Weathers, Shelby Star.

The Walter Savory Loving cup, for the best all-round weekly newspaper, was awarded the Roxboro Courier. Johnston Avery, editor of the Hickory Daily Record, was awarded the Separk prize of $250 for having rendered the most outstanding public service during the past year, while Leary W. Adams, of the Charlotte Observer, received the $250 Separk award for the most meritorious newspaper writing of the year.

The Record was accredited with the best piece of community work through its successful effort in collecting 8,000 volumes and over $1,000 in cash toward the restoration of the Lenoir-Rhyne College library, destroyed by fire last winter. This work was accomplished after a campaign lasting three weeks. The Adams story was a description of Mount Mitchell, the highest peak east of the Rocky Mountains, and the successful effort to anchor a tower on its summit for the observation of fire.

The Greensboro Daily Record was awarded honorable mention and given second place in the contest for the Separk prize for valuable service rendered to the community. The series of articles calling for this notice had to do with state government, and were written by Eric W. Rodgers, formerly of Charlotte and Raleigh, and until recently with the Associated Press at its Raleigh bureau. Miss Virginia Terrell, of the Asheville Citizen, was awarded second place in the Separk contest for the best piece of writing.

North Carolina newspapers and editors were warned by Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News & Observer, that there is danger in the growing tendency to make the newspaper a commercial proposition instead of an institution. He spoke on the tendency of the times in connection with newspapers, dealing extensively with the numerous recent consolidations. Mr. Daniels warned the publishers that if the newspaper becomes strictly commercialized, as seems to be the tendency, instead of becoming state, national and local institutions, as in the past, they would not be entitled to any more protection than any other industry.

Delegates not attached to daily newspapers were taken on a trip to Cape Lookout, while members of the Associated Press were holding their semi-annual meeting.

A Better More Profitable Newspaper

BECAUSE no newspaper can be a financial success without advertising, the problem of service to advertisers always has been of first importance—and today looms large.

The Ludlow system of composition is the most practical means within your reach for supplying that greater service advertisers demand.

The Ludlow removes all limitations from your composing room and enables you to secure a quality of advertising it would be impractical to attempt without it. With it, production is simplified. All ads are printed from new type every time, thereby giving them much greater selling power.

Let us tell you what the Ludlow has done for others and how it can help you.

Ludlow typelines are slug-cast from hand-set matrices in sizes up to full-width 72 point caps and lower-case, and even 84 point caps. No mold or machine changes required.

EDITORS' PEACE PARTY FETED IN LONDON

War Between Britain and U. S. Unthinkable, Marquis Reading and Other Speakers Declare —Exchange of Editors

LONDON, July 27.—The Marquis of Reading, former ambassador at Washington, was the chief speaker at a dinner given at Dartmouth House tonight by the English-speaking union in honor of the American editors visiting Europe under the auspices of the Carnegie Peace Foundation.

"I am confident that His Majesty's Government is seeking every possible means to arrive at any agreement in the question which is now the subject of so much discussion," said Lord Reading, referring to the disarmament dispute at Geneva.

"We assuredly have a common purpose and can we not work with the same cooperation and goodwill, with the same trust we had during the war, striving again for the common purpose, and perhaps, may I add, for a nobler purpose?

"The war, right as it was on our part, was still a terrible affair, but the peace of the world is, after all, the attainment every man of religion and spiritual faith desires to see accomplished. We believe that you in America, and we in this country, are charged with a great mission, a very heavy responsibility, we can do much. It is difficult to exaggerate what we may achieve.

"If—God forbid—anything should happen to make our paths diverge, then, in my mind, the world will suffer a terrible disaster, I believe in my innermost heart, after an experience of many years in this country and in yours, there is an almost sacred desire that we should achieve peace and maintain it. We should do all in our power to preserve it in the future, and continue to labor together to the best of our ability to that end."

Maurice S. Sherman, Hartfort Courant, declared that war between Great Britain and the United States was unthinkable.

C. C. Hamlin, Colorado Springs Gazette, read a telegram from the English-speaking union of the United States conveying best wishes for the success of the editors' visit, and, on behalf of the newspapers in the smaller cities of the United States, warned British friends not to be misled by opinion in the newspapers of the great American cities alone, as, he said, the hearts of the majority of the American public beat true with the hearts of Englishmen.

Archer H. Shaw, Cleveland Plain Dealer, said the idea of war between Great Britain and America "is outlawed in the heart of every American."

Lord Birkenhead presided at the dinner and Major John Jacob Astor welcomed the visitors to England.

The American Journalists also were the guests at luncheon today of the Institute of Journalists.

R. D. Blumenfield, editor of the Daily Express, said, in welcoming the Americans, that the relationship between Great Britain and the United States was entirely in the hands of the newspapers, and not in the hands of ambassadors and ministers. He suggested that American and English journalists should interchange positions every six months.

Marshall Ballard, New Orleans Item; and Robert Lathan, Asheville Citizen, assured English journalists that ebullitons of anti-English feeling in the United States were infrequent, and both agreed with Mr. Blumenfield's idea that there should be an interchange of journalists between England and the United States. Mr. Ballard said, however, that he would favor such an exchange every six weeks rather than every six months.

A. B. CARGILL

Mr. Merk has published the Advance for twenty years and in January, 1926, purchased the Burlingame Star and consolidated that paper with the Advance.

Mr. Cargill, who formerly was general manager of the Milwaukee Sentinel and later assistant publisher of the Omaha News, has been associated with the San Francisco Chronicle for the past year and one half. During most of that time he has made his home in Burlingame.

The Advance-Star is an evening publication. While the price paid for the property has not been revealed Mr. Cargill has filed articles of incorporation for $100,000 in behalf of the Burlingame Publishing Company and the property will be operated under that name.

Mr. Merk has other business interests and will continue to reside in Burlingame.

PHOTOGRAPHER STONED

Boston Herald Man, Snapping Crashed Plane, Resisted by Pilots and Mob

A Boston Herald photographer was attacked with mud and stones and attempts made to break his camera when he attempted to take a photograph of an airplane, operated by a civilian, after it had fallen 250 feet into the mud flats near the Boston airport July 24. As the photographer opened his camera a handful of mud struck him. Threatening moves were made by the crowd as Stewart Chandler and Joseph Dunn, the pilots of the machine, told the photographer that they did not want the picture made, claiming it would give aviation a "black eye." Suddenly one man made a dive for the camera, and as the cameraman resisted him the latter attempted to strike the Herald man. A call for the police was sent in and upon their arrival and that of an army sergeant the hoodlums disappeared.

STERLING ELECTED TO BOARD

The Houston Printing Co., publishers of the Post-Dispatch, has elected Walter G. Sterling a member of the board of directors to succeed the late Col. George M. Bailey, editor and paragrapher. The name of a new editor has not been placed beneath the Post-Dispatch editorial masthead since Bailey's was removed upon his recent death. The "Tampering With Trifles" column of Judd Mortimer Lewis, poet and paragrapher, has been moved to top position formerly occupied by Bailey's "Early Morning Observations."

ALABAMA VOTES TAX ON NEWSPAPER ADS

But Senate Immediately Decides to Reconsider and Bill Calling for 5 Cents an Inch Tax Is Tabled

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 25.—In beating the bushes for an increase of $4,000,000 per year in the tax income, the Alabama Legislature recently passed a bill taxing newspaper advertising at the rate of five cents per column inch. The cause for worry in newspaper circles was short-lived, however, as a motion to reconsider was passed in the Alabama Senate by a vote of 25 to 1; and consideration of the bill to tax newspaper advertising was indefinitely postponed.

The bill proposing a tax of five cents per column inch on newspaper advertising was facetiously injected into a general debate on the methods for raising a $4,000,000 additional income for educational purposes in the State of Alabama. Immediately after the facetious proposal was made, however, it found serious support on the floor of the Senate. One of the Senators made a speech in favor of the bill in which he said: "It is my understanding that the Birmingham News, owned and operated by Victor Hanson, gets from $1.50 to $2.50 per inch for advertising, and I believe that a small tax charge of five cents per inch would be very reasonable."

Before any of the floor leaders seemed to realize what was being done the bill seemed to get out of hand and was actually passed. Later in the same legislative day, however, Senator Fred Fite of Birmingham made a motion for reconsideration, with the result that this action was rescinded, and consideration of the bill was indefinitely postponed.

The newspapers of the State received the report that such a bill had been passed with almost absolute editorial silence. "So far as I know there was not a single editorial comment on the bill which the Alabama Legislature propos to tax newspapers at a rate of five cer per column inch for advertising," sa J. E. Chappell, assistant to the publish of the Birmingham News.

A publisher of one of Alabam weekly papers said: "As five cents inch is about two cents an inch more th I actually get net for my space, it is ea to see what this bill would do to my pu lication."

TRADE LINOTYPE MARK

Cultivating Big Oaks from Little Acorns

AN OUTSTANDING REASON for the success of The Distinguished Newspaper has been the inclination of its publishers to look upon it as a merchandising enterprise, an organization devoted to the sale of a usable commodity, advertising space. It is a worthy point of view, for through it The Distinguished Newspaper is bound to the same proven principles which have guided other merchandising organizations to prominence and profits.

Not the least important of these principles is the consideration of every responsible concern, no matter how small, as a logical prospect. The paper sets no minimum on the amount of space it will sell, deems no contract insignificant, for it realizes the possibilities of cultivating big oaks from little acorns. It builds the big contract of the future by insuring the effectiveness of the small ad of today.

The next two pages show the application of this policy to a number of small advertisements from The Distinguished Newspaper. While limited in size, each of these advertisements is treated in a manner to insure the utmost in results to the advertiser. Each, too, is composed the Linotype way,—another profitable policy which has been adopted by The Distinguished Newspaper.

MERGENTHALER LINOTYPE CO., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Small Ads Build Prospect List

They Make a Potential Customer of Every Merchant in the Newspaper's Field

One of the primary businesses of a newspaper is the sale of space and consequently it is not unnatural that it should seek to sell its commodity in such large quantities as it can. There is a certain amount of danger lurking in this hunt for big sales, though, for it is liable to lead to an oversight of the smaller game, to a disregard of the concern which, because of a limited appropriation, must confine its advertising to small space.

Every merchant doing business in the area covered by a newspaper is a prospect for advertising—if the paper doesn't exclude a number of them by attempting to sell them space in quantities they cannot afford. By avoiding too high a goal, by gaging selling efforts to conform with the needs and abilities of each prospect, the newspaper adds materially to its list of potential customers, shows a higher return on selling energy, and converts space otherwise used for filler into paying advertisements.

Another point worth bearing in mind is the fact that the small customer of today may prove to be an unusually large customer tomorrow, and accordingly is well worth consideration. Particularly will this be so if the newspaper takes the pains to give him advertising as effective as it possibly can be made, for then, having had a part in his success, it will earn both his regard and his business. It is human nature to favor those who favor us and so the newspaper wins a champion in the customer it helps to advertising returns. The good will created keeps pyramiding and eventually results in the paper's achieving a reputation as a resultful medium and in its earning the title "distinguished."

FREE treatment of the small ad will frequently endow it with a pulling power far greater than its size would ordinarily lead one to expect.

It must be remembered, though, that it is a dangerously easy matter to accord an advertisement a freakish treatment rather than a free one, and that the over-stepping of the narrow line between is responsible for the failure of many ads.

The happy medium has been attained in the ad before you. Its chief variations from the usual are a tilted type panel and an Oxford border set heavy side in. Its result is an attractive ad for the SERVICE RADIO SHOP.

Quality Printing

All These Ads Set on Linotype

Like the page opposite, this page was entirely set on the Linotype. Here, too, 6¾ point Ionic No. 5 has been used as a text face and Cloister Bold and Cloister Bold Italic used for the heads. Of the advertisements, that for the radio shop shows the new Garamond Bold, the 8 and 24 point sizes being employed. Cloister Bold Italic with swash capitals compose the two lines in the printing advertisement, while 8, 12 and 18 point Bodoni enter the composition of the necktie ad. The photographer's announcement is set in Caslon Old Face, 14 point small caps having been chosen to obtain a bit more weight than capitals of a smaller size would have given. In the phonograph ad, decoration has been achieved through straight slug composition. Here Narciss parentheses marks have been cast on the same line as the 24 point text. The milliner's advertisement employs only 8 and 12 point Garamond and the bank ad likewise is limited to two sizes, 10 and 18 point Benedictine. The realtor's display uses 10 point Cloister for its text while its display lines are in 10 and 18 point Cloister Bold and 12 point Cloister Bold Italic. The illustrations, except that in the photographer's ad, are shown through the courtesy of B. Altman & Co.

Banks are not always inclined to the use of large space, particularly when they are advertising one of their less important services. At the same time they cannot afford to sacrifice dignity or impressiveness for the sake of advertising economy. With these limitations in mind, white space and off-center balance were called into play to lend power to this conventional advertisement.

Putting Big Pull In Small Ads

Effectiveness Depends Upon Way Space Is Used Rather Than Upon Its Size

The experience of large users of newspaper advertising has led them to the conclusion that extensive space is not always essential to results. They have found that careful utilization of small space will likewise produce returns; that good layout and effective type-use will give the small advertisement a pulling power quite out of proportion to its size.

That the newspaper can apply these facts to the preparation of advertisements for the smaller businesses on its customer list is practically demonstrated on these two pages. While each of these small ads illustrates a particular phase of layout and typography, they all follow, in the main, principles set forth in "Good Copy," a recent publication of the Bureau of advertising, American Newspaper Publishers Association. Here are several which may well be kept in mind:

"Select type faces that seem to illustrate the product and its spirit of the moment.

"Do not use a great many different sizes and faces of type in a single display.

"Observe the niceties of marginal white space. The areas of white 'make' the advertisement.

"Balanced composition is a deciding factor. The size of the type and its position governs this and the average eye should be able to ascertain the good and the bad.

"If simple line borders are employed, such borders should conform in every way to the type faces in style and spirit.

"Readability is influenced in an important way by the spacing of type. Cramped and congested typography is ill advised.

"Avoid too many interjections and interruptions in the way of captions, subheads and little spots of emphasized type."

The Typography of This Page

Every line of type entering into the composition of this page was set the Linotype way. The text is in 6¾ point Ionic No. 5, the legible body type, and is headed in Cloister Bold and Cloister Bold Italic. In the bookstore ad, the head and footlines are 18 point Bodoni Bold, while the text is in 8 point Bodoni. The insurance broker's ad beside it is set in 8, 12, 14 and 18 point Benedictine, and the nursery ad below these two employs 12 and 14 point Caslon Old Face and Caslon ornaments. The specialty shop advertisement is composed entirely in Garamond, 10 point being used in the nameplate and slogan, 30 point italic with swash capitals in the headline, 8 point italic and 14 point roman, respectively, in the copy panels, with the signature in 18 and 10 point. The haberdashery ad shows a usable combination of Narciss and Cloister Bold Italic. The nameplate is in 21 point Narciss, the two other lines in 30 point Narciss and 18 point Cloister Bold Italic.

GOOD BOOKS

Attractive Border Effects may frequently be found in a combination of the more utilitarian characters.

For Example, braces are seldom looked upon as being ornamental, yet they make up the sole decoration of this bookstore ad.

A Bit of Imagination will suggest many other instances where similar typographic units will aid in producing effective small ads.

AT BROWN'S

that an advertisement will attract attention does not always depend upon the use of elaborate ornamentation. The ad you are now reading affords illustration of this point. Without the aid of a single unit of decoration, it relies entirely upon a simple, readable arrangement of its text type to set it apart from the advertisements surrounding it. The extent to which it succeeds may readily be judged by studying this page as a whole.

One newspaper publisher remarked en he received the series:

"These Flit cartoons are a real cartoon ws feature for every newspaper that is cky enough to be on the list. They ntain humor, action and continued in- rest. Folks enjoy and look for such man interest advertisements."

The newspaper syndicated humorous ature has been studied and capitalized "Fell Sharp," who drew the series. his style stands out in solid columns of ws and advertising and unconsciously noticed by the reader because of his bit of searching for cartoons. The mpaign is the work of the H. K. Mc- ann Company, New York City.

With humor as the attention-producer the newspaper campaign, it is natural at the Standard Oil interests should so "use cap and bells" in window dis- ays. Briggs has done one of his char- teristic "Ain't it a grand and glorious eling?" cartoons, showing flies, mos- uitoes, bedbugs, roaches, and ants getting e goats of Mr Average Citizen and his Vife until a dealer persuades them to ke home a can of Flit. Then the house comes "home sweet home again," while ad and Mother spray Flit in high glee. his center piece with Flit cadet side dis- ay pieces has been placed in thousands windows all over the country this mmer. A counter display also is sup- ied, as are window strips.

The company has not overlooked the rge foreign-speaking market. Its cam- paign is appearing in foreign language newspapers.

With newspapers featured to the trade as the backbone of the effort, other mediums and methods assume their posts of duty. Color pages are being released in Saturday Evening Post every fourth week, and Ladies' Home Journal and Good Housekeeping are receiving color insertions. During the winter Flit is suggested to kill moths.

The company is one of the few utilizing the circus programs of a number of the "big shows." Four leading dairy publications carry the store to dairymen. A special campaign to mothers appears in Babyhood Magazine. Holland's Magazine carries copy for Texas and the Southwest.

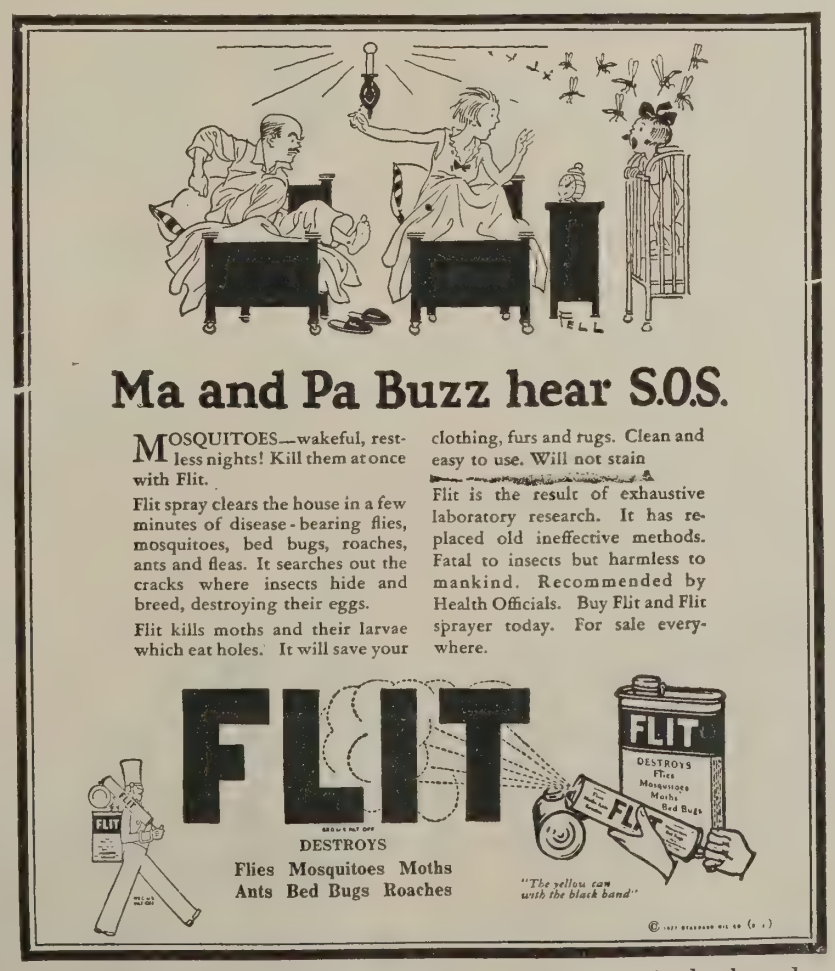
Special copy to motor campers, hunters, anglers and other lovers of the open is being run in large space in Field & Stream, Outdoor Recreation, Outdoor Life, Outdoor America, Vacation Annual, and advertising to Boy Scouts is published in Boys' Life. A contest is being conducted in this group.

The company estimates that it will broadcast 800,000,000 advertising messages to over 34,000,000 circulation, of which almost two-thirds is obtained by using newspapers.

The Standard Oil Company has gone to the newspapers for still another idea of presentation in the physical make-up of the Flit News, a four-page house organ which goes to wholesalers, distributors, salesmen, retailers, etc. This is a regular newspaper, edited by ex-newspaper men, with feature stories, headlines, boxes, cartoons, editorials, advertisements and even a column, "Bug Bites," conducted by Val. A. Schmitz, McCann account executive. An interview with John C. Wolke, general sales manager of the Stanco Distributors, Inc., is a feature of the April 22 issue and Evans E. A. Stone, advertising manager, contributes a signed feature in the June 22 edition, which, also has an editorial on "Lindy" and another on budding young graduates.

A competitor in the insecticide field has commandeered the services of Harrison Cady for copy in a lighter vein for the year. The New England Confectionery Company, makers of Necco wafers, came out this year with their message interpreted by prominent cartoonists. The frequent use of cartoons by Briggs to suggest "Not a cough in a carload" for Old Gold Cigarets of course is one of the most recent and smartest examples.

Chelmsford Ginger Ale this year is using clever and funny drawings of various characters who are given names appropriate to make them members of a fictitious Chelmsford Society.



Pow! Zowie! Wonder when the Katzenjammer Kids will take the advertising limelight!

COPY BY THE GALLON

CARL SPAHR, linotype operator at the Mechanicsburg (Pa.) Daily Local News, is probably the only linotype operator in the world who receives his copy by the gallon.

The editor of the daily tells the story that several days ago, when checking up on the progress being made on some copy he had sent down to be set, he found Spahr laboring diligently over a large gallon can from the bright colored label of which he was endeavoring to decipher sufficient words to set an advertisement in 12 point type. The can contained a gallon of horse and cattle spray called, "Dry-O-Fly", manufactured by a Mechanicsburg firm.

In all his travels and experience with various newspapers and magazines, the editor has never before seen linotype operators receiving copy by the gallon.

Three columns wide and six inches deep, this copy gets its laugh—and a pleasant after-effect—in short order.

NEWS MAN'S WIT SAVED OFFICIAL OVERSIGHT

Hanson of Los Angeles Times Provided Marine Escort and Its Arms When Funeral Train of Senora Calles Left U. S.

To an alert newspaper man in Los Angeles, the United States Government is indebted for having been saved from an embarrassing faux pas in connection with the recent death there of Senora Elias Calles, wife of President Calles of Mexico.

CHESTER G. HANSON

The facts, which give full credit to Chester G. Hanson, reporter for the Los Angeles Times, were made known only a few days ago through a report turned in to Washington by Captain W. W. Aiken of the United States Marine Corps, stationed in Los Angeles on recruiting duty. The story is briefly this:

So rapidly had arrangements been completed for shipping the body of Senora Calles, her death occurring late on June 2, while the train scheduled to carry the remains to Mexico left shortly after noon of the day following, that no time had been allowed for the preparation of official observances, such as a military escort, customary in a case of this kind. This Hanson learned within a few minutes after he had been assigned by his city editor to cover the departure of the train.

Hanson called Capt. Aiken of the Marine Corps, with only two hours remaining before the departure of the train. Informed that there were no orders for an official gesture on the part of the government, Hanson urged Capt. Aiken to obtain an escort, which the latter did from the ranks of his recruiting aides. The reporter also checked up on officialdom of the city, state and county, as well as civic organizations, to assure their being represented when the train pulled out of the depot, and then drove to the station in a taxi.

Capt. Aiken was there with his squad of Marines in dress uniforms and white gloves, but, to Hanson's mind, one thing was lacking. They had no guns! After hearing the officer explain that the nearest Marine arms were at the base in San Diego, Hanson jumped into a taxi and dashed to an uptown movie costume company and from his own pocket rented five Krag rifles, which, while not up to modern regulation, suited the purpose.

But there were other difficulties still, for, when it was learned that the lines of the Southern Pacific from Los Angeles to the border city of Nogales cross the Mexican line at Mexicali, Capt. Aiken stated that he could not take his escort into alien country without official sanction of both governments. Hanson wired for this permission, but was unable to receive a response in time. However, the other arrangements functioned perfectly. The report of Capt. Aiken, reciting the full facts, was sent to Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, who, in turn, passed it on to Secretary of State Kellogg. The Marine officer was commended by both, and Hanson, the reporter, is cited by all concerned as "a live wire."

Hanson, or the "Great Dane," as he is known to the staff, is famous in Los Angeles newspaper circles for the manner in which he practically "sewed up" interviews with Arthur Burch and Madelynne Obenchain while they were in jail awaiting trial for the murder of Belton Kennedy.

HOOSIER POLITICAL SCANDAL AGAIN BOILS AS EDITOR GETS "BLACK BOXES"

Boyd Gurley, in Indianapolis Times, Makes New Charges Against Gov. Jackson—How the Missing Evidence Was Found

By RICHARD P. OVERMYER

(Indianapolis Correspondent of Editor & Publisher)

INDIANAPOLIS, July 27.—With the publication Monday by the Indianapolis Times of charges against Gov. Ed Jackson amounting to bribery in connection with the Stephenson exposé, both the Times and Indianapolis News have demanded that Jackson disprove the allegations or resign.

Questioned by a representative of the United Press at the Governor's conference at Mackinac Island, Mich., today, Jackson declined to be drawn into any comment.

The Times, in a copyrighted story Monday by Frank J. Prince, charged that Gov. Jackson, while he was Secretary of State in 1923, offered immunity from prosecution and $10,000 to Gov. Warren T. McCray, now in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, if in return McCray would let George V. Coffin, Indianapolis Republican boss, name the prosecutor of Marion County.

The Marion County jury failed to agree in McCray's case and he was then tried in the U. S. District Court and convicted of using the mails to defraud, April 30, 1924. He was sentenced to ten years at Atlanta, where he is now serving. He will be eligible for parole next month and efforts have been made for the past year to get executive clemency from President Coolidge.

Editorially, the Times Monday reviewed some of the Stephenson case of the last eight months and demanded that Gov. Jackson resign if he could not prove the charges false. Next day an editorial in the News commented on the Times allegations, and also demanded the Governor's resignation or vindication.

With the mysterious and elusive "Black Boxes" of D. C. Stephenson, former head of the Ku Klux Klan in Indiana and now serving a life sentence in the state prison for murder, in the hands of Marion County prosecutors, Boyd Gurley, editor of the Times, feels that the time of veiled threats, charges, bluff and counter charges is at an end and that the people of Indiana will at last know the facts concerning the alleged flagrant political corruption in state and city politics.

After Stephenson, who was said to have controlled the 1925 legislature and to have appointed many state officials, had smuggled a letter from the state prison nearly a year ago declaring he was going to expose his "friends" who had failed to obtain his release, Thomas H Adams, editor of the Vincennes Commercial, came forward with sensational charges of wholesale graft in Indiana political and official life. Two grand juries made lengthy investigations, questioning hundreds of witnesses and even Stephenson himself, but some mysterious pressure had been brought to bear on the former Klan dragon and he refused to implicate anyone. He had made reference previously, however, to a "black box," which was thought to contain letters and documents to prove his connection with officialdom, and a search was started for the proof.

Political associates and friends of Stephenson by the score were brought before the grand jury and quizzed regarding the "black box." None knew of its whereabouts. Time dragged on, the jury made a no-indictment report and search for the mysterious receptacle was practically abandoned.

How it finally was found (it turned out to be two black boxes, instead of one) is a unique story in itself. Had it not been for the fact that a little fly-by-night carnival company was playing in Westfield, a village between here and Noblesville, they might never have been found at all.

This is the story, according to Mr. Gurley, and it is the first time it has been published.

Because it was carnival night, the little restaurant in Westfield, which usually closed at 6 p. m., stayed open until quite late. After the performances four members of the troupe came in for a lunch, and began talking of the Stephenson case and the elusive "black box." The restaurant proprietor, an aged man, overhearing their conversation, suddenly broke in.

"I've just now thought of it. I've got some papers about Stephenson here that were left with me a year ago, and maybe I can find them."

The "papers" turned out to be four letters, three addressed to Stephenson and one to his former business partner, L. G. Julian, an Evansville coal dealer. On the envelope addressed to Julian was a scrawled note in Stephenson's handwriting directing Julian regarding the disposal of the black boxes.

One of the members of the carnival company present called Mr. Gurley on the telephone and related his discovery. It was the first time anyone had given a thought to Mr. Julian in connection with the Stephenson investigation, but he was at once summoned by the grand jury. After a long delay he finally appeared but denied any knowledge of the Stephenson evidence.

After Stephenson had turned over to the Times much of his correspondence and several cancelled checks about two weeks ago, and after the Times started publication of them to link Stephenson and Gov. Jackson, search for the boxes was renewed. They were found to be in the possession of Julian and he turned them over to Special Assistant Prosecutor Emsley W. Johnson last Sunday in a barn on a farm in Davies County. In addition to the documents in the black boxes, which are now being examined by the prosecutor and his assistants, approximately ten thousand letters and a number of photographs are in the hands of the officials.

The Marion County Grand Jury, third jury to investigate the charges of corruption in the state, started its work yesterday, and today quizzed State Representative Russell V. Duncan, Representative H. Walker DeHaven and Senator Fred M. Dickerman.

JAIL WON'T OPEN DOORS TO ADMIT DALE

Muncie Editor, Seeking Admittance to Make Parole Effective, Turned Away Because He Lacked Commitment Papers

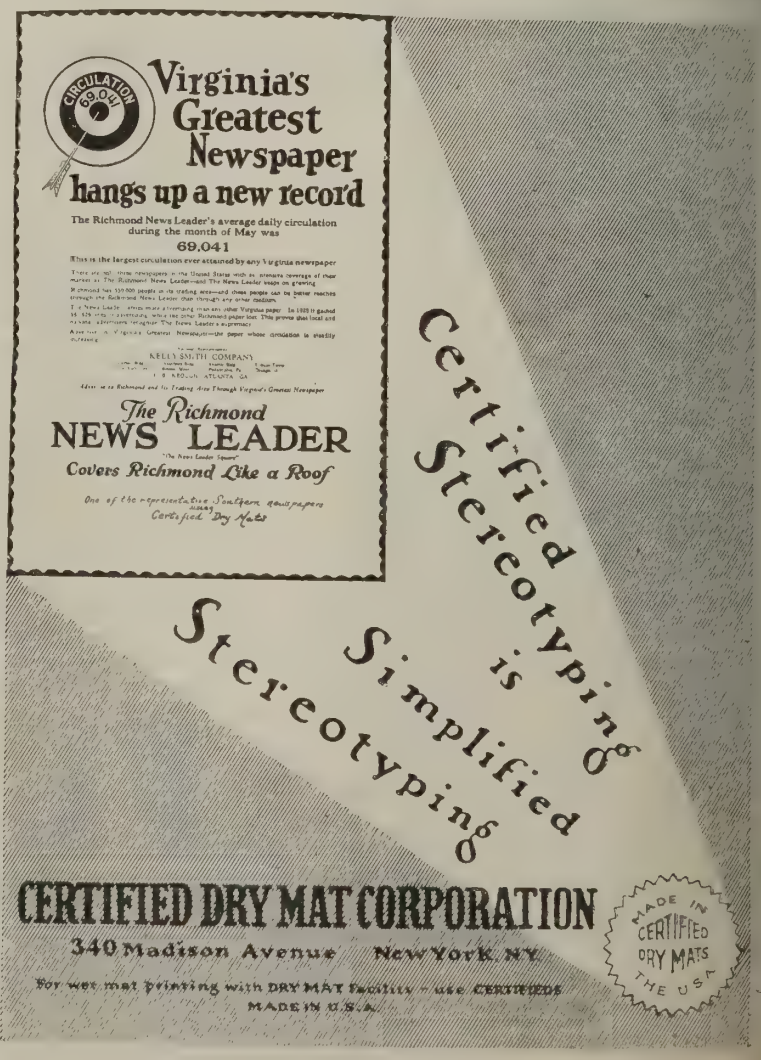
George R. Dale, editor of the Muncie (Ind.) Post-Democrat, after an unsuccesful attempt to gain admission to the state penal farm Tuesday, returned to Muncie Wednesday and arranged for his transfer to the Putnamville institution Saturday morning.

Dale, who has attempted for four years to avoid the 90-day sentence imposed by Judge Clarence W. Dearth for alleged contempt of court, was refused admittance to the state farm for lack of the necessary commitment papers. On his arrival at the farm, he will be granted a parole as recommended by the board of trustees.

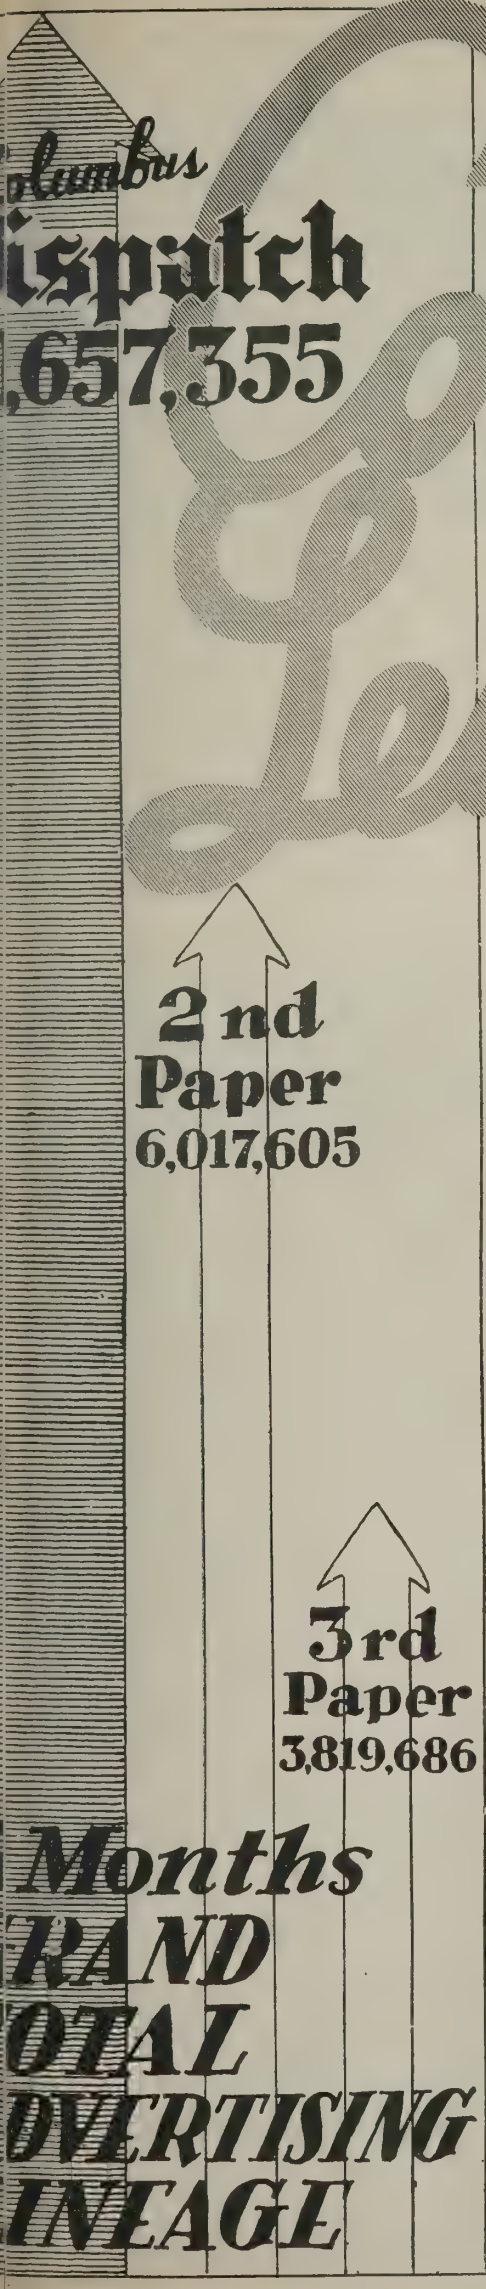
Dale said Wednesday his futile visit was due to a misunderstanding. He had been informed by Gov. Jackson's secretary, he said, that it would only be necessary to exhibit receipts for his $500 fine and the court costs.

Delaware county authorities put reverse English on their previous strenuous efforts to incarcerate Dale, when Dale went to the farm to submit himself to the officials there to receive a par granted recently, only to find that commitment papers were not there.

The papers are in the hands of sheriff at Muncie, who, it is understo was disgruntled when he heard t Dale was going to the farm unguarc by authorities, and refused to take send the necessary papers. So, desp Dale's own efforts to "crash the ga at the state farm, he is still at liber



His failure to obtain admission with the commitment papers revealed that fight between himself and the Delawa county authorities is still being wag It is understood the sheriff insisted t Dale go to the farm in his custo Dale, on advice of his attorney, we alone after he had paid all of his co costs, totaling more than $833.



Dale, sentenced by Judge Claren Dearth of the Delaware County Circu Court to a term of 90 days and a fi of $500 for contempt of court, appeal his case to both the Indiana Supren Court and to the United States Supren Court. He failed to obtain a reversa but the state farm trustees recentl granted a parole after his petition fc clemency, presented to Gov. Jackson, ha been forwarded to the board.

After failing to gain admittance t the state farm Dale returned to Indian apolis where, after a conference wit Miller he announced he would re turn to Muncie, submit to the sheri and accompany him back to the stat farm if that official served the paper on him. He said he really felt doubtfu as to whether he could gain admittanc to the farm without his commitment, bu decided it was worth trying.

Dale said the costs of appeal in hi case to the United States Supreme Cour at Washington, where it was finally dis missed when the court determined tha no federal question was involved, totale $270. The total costs and fine in al three courts reached $833.60.

Mr. Dale said he would be glad t have the matter all cleared up. "Bu I intend to go right ahead with my paper," he said, displaying a copy o the latest issues. "It makes my livin for me and I don't intend to give it up."

JAIL SENTENCES FOR THREE MAILERS WHO ATTACKED DALLAS NEWS MAN

Violence Marks Conflict Which Followed Walkout After Discharge of Employe—News, Offering Rewards, Cites Four Cases of Property Damage

FOUND guilty in Dallas County Criminal Court of aggravated assault upon Harry Eastus, employe of the Dallas News and Journal mailing department, Horace Scott, Charles D. Webb and Herbert Gerth were each given jail sentences of 30 days. They gave notice of appeal in event motion for new trial was refused. A. R. Frank, previously tried on a similar charge, was fined $100 and costs.

Testimony showed that the alleged assault grew out of a walkout of mailing room employes June 1, following discharge of Scott May 1 from the News and Journal mailing room.

Circumstances leading up to the walkout were testified to during the trial. Scott and other defense witnesses claimed that a lockout was in effect, while the state asserted that Scott was discharged and that the men walked out and were not locked out. The state also offered evidence to the effect that the News and Journal had no contract with the mailers' union when the walkout took place.

The Dallas News is paying its mailing room employes a higher wage than any oher newspaper in Texas, Jack Estes, circulation manager, testified, but the court ruled that the state could not go further into that aspect of the case.

Charging the jury regarding defendants' pleas of self-defense, the court stated that they had the right to seek out Eastus and try to persuade him to join the mailers' union.

Over the signature of A. H. Belo Corporation, publishers of the Dallas News and Journal, a prominently displayed advertisement in the News recently said:

"Five hundred dollars reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who on Saturday night last maliciously placed large quantities of tacks in front of the entrance to our building, with the intention of seriously interfering with the delivery by our trucks of bundles of the News dispatched by express and by United States mail.

"A $500 reward also will be given for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who from an adjoining building threw stones or rocks into the skylights of our building with malicious injury intent.

"A $500 reward will be given for information resulting in the arrest and conviction of person or persons who maliciously opened bundles and destroyed copies of the News on street corners in residential districts on Sunday and Monday mornings, June 26 and 27.

"A $500 reward will also be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone interfering in the future in any way with the delivery by mail or otherwise of any of our publications."

On another occasion a story in the News stated that 30 metal boxes established for the benefit of suburban and rural subscribers had been smashed and thrown into ditches or in weeds beside roadways.

JOURNALISM STUDENTS COMPLETE STUDY TRIP

Eight Members of U. of Missouri School Visit Southern Newspapers During 1,500 Mile Tour Down River

After traveling more than 1,500 miles on river packet boats, trains and stages in six states and visiting more than a half dozen newspaper offices eight members of the fifth annual field trip from the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri who completed the trip with Professor Frank L. Martin are back in Columbia, Mo.

Members of the party were guests of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and the St. Louis Star on Monday, June 27, the day of their sailing down the Mississippi river. As guests of the Post-Dispatch they were taken to the tele-photo laboratories of the Bell Telephone Company where they witnessed the transmission of a photograph from New York City.

Two busy days were spent at Paducah, Ky., as the guests of Edwin J. Paxton, owner of the Paducah Sun, and George H. Goodman, publisher of the Paducah News-Democrat. Both of these men had arranged a series of visits for the party to industrial plants and river terminals near Paducah. One morning the party reported to Mr. Paxton to take regular assignments on the Sun.

In Nashville, Tenn., the party was met at the depot by Prof. John Casey, who is teaching journalism at Peabody College for Teachers, and is on a leave of absence from the University of Missouri. Mr. Casey accompanied the group on their visit in Nashville.

By the courtesy of Colonel Luke Lea, publisher of the Nashville Tennesseean, Gov. Austin Peay, greeted the class in his office in the capital building on their first morning in Nashville.

Short stops were made at Columbia, Tenn., and at Florence, Ala., the ultimate goal of the trip. The time on the river boats from Shiloh National Park to St. Louis was spent in writing and sending the stories gathered on the trip to the newspapers each member of the party was assigned.

Members of the party besides Professor Martin were: John Whitaker, Fall City, Neb.; Raymond J. Miller, Chillicothe, Mo.; Tom Kiene, Topeka, Kan.; Merrill E. Compton, Seattle, Wash.; Gale Curtright, Columbia, Mo.; E. L. McFarland, Ames, Iowa; Isak le Grange, Paarl, South Africa, and James Keithley, Des Moines, Ia.

PORTLAND JOURNAL MARKS 25th YEAR

Tributes Paid to Late C. S. Jackson, Founder of Coast Daily at Banquet July 26—F. R. Mitchell Toastmaster

Paying glowing tribute to the late C. S. Jackson, its founder, the Portland (Ore.) Journal celebrated its 25th birthday July 26, at an employes' banquet held at the Mulnomah Hotel.

More than 400 Journal workers were witnesses to an impressive sight as veterans of the paper answered roll call and were presented with gold service pins by Mrs. Maria C. Jackson, "the little mother" of the Journal.

Philip L. Jackson, publisher and son of the Journal founder, introduced Felix R. Mitchell, toastmaster. Mitchell, who has been with the paper since its start, told of the early struggles the Journal had, with but a few hundred readers.

Special speakers who lauded C. S. Jackson and praised the independent spirit of the Journal were: I. L. Patterson, Governor of Oregon, and George L. Baker, Mayor of Portland.

PORTLAND OREGON JOURNAL VETERANS CELEBRATE NEWSPAPER'S TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

AS a preliminary to the Portland Oregon Journal's 25th anniversary party, a banquet given at the Multnomah Hotel in Portland Monday night, employes of the paper who had been with it ten years or more posed for pictures on the steps of the Central Library. Among them were three who had spent the entire quarter of a century in the Jackson employ, three other 25-year men being absent on vacations at the time the picture was taken.

A feature of the banquet was the awarding of service pins to employes. To the 25-year men pins with three diamon were given. Employes of the 20-ye class received two-diamond pins. On diamond pins went to the 15-year e ployes and gold pins to those who h spent a decade in the Oregon Jour employ.

OLDEST EDITOR IN ACTIVE SERVICE FINDS NEWSPAPER LIFE SWEET

By VIRGINIA ROEHL

THE oldest active newspaper editor in the country is believed to be Captain William Rule, who recently celebrated his 88th birthday. The present editor of the Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal entered the newspaper profession in 1860.

"Those were the days," declares Captain Rule, "when a newspaper was identified by its editor and in addition to being an editorial writer, which required loyalty to your political party whether it be right or wrong, one had to be an adept in handling a dueling pistol to iron out differences that frequently arose over their published opinions.

"At that time," continued this veteran editor, "it was more difficult to get news than it is now. There was no wiring the news across the country or across the sea. I sometimes think that is the reason many people feel that the world is a great deal worse than it really is; we know more about the bad things than we used to.

"In the ordinary daily newspaper you will find a column or a page about the crimes perpetrated throughout the country, whereas you get the good things people are doing in probably six inches. So we are really deceiving ourselves."

Captain Rule's remarkable health and spirit of youth has elicited comment for many years. It is a proverb in his hometown—"to be young as Captain Rule."

When questioned as to just what he attributes his lack of age, Captain Rule invariably replies:

'Hard work is the secret of staying young. If I were going to give the reason that I think has had as much to do with keeping me alive as anything, I would say it is because I have been at work all of my life. The first twenty years, I spent on the farm—a common 'clodhopper'—they then called it. Those twenty years in the open gave me a good start. Then I went into the city and started work on Brownlow's Knoxville Whig. This paper was soon suppressed for its continued fight against secession and I joined the Union army and spent three years sleeping out of doors, often without cover.

"Mustered out in April 1865, I was undecided what to do. I had made up my mind to be a lawyer when I received an offer as Knoxville correspondent for a Nashville paper. There was no wiring to do and for a few letters a week I received $10.00. After that the Cincinnati Gazette offered me a like position.

"Later when Mr. Brownlow reorganized the Whig as a weekly, he asked me to take charge of the news department and I became a stockholder."

In 1869 this paper went into Democratic hands and soon failed. Determined that Knoxville should have a Republican paper, Captain Rule began the publication of the Knoxville Chronicle which for a time was the only Republican daily published South of the Ohio River. This paper was later merged into the present Knoxville Journal of which Captain Rule has been editor for forty years.

Despite his age, Captain Rule holds a record for playing golf nor does he stop at less than eighteen holes. On his return several years ago from a visit with Adolph Ochs, at the latter's summer home, a call was arranged for him at the White House, where he was presented to President Harding, who guessed the Captain's age as sixty-five. On being told he was well up in his eighties, the late President lifted his glasses insisting that he could best judge a man's age by his eyes. Even then the President continued in his first assertion that his guest did not look over sixty-five. On being further advised that Captain Rule was a golf enthusiast Mr. Harding was anxious to arrange a game.

Mr. Ochs started his newspaper career under Captain Rule and the close friendship formed in those early years has continued until the present day.

At the age of 73, Captain Rule began the use of the typewriter. When a few years ago he wore out his first machine he asked for another. An attempt was made to find a similar typewriter to the one he had been using, but it was found impossible. A machine with a new keyboard was offered to him with apologies and the anticipation that it would be several days before he could turn out his copy in his usual form. In this they were mistaken however, for that night the editorials bore the same neat appearance as always, his age not preventing him from learning new methods that many a younger person would have excused himself for.

The "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" is possibly the veteran editor's favorite book. A well worn copy has been on his desk for 50 years and hardly a day passes that some of it is not read.

Captain Rule is a seven-day man. He is at his desk promptly at 8:30 with an intermission for lunch when he invariably eats doughnuts, custard and coffee at a "one arm lunch stand." He explains that if he went home for his meal, he would eat too much and it would affect his afternoon's work.

One of the most individual and distinctive characteristics of this well known editor and which no doubt account in part for his ageless years, is his continued faith in the good in humanity and his strict adherence to ideals through all the iconclastic eras through which he has lived.

When asked if he had the privilege of going back to his young manhood, he would again choose the newspaper profession he unhesitatingly replies that while he may have made more money in another business, he would make no change for he had found the work he had loved.

"I believe that a man is just as old as he feels. I have known a number of men who by the time they were fifty had accumulated a fortune and retired. Scarcely one of them has lived a year after he gave up his business.

"I am not ready yet to acknowledge myself a very old man. I don't want to wear out. I don't want to rust out and I am not going to become decrepit wi age if I can help it. I shall stay in th good old world as long as I can.

"The only thing I hope and pray f is that I shall be able to work until t very last moment of my life. If I kne that I was going to be called next wee I would get up tomorrow morning a I would go to that desk I have work on for so long and I would work at m typewriter until the Pale Rider came."

A new steel newspaper printing and folding unit of great producing capacity. This is in a wholly new class, in speed, in certainty of operation, in unbreakableness, in freedom from the excessive wear and tear now incident to the production of heavy editions, and in ease and economy of operation. It will be found to excel not in a few points only but in all of the attributes which make for high speed, fine printing, accurate folding, and the owner's unalloyed satisfaction.

A single illustration will serve to show the thoroughness with which in this machine we have dealt with the practical problems of the pressroom,

AN AUTHORITY SPEAKS

ALL who are interested in advertising should pay sharp attention to the articles by Mr. Hubbart, the first appearing in this number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. The author is perhaps the best qualified man in America to speak on department store advertising. For nearly a quarter of a century he has been employed as a member of the staff of the Dry Goods Economist as an analyst of department store advertising and his opinions are based on expert knowledge.

Mr. Hubbart sees in newspaper advertising, not some mystic force, but an easily controlled instrument which gives definite results according to the use that is made of it. It is to a department store what gasoline is to a motor—it will "pull" as it is fed. Basing his statements on wide experience, this writer, who is probably known to more retail advertisers than any man in America, finds that consistent, persistent, regular, institutional advertising of a department store delivers results which may be gauged with accurate precision. It is clear from Mr. Hubbart's articles that he has found newspaper advertising to be about the cheapest commodity that department stores may buy for the service rendered.

No circulation scheme beats a readable paper.

AFTER the fight was over, after the crowd had gone home, the moving pictures had to be sold. Ah, there was a question whether the referee had given a fair decision, and how excellent! the movie would decide the moot point. So the reporters again got busy in behalf of the "fight game." They witnessed a private view and in first-page spreads discussed with remarkable animation the marvels of the "slow-motion" disclosures. Some thought the Money Guy had fouled his contender; others didn't. We saw streamer headlines which announced both that Mr. Tex Rickard's movies proved that Dempsey had fouled Sharkey; and that "movie shows Sharkey was not fouled." (The public might pay its money and take its choice.) But the sweetest morsel in all the fight movie bally-hoo was an interview with the thrifty Mr. Rickard who was quoted as follows: "I have witnessed a private exhibition of the official fight movie and I am not decided in my mind whether the knock-out blow was a foul, but this I can say—it is a very remarkable picture." With this publicity, did the picture sell along Broadway? Oh, boy, did it?

Letting the Smart Boys around town flatter the editor into all of their selfish enterprises and out of all independent public policies offers quick and painless death to any popular paper.

DISUSE KILLS FREEDOM

SPEAKING before the North Carolina Press Association, the other day, Julian Harris, talented and courageous editor of Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer-Sun, made a plea for editorship that is sensitive to the call of the weak, is unmoved by threats of power and is aggressive against every form of injustice. "When a man takes up the duties of an editor he has accepted the responsibilities that go with it." he said, adding that unless he is willing to stand fearlessly for the good of his entire community he is "not an editor, but a hack-writer producing pot-boilers." Mr. Harris thought there was a possibility that the miraculous prosperity of this country might result in intolerable tyranny and warned his auditors to stand firm for original principles of democracy in newspaper work.

We were particularly struck by Mr. Harris' remarks on freedom of speech and liberty of conscience. These, he said, constitute real liberty and genuine freedom—the right to worship as we will without persecution and to speak freely without suppression. "Never yield a hair's breadth in your defense of freedom of speech," he urged. "Cherish it; Use it! No one can take freedom of speech from you but yourselves. If you remain silent today on vital matters and live questions, tomorrow when a crisis arises you will not know how to speak. By your failure to use your freedom you will have slain it; and when freedom of speech dies, liberty of conscience will succumb. And another civilization will have gone to its grave."

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.—I. Corinthians, XIII; 2.

A SWEETLY SOLEMN THOUGHT

THE need of the age is an international conference of the leaders of all ethical professions for the purpose of framing a code wherein the established principles of all may be merged or interchanged, thus to forever end the ceaseless warfare of profession on profession and exterminate the jealousies and hates of the rival guilds. This may sound like the babbling of the "devil in the cheese," but we think it is not entirely fantastic, and if the feat could be accomplished the press would surely be the chief beneficiary.

To make clear the need of such an idealistic congress we might cite a few horrible examples of what is commonly happening all along the line in professional circles. For instance, an ethical doctor, possessed of principles that are so lofty that he can scarcely keep them concealed under a very high hat, thinks nothing of asking a newspaper man to suppress a piece of news that he well knows should be published in the public interest. Yet, he would fall in a swoon if the newspaper man should ask him to suppress a physician's death or birth certificate or violate the confidence of a patient. He is jealous of his own professional ethics, but has no respect for those of the newspaper man. Perhaps he does not even know what they are.

An ethical lawyer might ask an engineer secretly to alter the specifications of a bridge and be indignant if the request were refused, but he would rise up and smite an engineer who would ask him to offer a bribe to a judge. But both the engineer and the lawyer would falter not an instant, if they are average people, in denouncing a newspaper man who would refuse to keep out of print legitimate news that would professionally disgrace them or embarrass a client.

Bloody inter-professional wars are in progress all about us, as for instance the battle of the American Medical Association upon all drugless healers and in the religious field the fight of the Fundamentalist against the Modernist. But we submit that the hatred of the associated medical doctor for the scorpion chiropractor or the murderous osteopath (unless he is an M.D. also) is mild as compared with the flings the medical association, or the chiropractor's league or the osteopath's union take at the newspaper press when it is disposed to believe that one or the other or all might have some right to lift up a fallen brother. Nothing satisfies any of these gentlemen but "the best of it." Each has the simon pure, intelligent, honest, efficient method of curing the sick, and there can be no compromise with any other philosophy or any other school of thought.

There are ministers of the Gospel, college professors, authors and artists and all manner of educated folk, including the new profession of "public relations councillors," who stand up ethically in their own fields of service but are inclined to prey upon each other and all, without exception, view with mingled alarm and disgust the journalism that prints the news of the day without fear when it is unfavorable to them.

The lack of appreciation of our journalistic standards by those who buy advertising in the press of the day is sometimes so great that we stand in wonder and awe and tremble for the future of our public service. The rank and file of modern civilization seems to be obsessed by the vain notion that all advertising carries with it editorial privileges that range from such mild suppressions of news as that our hired girl last night eloped with the iceman, which fact please keep out, to such infamous dictation as that "if you do not favor House Bill No. 71144 you sh never get another line of our advertising copy." Po little journalistic ethics, all scared and sweaty, h the time are in hiding in fear of their very hea blood!

Really, something ought to be done about it. T situation is becoming worse and worse. Even newspaper circles we sometimes hear of the most e traordinary lapses of ethical conscience. The way o of this welter of conflicting pretensions and idealis confusion, this cruel trampling of the other fello principles—where, pray, may it be found? We c only think of a great conference at which the "be minds" of universal professional life may come t gether, look each other in the pupils of the ey calmly and harmoniously sit shoulder to shoulder, a reach some sublimely unified code of principles th would forever and ever make the honor of one t honor of all. How blessed the prospect! How divi the benefits! If some generous soul will bring 'e together, EDITOR & PUBLISHER will undertake to p the rent of the hall.

When you can explain complicated situations in simple terms you are a good newspaper writer.

BUILDING NEW PLANTS

ALL over America newspaper publishers are erec ing and equipping plants to replace old offic rendered obsolete by increased production an also by new ideas as to what a newspaper offi should be. We are interested in the great variety c building conceptions in the publishing field, several c which appear in this issue. The problem that pub lishers juggle is whether they shall go in for some thing ornamental on Main Street that would harmon ize with the First National Bank and stand as monument, or be content with an efficient factory i a down-town back street, or perhaps rear, for a executive office, a handsome little structure, in th heart of town, with a factory plant down by th railroad. Another alternative is a big office build ing venture, the newspaper to be the favored tenan Apparently the weight of favor rests with the ide of a handsome, centrally located plant and building with the newspaper as the sole tenant or sharin space that eventual growth will demand for th publisher's use.

Words failing, press agents turn to "news pictures" and this tricky graft needs watching, some obvious advertising schemes having recently passed editors who know better.

RULE OR RUIN

ALABAMA'S legislature offers to the publishers of the United States a slight indication of just how far ignorance, bigotry and impudence can go when in the seat of power. The Birmingham News, one of the strongest papers in the South and the nation, has been making a brilliant fight against the un-American Ku Klux Klan. This crusade, as heretofore noted in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, has been based upon sound intelligence and fair argument. The K. K. K. element in control of the state sought to retaliate and, first in a facetious spirit, but latterly in dead earnest, proposed that a tax be imposed at the rate of 5 cents per column inch on newspaper advertising in cities of 15,000 or more population. The bill actually passed both houses. The assumption of its sponsors was that the burden would fall on the newspapers. It was a delightful little piece of spiteful vandalism, they thought.

Naturally anything so pernicious, so false in economic theory and unjust to the advertising merchants of Alabama cities, must fall of its own weight. That is precisely what happened. The bill was withdrawn and will probably not be heard from again.

Such a law in action would, of course, be ruinous to any newspaper that attempted to pay the tax. The burden would fall on advertisers, invariably the best merchants of every city, and if they attempted to pass the cost to the public the non-advertising or cheap-John merchant would be given the advantage. As a tax measure we have never heard of anything more grotesque or unjust. But that is the way the K. K. K. fights. Its theory of government is rule or ruin, which in the end means both.

USING PULP PRODUCT AS MOTOR FUEL

SULPHITE LYE ALCOHOL is mixed with gasoline as a motor fuel in Sweden, according to a report just made by the American Consul General at Stockholm, J. B. Osborne.

The full text of the report as made public by the Department of Commerce follows:

An example of the substitution of a Swedish product for an imported one is the use of a mixture of 50 per cent alcohol and 50 per cent gasoline as motor fuel. The admixture of alcohol undoubtedly causes an appreciable reduction in imports of gasoline.

At a large gasoline station opened in Stockholm in 1926, the "lattbentyl" mixture is supplied to motorists. In some respects the "lattbentyl" is considered superior to gasoline, and the sale of the mixture, therefore, may be expected gradually to increase, depending greatly, of course, on the supply of alcohol produced from sulphite lye at the Swedish wood pulp mills.

SOUTH DAKOTA EDITOR IN LIBEL SUIT

First in State for Many Years Starts When Retraction Is Refused by Mission Editor to Highway Officials

The first libel suit in South Dakota in many years is set for hearing at the current term of circuit court. Millard G. Scott, editor of the Mission Tribune, is defendant in two $5,000 suits brought by J. C. Salmon and Guy Bailey members of the Todd county highway board. Alleged libelous statements in the Tribune, printed as a communication from S. B. Weston, a resident of the district, form basis for the suit. The formal demand, required by law for a retraction, was refused by Scott.

In the current issue of his newspaper, Mr. Scott made this comment: "At the time the suit was started a number of newspapers asked for the complete story at regular press rates and some wanted pictures. We failed to supply this information or the photographs, but this will serve notice to brother newspaper men that the trial is on the docket and they may call and get their own stories. No charges will be made for admission or movie rights. After the trial all newspaper men may know just how they should conduct a newspaper without offending anyone, an art that few of us possess."

TWO LAWYERS ON "P. D."

Quinton R. Gravatt, assistant financial editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer was among several hundred new lawyers admitted to practice by the Ohio Supreme Court, July 23, after a rigid examination. The editorial staff now has two full fledged attorneys, the other being Joseph L. Zuker, for 20 years chief police reporter, who now looks after damage claims against his paper.

INTERNATIONAL BUYS CONTROL

International Paper Company has acquired working control of the New England Power Association by the purchase of the holdings of Hartford Electric Light Company, amounting to 20,000 common shares. International's holdings in the association now aggregate more than 340,000 of the 784,851 shares of common stock as of March 31.

MAY RUN FOR CONGRESS

Louis Ludlow and Ellis Searles Mentioned for Indiana Primaries

With political candidacies beginning to take form for the 1928 primary elections, names of two men, both newspaper men, have been thrown into the ring for the Democratic nomination for Congressman from the Seventh Indiana district.

The prospective candidates are Louis Ludlow, Washington newspaper correspondent and president of the National Press Club, and Ellis Searles, editor of the United Mine Workers' Journal. Friends of both men are paving the w for their candidacy, it is said, but statement of acceptance or refusal to r has been made by either man.

Mr. Ludlow formerly was an India apolis newspaper man and has been st tioned at Washington for many years a correspondent. He has attained pron nence recently as the author of seve works, the latest being "Senator Solom Spiffledink." He is the author of "Fr Cornfield to Press Gallery" and oth works.

Mr. Searles also is a former newspap man of Indianapolis, and forme worked on Marion (Ind.) papers.

Gentlemen:

I notice your page ad in the Editor and Publisher of June 18, which is very striking. I think the best point you can drive home is the ink rail and the pumps.

There are very few pressmen, let alone managers and owners of newspapers, who understand the inking system of the Hoe press. Most of the ink salesmen and pressmen come along and say, "Oh, you have one of those spray fountains," showing their ignorance of the Hoe ink pumps.

There are also very few pressmen who understand the advantages of the ink pumps is setting the color before you start. When the plate is put on the press, if there is anything on that page that needs correction, it can be done and the color set before you start, and nine times out of ten it is a pretty good job.

Then again, the absence of changing ducket rollers for different size paper, which is always present on a four-page wide machine, not saying anything of a contaminated ink supply as in the old style press. The Hoe ink pumps deliver the ink to the press as it comes from the maker, free from any paper dust, grit, or dirt.

I think you should follow this line of advertising and drive it home to both pressmen and publishers, as it is the greatest selling point in the operation of a Hoe press.

JHL/DW

Respectfully,

J. H. Long

Staton Expected to Leave Hospital Next Week—New York World Preparing "Short" Story Series—Swing Writes Series For Post Syndicate—Taximan Wouldn't Take Goldberg's Fare

HARRY STATON, manager of the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate, who has been critically ill at St. Francis Hospital, New York, was reported much improved this week. He has been up and about the hospital for short periods each day and will be able to go to his home next week, according to his physicians.

The New York World Syndicate is preparing a series of 12 original short stories which will be ready in September and titled "New York World Short Fiction." No story will run more than 3,000 words. They were selected from 10,000 manuscripts submitted in a contest conducted by the World.

A Paris taxi driver paid tribute to "Rube" Goldberg's popularity recently by driving the cartoonist and his friends about the city for three hours and then refusing to accept the fare, according to a story in the Paris Herald for July 19.

Fred Ferguson, general manager of NEA, Service, Inc., is spending his vacation at his home, Huntington, Long Island.

F. J. Carmody, of the editorial department, Ullman Feature Service is spending a vacation in the mountains of Pennsylvania. W. E. Schaaff, business manager of the organization, has returned from a vacation motor trip.

Beatrice Fairfax of International Feature Service, Inc., is spending two weeks at Casco Bay, Maine. Recently she lent her assistance to the Cosmopolitan Productions Company which is making a film based on lovelorn letters.

"Feathered Facts and Fancies" is a new three times a week strip being prepared by NEA Service, Inc. It concerns bird life and is being done by William Ferguson, Kansas artist and ornithologist.

Marceline D'Alroy, author of "You Said It, Marceline," has just sailed for Paris. She averages six trips a year to the French capital.

"Whose Brainy Now?" is a new feature prepared by King Features Syndicate. It is a question-and-answer strip in pictorial form. It is illustrated by Paul Pim.

"Art and Needle" by Nita Grey, is a new offering by the International Syndicate, Baltimore.

"Ritzy Rosey" is a new feature of the King Features Syndicate. Faith Burrows of the News League of Ohio, Dayton, is the creator of this daily fashion feature.

The New York Evening Post Syndicate has announced a series of six articles "Will England Have a Class War" by Raymond Swing, the Post's London correspondent.

John T. Flynn, Editorial Director of the U. P. C. News Service, Inc., sailed recently on the Carmania with his family for a two months' visit to London, Paris and other continental cities.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING

Cincinnati Newspapers Unite to Eliminate Abuses in "Home Work" Copy—Contest Stimulates Work of Ad-Takers

CINCINNATI newspapers will unite in a policy of eliminating abuses in classified advertising, especially as it relates to home work. A meeting of classified managers of the daily papers was held last week at which a general advertising program was agreed upon with regard to "stuffed flats"; to alcohol and massage parlors and employment agencies.

Placing of advertising in its proper classification was also discussed. The classified managers were agreed that the real estate advertisers were the worst abusers of classification rules. The discussion was of a general nature and no definite plans were made but it paved the way to a general understanding which it is hoped will prove beneficial for the protection of daily newspaper readers in the Cincinnati territory.

Classified managers who attended the conference were W. H. Hershey, Enquirer; Eugene A. Sigafoose, Times-Star; A. H. Todd, Commercial Tribune and Burley Laurimore, Post.

Competition is running high between the classified departments of the papers, but despite this the formulation of a general policy with respect to classifications has been agreed upon and will be adhered to by all of the newspapers. No organization has been formed but the meetings are of an informal nature largely for discussion.

The Middletown (N. Y.) Daily Herald is using the "Ask me Another" idea to attract attention to its classified page. In single column measure on page one under the heading, "It Was in the Paper," is a series of questions. After the final question is "Answers on Classified Page."

Remarkable results in ad-taking are being obtained through the friendly competition started in the classified department of the Cincinnati Enquirer. For several weeks this competition has been in progress and each week the ad-takers have done better than the week previous.

Last week the ad-takers averaged about $30 a day each in a telephone ad-taking contest. The contest was for seven day orders.

George W. Scott, 34, was sent to the workhouse for 10 days in New York this week on a charge of disorderly conduct after his arrest had been caused by a man answering a New York World help wanted advertisement.

Scott advertised for electricians and offered an applicant a job on the condition the man pay a $50 fee for joining the union. The latter left to get the money, but before returning talked with a friend who told him he had been swindled out of $50 on a similar proposition in 1923. The friend accompanied the applicant on his return to Scott, recognized him, called a policeman and had him arrested. Since no money had changed hands the charge was made disorderly conduct.

The World gave the story a prominent position.

A READER FORGOT HIS GLASSES

On June 7th, The New York Times changed its dress to 7 Point Intertype Ideal News face. When The Times decided to increase the size of its news face, the IDEAL was again chosen.

Excerpts shown below, are taken from one of literally thousands of letters received by The Times from its readers expressing gratification at the improved legibility of its news columns.

> Thinking my eyes were getting weak, I have been wearing glasses for reading purposes.

> However, this morning as usual I read The Times without thinking of my glasses. Only after I laid the paper down, did I realize I had not worn my glasses.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Jane Eads Clerked in Store While Waiting Newspaper Job—Dorothy Digman Says Electrical Advertisers Must Make Percolators as Interesting as Paris Hats

MISS JANE EADS of the Chicago Herald and Examiner is nothing if not versatile. And her versatility stood her in good stead when she was attempting to break into newspaper work in Chicago, for she found the going hard for a while. So hard, in fact, that she worked as a clerk at Marshall Field & Co., was a commercial artist for a while, sold untrimmed millinery, and did settlement and playground work while waiting for her opportunity to do what she wanted most to do.

Miss Eads who recently wrote a series of stories on cabarets and roadhouses for the Herald and Examiner, to get the material for which she became a roadhouse visitor for a time, was born in Chicago but was reared in Quincy, Ill. There she started in reading proof for the Whig-Journal. She saved enough money to attend the University of Illinois for one semester, after which she returned to Quincy and edited a children's department for the Whig-Journal.

Before coming to the Herald and Examiner, Miss Eads worked for the Howard News, a north shore community newspaper, and for the Evanston (Ill.) News-Index as a reporter. Before Christmas, in 1925, she went to work for the Herald and Examiner as north shore reporter, working in the far north communities of Chicago. A year ago she was put on straight news reporting, and has been at it ever since.

Miss Eads' tastes are very decided ones in the matter of news. She prefers murders or wrecks to interviews with movie stars or social functions.

On July 1, when the Chicago to San Francisco passenger air service was inaugurated, Miss Eads was the first to make the trip, writing of her experiences for the Herald and Examiner.

Miss Dorothy Digman of the McJunkin Advertising Company, Chicago, gave men advertising writers a few tips on copy preparation in a talk, "Percolators vs. Paris Hats," made before the Public Utilities departmental of the International Advertising Association at the recent Denver convention.

"Department store advertising," she said, "is successful advertising. It may surprise some of you to know that out of the thirty-six billion dollars worth of retail business done in this country last year—including groceries, shoes, hardware—everything, exactly one third of that business was done by department stores, and yet the average department store spends only 3.2 per cent of its income for advertising.

"Women don't miss anything in department store advertising. Never be afraid of that! They digest it like you do the baseball scores!

"In all your newspaper advertising, percolators are in serious and constant competition with Paris hats and other feminine delights advertised by the department stores. It is, of course, more thrilling to choose a new hat than to buy a coffee pot! It is up to us, as advertising people to put a little of the department store lure into our appliance copy."

Mrs. Gertrude Schwittay, formerly publisher of the Marinette (Wis.) Weekly Searchlight, has become county and agricultural editor of the Marinette Daily Eagle-Star. Until recently she was superintendent of the Marinette county schools.

Thomas Dean, an author who has long lived incognito, reads in the newspapers the confession of a man claiming to have murdered him. According to the news account his corpse, wearing his watch, has been found in "the room under the stairs" in his old family home.

Dean, in the course of some clever detective work undertaken to probe the motive behind the confession, falls in love with a girl who is trapped with him in a chamber which their would-be murderers start to fill with lethal gas, supplied by a clever mechanism.

The unravelling of the plot and the winning of the girl's love constitute

Ionic No. 5 Is More Readable Because It Is Larger

MANY factors contribute to the legibility of Ionic No. 5; th... creased weight, the even color, the stronger serifs, the roundne... the letters, the better distribution of the white space aroun... letters, the fact that it will not break down in stereotyping, ... more important than any of these is the fact that it is act... larger, point size for point size, than any other newspaper ... Just how much larger is gr... cally shown in the illustrati... the top in which 7 point Io... superimposed on 7 point N...

And this great gain in siz... legibility is achieved withou... in word count. If Ionic w... type of ordinary design, th... crease in size would not ... any particular value becaus... space that is saved would ... to be put between the lines ... Ionic is different. It doesn't ... much white either betwee... ters or between lines. The le... are closely fitted together ... still hold their contour. Ionic N... made in four sizes, 5½, 6½ ... and 7 point, in combination ... Bold Face No. 2 or Italic ... Small Caps.

Why Ionic No. 5 Requires Less Leading Than Ordinary Types

In ordinary types the vertical strokes are emphasized. These pronounced vertical strokes have a tendency to interrupt the normal horizontal motion of the eye. It is therefore necessary to put more white space between the lines so that the eye can follow them back and forth across the column.

Ionic is more rounded, the strokes are of even weight, and the letters are more closely tied together so that each line is a continuous band of color across the page. It is easier for the eye to follow the lines and consequently they can be put a little closer together without loss of legibility.

The South's Greatest Industrial Center!

PICTURE, if you will, a city embodying 52 square miles of territory. Now let your imaginative vision sweep a bit further—and there comes into view over 750 factories, furnaces, mills and various kinds of industries. That—is industrial Birmingham.

Within this city there are 247,548 people. Their bank resources total $110,546,888. They have $94,304,928 on deposit. During 1926 their bank clearings amounted to $1,447,643,643. The 60% assessed value of their property is $193,004,518. In 1926 their building permits totaled $22,263,116. They own over 39,000 automobiles. They have 49,000 children in school.

It takes 36,000 telephones to serve this busy, thriving city. Over 48,000 water connections indicate the number of homes. This is a busy city and many of the industries run night and day — and produced during 1926—1,600,000 tons of steel; 2,881,000 tons of iron; 20,400,000 tons of coal and 4,700,000 tons of coke.

Nine trunk railway lines give adequate receiving and shipping facilities in every direction. The street railways carried 70,775,375 passengers in 1926. And remember if you please—that the land upon which this expansive and tremendously busy city is now situated, was virgin soil and wooded land just 56 years ago.

Today Birmingham is the South's greatest industrial city—and is the largest city for its age in the world. It is also known as one of the most responsive markets in the United States.

COAL CAMPAIGN NEAR START

Anthracite Men to Use Newspapers to Regain Lost Markets

Coal operators in the Pennsylvania anthracite field have decided on an advertising campaign that will extend to Eastern, Mid-Western and New England fields. The campaign has been launched with the idea of getting back the coal market lost by the operators during the last strike and prior to that suspension. It is understood the first advertisements are to be placed in newspapers within a few days. For several weeks the newspapers of the coal field have been telling the operators good salesmanship would help regain the markets and that advertising would help. One report has it that the mine owners intend to spend at least a million dollars in advertising and promotion work but this report can not be confirmed at local offices of the operators.

ADVICE ON 'PHONE MANNERS

Useless Questions and Intervention of Subordinates Criticized by Lindner

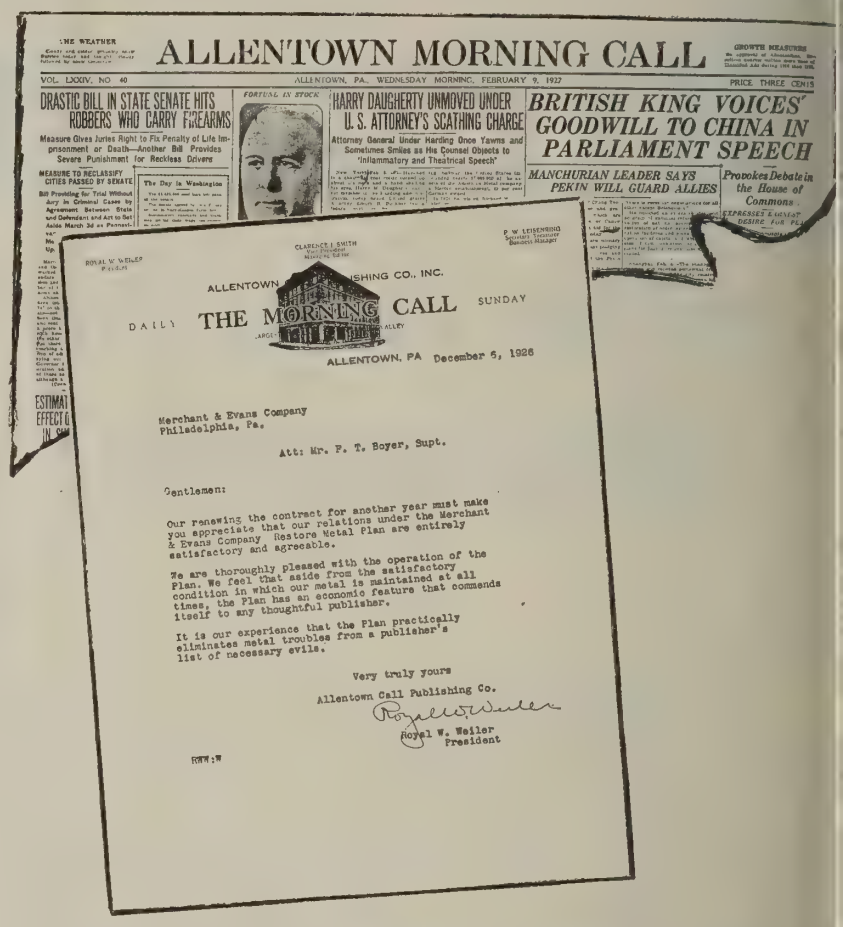
Telephone manners are the subject of a memorandum sent this week to employes of the New York American, by C. R. Lindner who recently took charge of that paper after a successful career as general manager of the Detroit Times, also a Hearst newspaper. His counsel can bear wide application beyond the New York American organization, as users of the telephone know, and it is reproduced in full:

"Most of the American organization have been consciously building good-will among people caling by telephone to transact busines with us.

"But some still take themselves pretty seriously.

"Their stenographers and office boys catechize callers—asking names, business, intentions—everything but complexion and politics.

"I have exeperienced this myself when calling some members of the organization —and numerous cases are cited by others who are criticizing the now conspicuous individuals.



"We have it in our power to create kindly feeling toward the American and expedite business by every telephone contact.

"I point to the experience of a big trust company which considers it good business for each of its 56 officers to answer his telephone himself without the intercession of questioning subordinates.

"This slight effort seems not too much to ask in behalf of the American—not to mention what outsiders think of individuals who consider that they have to be protected from a cruel public."

Merchant & Evans Company
Philadelphia, Pa.

Att: Mr. P. T. Boyer, Supt.

Gentlemen:

Our renewing the contract for another year must make you appreciate that our relations under the Merchant & Evans Company Restore Metal Plan are entirely satisfactory and agreeable.

We are thoroughly pleased with the operation of the Plan. We feel that aside from the satisfactory condition in which our metal is maintained at all times, the Plan has an economic feature that commends itself to any thoughtful publisher.

It is our experience that the Plan practically eliminates metal troubles from a publisher's list of necessary evils.

Very truly yours

AGAIN TALK OF TABLOID

Goldman Raising Capital for St. Louis Daily News

Revival of plans for a tabloid picture paper for St. Louis are announced by Joseph Goldman, promoter of the St. Louis Daily News which is scheduled to appear by Jan. 1, 1928. With a certain prominent St. Louis Lawyer as his chief backer, according to Mr. Goldman, $26,000 has been raised within the past few weeks. The company is incorporated for $300,000. Mr. Goldman has been working on the idea of a St. Louis tabloid daily for more than two years.

JOSEPH GOLDMAN

Mr. Goldman at present is advertising manager and associate editor of the St. Louis Jewish Daily Record. Part of his task is the editing of an English page. He was publisher of the Jefferson City (Mo.) Democrat-Tribune for 20 years and during most of that time it was the official organ of the state legislature. He served in official capacities of the state under three different Missouri governors and spent his early years as political writer on the St. Louis Star.

BOARD MAY BAR SIGNS FROM TEXAS ROADS

Agreement Between State and Merchants of Hillsboro Leaves Open Question of Jurisdiction Over Ads on Private Property

The Texas highway commission has the right to clear state highways of advertising, but has no jurisdiction over private property, according to an agreement reached at Hillsboro between counsel for the state and attorneys for the Hillsboro Retail Merchants' Association. The agreement was announced at a hearing on a temporary injunction under which the association had restrained the commission from tearing down signs on the highways. Plaintiff's counsel reported to Judge W. L. Wray that the agreement had been reached and the court dismissed the case at plaintiff's cost.

After exceptions to the merchants' association petition had been argued, the court stated that he would dissolve the temporary injunction in so far as it related to state highways. He indicated, however, that he would later hear arguments on his authority to issue a restraining order under the facts of this case restraining the defendants from removing signs on lands other than the state highways.

Assistant Attorney General P. D. Page assured plaintiffs that all persons, when requested, would be shown the limits of highway advertising, and that opportunity to present claims will be made in event of dispute. The state insisted the commission has complete control over state highways and rights of way.

INDIANAPOLIS—The 13th City in Retail Sales

Cultivate Markets that are Able to Buy!

MONTH after month, national statistical organizations have been pointing out Indianapolis—and Indiana in general—as excellent territories for sales activities.

This fact merely emphasizes the basic stability of this rich market, with its favorable geographical characteristics—its thorough diversification in industry and in agriculture—its intelligent and progressive population, over 92% native born white. Such elements as these preclude business depressions

The Indianapolis Radius, comprising the two-thirds of Indiana directly influenced by Indianapolis, is an outstanding market for buying power. And the INDIANAPOLIS NEWS, Indiana's dominant daily newspaper, is equally exceptional for the selling power it gives to its advertisers.

EXCHANGE EDITOR'S JOB UNDER-VALUED IN PRESENT DAY JOURNALISM

Properly Conducted It Has Supplementary Function Which News and Feature Services Cannot Supplant Says Writer

By K. H. LANSING

IT is recounted that a caller at a metropolitan newspaper plant, noting the exchange editor busily clipping from a pile of papers on his desk said to his guide: "How easy that job looks! I don't suppose he gets much, just for clipping those papers, does he? Why, anybody could do that."

The guide patiently replied: "His work is not as easy as it appears to be; he is one of the highest paid men on the staff and very few men, if any, could, without long preparation, take his place and give satisfaction." Whereat the caller wondered.

True, it is an old story. The incident is supposed to have happened so long ago and there have been so many changes and adjustments in staff methods since then, that the guide's remark, "he is one of the highest paid men on the staff," when referring to the exchange editor, would provoke a smile from most of the present holders of this position.

It seems the post has suffered somewhat of a decline in widespread usefulness and prestige, if such it may be called especially in cities of the second and third class, where once its development was, perhaps, at its peak. There are two reasons therefor; first, because of the increase in the number and efficiency of press associations and feature services and, second, a sort of corollary of the first, because of the apparent lack of appreciation on the part of some managing editors of how great are the position' potentialities as a supplementary factor in the news and features of the day and even to the editorial and society pages.

The function of the exchange desk is a supplementary one and still can, nay, should be, of distinct usefulness and importance if operating properly. To illustrate:

In a Midwestern city whose population at the time was approximately 200,000, three afternoon newspapers were contesting for public favor, circulation and advertising. One paper was heavily financed and had all—or nearly all—the advantages that plenty of the sinews of war could give. Its advertising and circulation departments were particularly well organized and fully manned, real talent in that direction having been obtained.

The second paper in point of circulation and advertising, through the personality of its managing editor and his executive gift for surrounding himself with capable and ambitious department heads and reporters was able to make it extremely interesting for the first paper, as its readers for the most part were the thinking element who liked well-told news stories, attractive makeup and clever departments.

The third paper, with a makeup then considered "yellow," had a rather narrow class appeal, but made many friends because of its unrelenting attitude toward frauds and fakers in public life and in the advertising columns. It had some really clever editors and reporters, but its finances were never of the strongest and its ownership was divided among a large number of small stockholders. Its editor-in-chief was somewhat of a character and was widely known and esteemed.

Each had a different system for the conducting of its departments on the editorial side. The wealthy paper was constantly trying to improve its editorial and news staffs, apparently on the principle that frequent turnover ought to bring this about, at length. It was lavish in the number of men and women assigned to the various departments. But, somehow, it was easily and continuously outdistanced by the second paper in point of reader-interest and it admitted this in two ways; First, by frequently making offers to outstanding men to join its forces at a larger salary than they were receiving on the second paper and, second, by the large turnover of the personnel it was able to obtain. The second paper selected its men with care and made every effort to retain them. Few deserted. In no way was the difference in reader-interest shown more conclusively than in the product of the exchange desk. The third paper had a policy toward its exchange desk that is often noted in the case of other papers at the present time.

In the following descriptions of exchange desk regime, let the reader decide whose policy was the best. First let us review that of the first, or wealthy paper. The exchange editor and his assistant arrived each morning at their double-header desk with the earliest of the incoming employes. While there were plenty of office and copy boys to do the job, it was the first duty of the editors to open the mailbags containing the exchanges and assort the papers for clipping, thus using up from fifteen to twenty minutes of their working day. The chief function of the exchange desk was to provide "time copy," "pad," or "grapevine" as it is variously known, for the printers. The paper had an unusually heavy exchange list, including even papers from China and India, printed, of course, in English. The exchange editors were considered by the authorities to have performed their duty well if they kept a sufficient number of jumps in their copy ahead of the printers.

They had a system of turning out their grind; so many columns of foreign stuff; so many columns of State stuff not already printed in their own paper, though it made no difference if it had been printed by any or all the other local papers, and so many columns of two and three-line "fillers," consisting of almost anything and enough so-called humor and odd bits to fill a promiscuous editorial-page column. The degree of dullness was regulated by the amount of time the editors had after their search through many papers, for selection considered appropriate. But the paramount point was—satisfy the printers' demand for "time copy."

The system used by the exchange desk on the second paper—a one-man desk, at that—is, according to the views of the writer, the proper one, even today, despite the more or less offsetting effect of the advance in efficiency and thoroughness of the news and feature services. As in the case of the first paper, the editor was at his desk as soon as the office was open. A boy opened the mailbags and sorted the papers according to a typed list, placing them in the proper order and position upon the editor's desk. The editor, who had been instructed to read his own paper daily as carefully, if not more carefully than reporters are supposed to do, knew, as he read the exchanges, what had been used by his paper; but more than that from just as careful perusal of all the other local papers, both morning and evening, just what they had printed.

The editor's next duty was to take the listed leading journals of half a dozen or so large cities, cut off the back margin of each, thus releasing for easy handling all the pages of each paper, and sort out the editorial sport and society pages, sending them by boy to each department-head mentioned, first carefully noting whether there was anything of importance on the reverse side which could be used in other work. Ordinarily, the arrangement of the pages is such that there is little of special interest to the exchange editor on the reverse side of these pages. He was provided with a typewriter, so that in case of an item appearing there of which he could make use, he could copy it, or condense the pithy part of it.

Then began his real search through a fairly large list of exchanges—not for "pad," or "time copy" for the printers, at first, although that came later; but for news of the day and features, printed in the exchanges and not published in his own paper; interesting angles and points used by these out-of-town journals bearing on matter either of local or outside interest, but not covered in this way by his own publication. There would usually be plenty of good material adding to what had gone before in the local press and fulfilling the desire of the managing and news editors, namely, to "turn over every morsel of the news until every last bit of juice had been extracted from it." Had a great politician, in another city died? Usually, somewhere in one of the papers published in that locality would be an interesting angle, perhaps coming strongly home to local persons, missed by the press service, or at least not considered worth sending. Had there been a big financial scandal outside the town? As likely as not, under a three-em dash somewhere in the paper, or possibly hidden beneath a small subhead, would be some reference of absorbing interest in the exchange editor's bailiwick; and it would be his duty to find and use it, or at least offer it to the news editor. It was the finding of points such as these, involving politicians, scandals, crimes and just ordinary good "yarns" and even society items of relative importance that caused dismay to the first and wealthiest paper through many a first-page "scoop," often accompanied by a cut and box.

It was also the duty of the exchange editor to conduct a "colyum" for the editorial page—not original, although original stuff was invited and often used—selecting with the utmost care bits of real humor, pathos, quaint verse, a daily quotation and perhaps even a line or two from the Bible, a wise maxim of Confucius, or a small "filler" from the K

After the arduous hunt throughou day for supplementary matter fo news, strange features not carrie press associations or special services matter for the "colyum," the exch editor was free to get out a certain tity of "pad" for the hungry pri

The third paper's exchange desk p if such it may be called was, upo foreman of the composing room find gap to fill, for the exchange edit dash over to a table piled heterogene with exchanges from any source hastily clip out something, about th quired length, usually covering enthralling and valuable subject as "T ster Green Lizard Discovered Guadalajara," palpably a fake and as such, to amuse, and fill the gap fo foreman. The exchange desk w taken seriously. It was a "swing anyway combined with one or two o and only meant a minute's desp scissoring among papers, no matter old.

lenty of opportunities for reminis- es are afforded daily to Mr. Burch ugh his column, "Those Were The s." From his recollection, refreshed reading the files, he relates the start- events of 10, 25, and 50 years ago. addition, an interesting feature of his mn is a regular department devoted to "Songs of Long Ago" in which are published the text of popular ballads of the past and usually some historical data about them.

"The Mirror of Public Opinion" on the editorial page of the Post-Dispatch is edited by Mr. Kelsoe. However, a great deal of his time is now devoted to a reference book of St. Louis newspaper workers, particularly those outstanding newspaper men of his more active days in journalism.

Mr. Kelsoe was city editor of the old St. Louis Republican for six years and served at various times as reporter, editorial writer, or editor on other local newspapers. He recalls working as a reporter on the old Morning Times when Joseph Pulitzer, Sr., was a special writer on the staff in 1875 and remembers writing editorials on the Globe-Democrat under the guidance of J. B. McCullagh back in 1895. He was manager of the Press Bureau for the St. Louis World's Fair which was established in 1901 and maintained until 1905, a year after the exposition.

Mr. Burch will be 70 years old on Nov. 4. He plays 9 holes of golf every morning before coming to work and there is probably nothing of which he is more proud than his score of 39 for the municipal course in Forest Park.

Mr. Kelsoe was 76 years old last Feb. 1. His interests are literary, based on a broad education that included studies at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, as well as the A. B. and A. M. degrees from McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill. He helped to organize the St. Louis Ethical Society and the Theosophical Society. Few St. Louisans who use the "owl car" service of the United Railways are aware that Mr. Kelsoe, through constant publicity in the old Republican, caused an ordinance to be passed which requires all night street car service.

Norfolk Real Estate Man Proposes That Governors Use It for Advertising Southern States

That a meeting of governors of Southern states be called to consider the raising of a $75,000,000 fund for advertising the New South has been suggested to Harry Flood Byrd, of Virginia, by Bruce S. Shafer, Norfolk real estate man, who has been endeavoring, with some success, to create more interest in the plan for more than a year.

In suggesting that Gov. Byrd call the conference, Mr. Shafer pointed out that Virginia's executive was the logical leader for the movement, inasmuch as the Old Dominion had led by example in setting aside a $50,000 fund for exploitation of its resources and because Governor Byrd's newspaper experience (he is publisher of two Virginia newspapers—the Harrisonburg News-Record and the Winchester Star) would permit him to speak with some authority on an advertising matter.

In his letter to Gov. Byrd, Mr. Shafer suggested that each railroad operating in Southern territory be invited to send a representative to the conference of governors.

The essence of Mr. Shafer's plan is that each state and city in the South make an appropriation of $1 per capita annually during a five-year period.

RISE OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM SEEN BY NEW YORK EDITOR IN 1875

David G. Croly of N. Y. Graphic Said "News Is What Readers Want Now—News Pictorial Is What They Will Want" —Found Horror Pictures Unwanted

By SOLON R. BARBER

ABOUT fifty-two years ago, Charles F. Wingate brought to the attention of a receptive public the views on illustrated journalism of David G. Croly of the New York Daily Graphic. Croly's ideas, advanced for their time, were set in type at least eight years before Joseph Pulitzer bought the New York World and 21 years before William Randolph Hearst came East to try out his theories of journalism upon a New York public shocked and pleased in turn. But they are still sufficiently naive and profound to interest modern readers, although the chances are that almost any "tabloid" editor of today has forgotten more about the power of pictures than this pioneer ever knew. The opinions of a practicing newspaper man who could say, in 1875: "I think the time is coming when every large city in the world will have its daily illustrated paper devoted to the pictorial reporting of the current events of the day," obviously have more significance than is attached to the merely quaint and historically novel. Especially since it looks as though Croly's prophecy is in a fair way to come true.

The journalism of Croly's day was psycho-analyzing itself. It was self-conscious, subjective, inward-looking. Editors, conscious of high responsibilities to their reading public, were filled with high ideals—at least in their printed utterances.

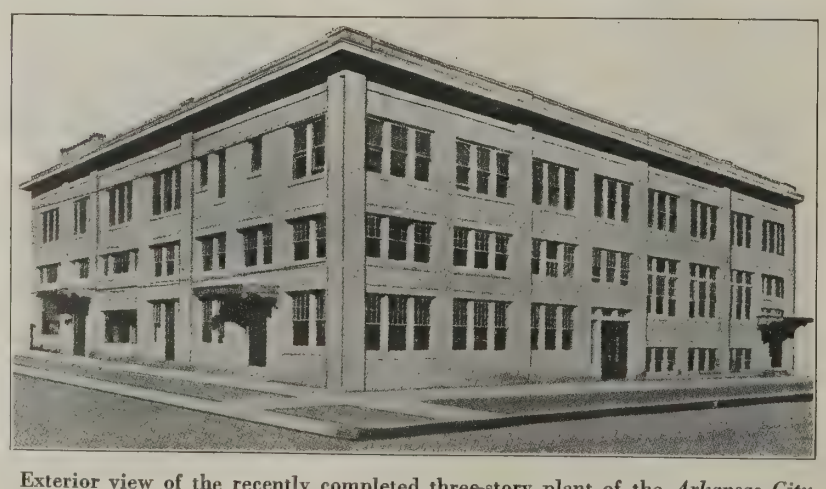
Dana of the Sun was debating whether or not editors should be excluded from public office, roundly berating the Brooklyn Union because that journal did not "agree with us that George Wilke's services as a patriotic writer during the war and since might have been properly acknowledged by a prominent diplomatic appointment at the hands of President Grant." Godkin of The Nation was bitterly declaring that "journalism is probably, to anybody who needs positive or palpable results, day by day, to keep his ardor alive, the most discouraging of professions; nothing but either a strong faith or a great deal of self confidence is sufficient to satisfy a man that he is really doing more than increasing his list of subscribers." Whitelaw Reid of the New York Tribune had just offered Theodore Tilton $10,000 for the single share of stock Tilton owned in the Tribune when that gentleman (Tilton) had confessed that he did not "cherish such regard as formerly" for the paper "because it doesn't represent anything." The offer was not accepted.

James Gordon Bennett, Jr., New York Herald, aroused to the need for stricter codes of ethics for newspaper editors, was saying: "Indeed, we are not sure but it would be a good thing for the proprietors of all leading papers to unite in a league to refuse employment to persons accused, upon well established grounds, of bribery and other serious malpractices while in the discharge of confidential and responsible duties in newspaper establishments. It is true that newspaper writers in this day are exposed to more temptations than ever befell to the lot of the earlier knights of the quill." Manton Marble, editor of the World, was claiming for the journalist "simply this: 1. That he is a merchant of news. He buys it everywhere —he sells it in any market not stocked with his commodity . . . 2. That the journalist has it in trust and stewardship to be the organ and mould of public opinion, to express and guide it, and to seek, through all conflicting private interests, solely the public general good."

"The Nestor of the American press," William Cullen Bryant of the New York Evening Post was writing that "the aim of a public journal" is to give "such of the news of the day as is of public interest . . . It should be given, of course, with careful attention as to its accuracy, and an equal careful avoidance of indecent details, and attacks upon private character, and intrusions into private life. Exaggerations for the sake of attracting attention, are a kind of petty lying, and degrade the character of the journal in which they appear."

But Croly of the Daily Graphic, looking into the future, was seeing pictures. The illustrated newspaper "undoubtedly has a great future before it," he stated with truth. "The time, I think, is coming when every large city in the world will have its daily illustrated paper devoted to the pictorial reporting (if I may so phrase it) of all the current events of the day."

One has only to look to the Audit Bureau of Circulations to see the truth in that forward-looking statement. New York's Graphic, 141,597 readers; New York Daily News, with 998,617 daily and 1,224,063 Sunday readers; New York Mirror, with 310,333; and the "tabloids" in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Boston and other cites with their hundreds of thousands of readers, as well as the ever increasing tendency of the Hearst and other papers to depend upon pictures to obtain reader interest, are all signs of the picture paper times and support for Croly's prophecy.



"News is what newspaper readers want now; 'news pictorial' is what they will want then," said Croly.. "The great crimes, the terrific accidents, the society-shaking scandals must be illustrated. As these appeal to the emotions rather than to the judgment, their pictorial illustration will be most welcome to the public; and the picture paper of the future will occupy the field that the novel and the story paper now does. Lamartine once said that the newspaper would ultimately engross all literature—that there would be nothing else published but newspapers . . . If the conductors of daily illustrated papers are wise, they will approximate their journals to that type which has been so very successful—the weekly story paper—with this differentiation, that in place of fiction they will delineate actual occurrences. Indeed, I foresee a great diminution of weekly journals —perhaps their utter extinguishment, if the conductors of illustrated daily journals understand their business. The women, the idlers, the loungers in society, who are not interested in business or politics, will eagerly seek after a paper which gives them the pleasant stimulus of pictures of remarkable current events; and which delineates the poetic and romantic aspects of the life we are daily living."

Croly was asked how literary and pictorial art would influence each other in the illustrated papers, and whether or not there would be any great difference between "pictorial journals" and "ordinary papers."

"The paper will naturally take its tone and quality from the pictures," he declared confidently. "A paper of this kind will instinctively, as it were, avoid much of the news which other papers give a great deal of space to; for instance, market reports and commercial affairs in their dry, statistical aspect—and, in fact, all topics which are not susceptible of illustration. Of course those who project such journals will at first be disposed to follow the old types—to accept the old traditions of journalism. But this will be a mistake, as will afterwards appear to them; and the picture being the leading future, the journal in all its news, critical, and editorial departments, will insensibly take an artistic tone. I don't mean that it will be perpetually parading the cant terms of art. That high tone which is inseparable from constant association with works of art of superior quality, will imperceptibly enter into and flavor, as with a delicate aroma, all the literary matter of the journal . . ."

Fortunately, Croly had an opportunity to try out his ideas in the Daily Graphic. And, after he had had time to consider the matter well, Wingate questioned him whether, from the experience acquired in the Graphic enterprise, he found reason to modify "any of the views he formerly entertained." Croly replied that he had only one change to make in his original expansive ideas, and that was that the public "does not seem to care so much for mere news pictures —illustrations of actual events—as I supposed they would." In explanation, he said that well-conducted newspapers go into families and that parents don't like illustrations of unpleasant subjects, such as hangings, or persons made notorious by some great crime, to be viewed by their children. Croly thought that the public craves something higher and better than this and that they actually want something more ambitiously higher and better in illustrated than in non-illustrated sheets. "Portraits of beautiful women and famous men, charming and striking scenery, sketches illustrative of the affecting, the interesting, the humorous phases of human life, all that relates to the love of the husband, wife, and children, for parent and friend" Croly considered the most attractive themes for an illustrated daily paper. And, thought Croly, "while a paper, which illustrates some great public horror with excessive realism and particularity, may have a temporary large sale; the fact that it is acustomed to publish such pictures would gre injure it in respect of home circ which are, after all, the best patrons pictorial journals . . . and there c not be any doubt that the spread of lustrated journalism tends greatly to vate the tone of the press."

By D. CORVUS PICKARD

'WOFOLD benefit to the news-aper may be derived by properly erating with the public school au-ies in the publication of a weekly l page. The plan which worked ssfully in Savanna, Ill., could be put profitable practice in almost any small city and probably in com-y newspapers in larger cities.

The "Current s," however, was also a daily con-on composed by the teachers and l by the students from the news-

The students were through the shops and plants. learned, in a measure, how mer-se was handled and how bread was Some of the students then com-a theme on their visit to be pub-in the school page while others, much assistance from the news-advertising man, wrote an adver-nt which they (and the advertising) went out and sold.

These advertisements appeared on the school page.

Although in some cases the advertising sales made in this manner can not be repeated, as they are little more than donations to the spirit of the undertaking, in others this may be a means of finally cracking a hard nut and later getting his name on a contract. At least he is certain to come in the first time.

The new book by C. H. Le Vitt, which has to do with "Selling the School to the Community," is addressed to school superintendents and teachers. In his chapter on "Pupil Ad-Writers," he says:

"Have you ever tried the idea of having your high school pupils (the eighth grade, if you have no high schools) write the advertisements for one number of your local paper. As a good-will builder it will do these things: It gets the school very close to the printer man; it makes the children interested in the problems of the business man; it shows the business man that he is intimately related to the school and its problems; it makes English composition a feeling among the children that boys and girls while in school can do the things which people in the world do—the aim of all instruction.

"Do it this way: Talk over the idea with your publisher. He'll be enthused over it because it will give his advertising solicitor a strong talking point when he goes to the merchant for his business. A good time to 'put it over' is during some 'week'—Education Week, Better Homes Week. The pupils should be given two weeks to prepare.

"After the advertising man has solicited the business men and made out his list of advertisers for the edition, he will turn this over to the principal or teacher of English. With this group of clients (called such by the pupils) before him, the teacher will distribute them all by assigning two or three pupils to each ad. Thus, if there are 35 in a class, they can take care of ten advertisements.

"The first thing to be done by the pupils is to interview their clients and get their selling stories and strong talking points. This is carrying your school out into your community—the ultimate idea back of all publicity. Next, the children come back into the school room, talk over, organize, write and rewrite their copy until they have it polished and refined into a presentable story of banking, groceries, furniture, or dry-goods. Representative samples of advertisements should be put before the pupils while they are doing the writing. After this is done, the youthful copy writers go back to their clients for their O. K. A front page write-up of the resourcefulness of the school should be a feature of the edition."

Illinois Shoes tread the World

Up to about 1900 practically all boots and shoes came mostly from New England. Today the shoe industry in Illinois vies with the most important shoe centers of the country. From 60 to 70 factories in Illinois produce annually over 20,000,000 pair of shoes valued at $45,000,000.

This industry gives employment to about 11,000 workers. The largest shoe company in the world, said to be making about one-sixth of the nation's shoes, has 9 factories in Illinois. The largest company in the world, specializing exclusively in high grade men's shoes that retail from $10.00 and up, is an Illinois company whose daily capacity is over 12,000 pair.

Advertisers who have either equipment or machinery, or raw materials to sell to this industry will find the market worth while cultivating. The quickest and most economical way to reach this great shoe industry is through the daily papers listed below. They can tell you exactly how many shoe factories there are in this territory and the most effective way to reach them.

SHOP TALK AT THIRTY

By MARLEN PEW

"OFTEN in the evening familiar figures of men and women appear on the screen of memory, become vivid as in a close-up, speak to me again—then fade into the shadows....Though a thousand gulfs intervene we still are friends, else they would not so often come to visit me in the quiet hours, with their comedy and sorrows."

BELOVED shades of yesteryear's reportorial experiences are this evening's honored guests. All hail this amiable company! There isn't a "safe and sane" person among them, but I defy the world to produce a more interesting and agreeable society. Each was a delightful pest, each a dreamy nut, each worthy of the fame the world's press showered upon him.

MOTHER JONES, how natural you look, in the same, weather-beaten black silk dress and the little black bonnet, with a remnant of cheap lace on it, pinned to the back of your head. You were designed by nature to be somebody's sweet old grandmother and sit by the chimneyplace darning socks, but instead you have wandered up and down the dismal valleys of industry of this country, spitting fire of discontent, spreading the gospel of "organization," going to jail for the "poor boys" in times of strike, cussing the system that keeps many poor and a few rich and having more fun and excitement than any woman of your years known to our civilization. I know your story, Mother Jones. You told it to me, in a burst of confidence, during the strike of the anthracite miners, in 1901. You went on the industrial war-path because of injustices that touched your life and the lives of people dear to you. A thousand times you have avenged those wrongs. You have done ten thousand times more good than harm, and I honor you. But, Mother, sometimes you have raised the mischief. Just for fun, tell us a story of devilment.

"IT was during the strike of the coal miners down in West Virginia, and a time of great suffering among those poor boys, what with tent colonies in raw winter weather for their wives and kiddies and court injunctions that tied the unions hand and foot. I never have seen strikers in a worse plight and of course I did what I could to help them. One day I visited a county jail where a dozen or more of the leaders were confined for violation of the damnable injunction. There was intense suffering among them. The jail was damp and cold and one poor fellow, whose wife I happened to know, was all in knots from rheumatism. His feet were out of his shoes and his pants were torn and ragged. In leaving the jail I promised that boy I would find some woolen socks and good shoes for his feet. I knew that the judge who had issued the injunction lived in the town, and visited his fine home, intending to plead for some relief for the strikers. His wife, a woman of about my age, met me at the door and, thinking me a neighbor, asked me in. We talked about the weather and such things for a while and then I said: 'My good woman, I come to you on an errand of mercy. A neighbor of ours, a splendid man and husband, has been out of work for many weeks and his feet are on the ground. Hasn't the judge some warm socks, good shoes and a fit suit of clothes that I can take to that poor boy?' The old lady went upstairs. After a bit I followed her. Together we went through the closets where the judge's clothes hung in a neat row. We picked out a very nice black suit, with a long-tailed coat, woolen underwear and stockings, a good pair of shoes and we then rifled a bureau drawer for shirts and collars. We packed them in a basket and I kissed the dear sister good-bye and went back to the jail. The judge may have been clothed with authority, but one of his injunction victims in the jail was thereafter clothed in his best Sunday suit."

OF all persons—Chuck Connors, still wearing the tight-fitting, double-breasted, blue coat with two rows of pearl buttons, a flat "dicer," a striped shirt and loud tie and still talking the lingo of the Bowery—stuff that is dead to this generation, save as it may be remembered through East Side songs that are only sung when Al Smith appears on the scene. Chuck and his goil, Nellie, shades these many years, were once boon companions of the old New York Journal crowd. Nellie knew how to cook spare-ribs and cabbage to melt in one's mouth, and if she fed our hungry crowd on Sunday, some night during the following week we would return the compliment at Mr. Woo Chin's famous chop-suey dive. Chuck, unofficial Mayor of New York's Chinatown, would later lead us through the mystic channels of that hideous human warren, meanwhile in picturesque slang telling us the inside stories of white girl and Chink tragedies, pointing out the slick thieves and the cunning rascals, philosophizing about the admirable morals of the Chinese over the whites and inevitably leading us, finally, to Barney Flynn's saloon at the corner of Pell street and Chatham Square, where more beer was sold for five cents than any person of reasonable capacity could consume. Dapper little Chuck, always a gentleman when ladies were present and always reverential to the press, your failing was booze, but there wasn't a crooked hair in your head. But, oh boy, how you did love to see your pic in the pape!

CARL BROWNE, of Coxey's Army fame, came into the office of the San Francisco Daily News one day and announced that he was prepared to produce a wonderful interview with Patrick Calhoun, the head devil of the San Francisco traction lines, whose public policies were anathema to the News. Mr. Calhoun was the typical traction tyrant of those days and practically every reporter on our staff had been kicked out of his office. That long-haired Carl Browne, radical to the backbone, should be on intimate terms with the great magnate seems a bit anomalous, but stranger things have happened, and we told Mr. Browne that if he would get an authentic interview on traction subjects his day's work would be well rewarded. In a few hours he was back, with a wad of copy in his hand. Mr. Browne was excited. "Saw him at his office and here's a gre story for you," he said. Thus, an impulsive act, she found her k and she really did terrorize saloon-keepers all over the country, as she had a way of slipping quietly into a city, concealing an axe under her skirt and dashing into the gaudiest drinking parlor of the town where she would take a couple of whacks at the mahogany drinking rail and then throw the axe through the bar mirror. When arrested she would make a temperance lecture in court and have her fine paid by the local temperance societies that stood solidly behind her in almost every instance. Mrs. Nation was another reformer whose prophesy, "the saloon must go," was fulfilled in her life-time.

OTHER guests of the evening are: Herr Most, the anarchist, who kept a saloon in Gold street and wrote marvelous philosophical essays on his bar and died in a Cincinnati hospital while uttering the wildest blasphemies; Steve Brodie, the bridge-jumper; Gen. Coxey, modern Don Quixote of the industrial field; Big Bill Haywood, ablest strike leader this country ever saw; the "Angel of the Tombs," beautiful woman of mystery who would assist any poor devil confined in the city prison and who met a tragic death in the New York Hotel fire; Rev. Hugh Pentecost, fashionable Episcopal clergyman who became an anarchist, studied law and was admitted to the bar for the sole purpose of defending defeated and criminal people; leaders of a dozen cults, some charlatans but all of them interesting; publicity-loving lawyers, rip-roaring revivalists, wild-eyed artists, Greenwich Village poseurs, persons who were "bugs" on sports, cranky college professors, dreaming radicals and reformers of high and low degree. Such zealous celebrities make strong appeal to the affections of newspaper men who see them in action and know how much the society that usually scorns them is indebted to them for works of valor, or, at least, thrusts at stupid conventions. Publicity was what each and every one I have come in contact with sought beyond all else, sometimes because it flattered the vain notion that they were distinguished above the common herd, but usually because it gave them power to carry on their missions which, rational or not, were to them the mainspring of life.

U. P. PRINTERIZING NEBRASKA

Morse Operators to Be Replaced by Machine Circuit, Aug. 1

The Nebraska leased wire circuit of the United Press will start operation by printer-telegraph instead of Morse operators on Aug 1, Hugh Baillie, general business manager of the United Press, announced this week.

With the printerizing of Nebraska, the United Press now operates for its afternoon newspaper service, nineteen separate state or sectional printer-telegraph circuits. These do not include city circuits, or double trunk lines which operate with parallel Morse and printer wires, or the night circuits, many of which are operated by automatics.

A club for girls who are "anti-petters and non-drinkers in the younger set" is being orgaized by the New York Daily Mirror, through its columns. The stunt is being directed by Edna May of the tabloid's staff. It is based on the organization of a similar club in Chicago by Miss Ernee Olive Porter, a 17-year-old artist's model.

Long Island

A Rich, Independent, Profitable Market

Long Island as a market deserves special study and attention. Its potential possibilities for every conceivable advertised product are unlimited when one considers the enormous requirements necessary to supply over 600,000 well-to-do people, whose consuming power ranks with the richest markets in the country.

In volume of business it compares with any large city or community of similar population. The important factor to consider, however, is that the Long Islanders do not live in tenements or cheaply constructed dwellings. They dwell in fine homes, the majority of which are owned by the residents. These home owners are buyers of house furnishings, electrical household appliances, garden tools, etc. practically all are automobile owners.

Above all, Long Island is an independent market and altho adjacent to New York, each community has its own shopping center, and the people patronize local trade.

To reach these people most effectively you should advertise in Long Island's leading newspapers, listed below. They will place you in direct contact with this rich, independent and profitable market. They will sell your goods to the dealer and consumer. They will give you volume business at the lowest possible cost.

Ask these newspapers to send you the facts on Long Island.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

SEATS on the aisle await those who want to see the Honorable Solomon Spiffledink in action both at home and at Washington, D. C. The cost is the price of Louis Ludlow's new book "Senator Solomon Spiffledink" (Pioneer Book Company, Washington, D. C.).

"Senator Solomon Spiffledink" certainly would make a great movie provided Mr. Ludlow would be the director and Ray Evans, who illustrates the volume, the photographer. One reel would show the boyhood home of the Senator and portray him as a product of the soil. Another would show him being led to the matrimonial altar. (This would be a relief for in most movies the last reel ends with the introduction of the clergyman who ties the knot.) Another reel would show a decision for a political career and a whirlwind campaign with a victory at the polls through the voting of the frogs that sing along the Wabash.

Other reels would show this successful candidate, Solomon Spiffledink, in action as a public servant at the national capitol. Possibly these reels would contain more humor than the others for they would expose the bunkum of public life and thus become the hokum of movie life—the sure fire stuff for scenario writers. The last reel would be entirely devoted to "The Great Debate" with which the volume ends.

For twenty-six years Mr. Ludlow has been a member of the Congressional Press Gallery where today he represents the Columbus Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal. Recently he has been elected president of the National Press Club. In view of these facts it is only natural that his tale should be liberally sprinkled with items that appeared in home town papers. Indeed, one can hardly imagine Mr. Ludlow writing a volume in which he did not bring in some reference to journalism. As a matter of fact he dedicated "Senator Solomon Spiffledink" to a baker's dozen of his associates in the Press Gallery. They are: Carl D. Ruth, Cleveland News; Everett C. Watkins, Indianapolis Star; Lorenzo W. Martin, Louisville Times; James P. Hornaday, and Mark Thistlewaite, Indianapolis News; Richard V. Oulahan, New York Times; Col. Edward B. Clark, Chicago Evening Post; Thomas R. Shipp, Thomas R. Shipp & Co., Inc., Robert D. Heinl, Listening in On the United States; Edwin W. Gableman, Cincinnati Enquirer; James L. Wright, Buffalo Evening News; James P. Higgins, Newark Star-Eagle; and James D. Preston. Superintendent of the United States Senate Press Gallery.

These gentlemen need no introduction to Senator Spiffledink: they know him only too well. But other newspaper workers will be glad to have this close-up of the Senator—especially in Washington where they have never seen him in action in an attempt to straddle.

But the reader should not jump to conclusions too rapidly. "Senator Solomon Spiffledink" aims to show Congress at its worst. The other picture, Congress at its best, is to be shown in another volume, "Senator John Law." Indeed, the preface of the present volume pays a fine tribute to the working members of Congress where "patriotism is by no means a lost virtue."

In conclusion mention may be made in passing of another book by Mr. Ludlow that is of special interest to newspaper people. I refer to "Cornfield to Press Gallery," a volume that even Senator John Law would read with interest.

THE book, "Problems of Journalism," is really the proceedings of the fifth annual meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors held in Washington, D. C., Jan. 14 and 15 of this year. It contains much that is purely routine in connection with that society but at the same time it also includes a number of addresses on various phases of American journalism that are very much worth while.

These addresses were reported in detail in the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER at the time of the meeting. But many editors and publishers will doubtless want them in full and in permanent form—something that this volume provides.

One of the most interesting parts of the volume is a symposium where editors discuss pro and con the advisability of personal contacts with public undertakings through official connections. Opinions seem somewhat divided on this point.

Malcolm W. Bingay, of the Detroit News, in his paper which discussed the obligations of the newspaper and the newspaper editor, gives one personal incident which is well worth quoting for the moral it teaches:

> A little while ago a well-dressed young man came into my office. I happened to be dictating some letters. He walked in and stood by the desk. I had to stop dictating and looked up at him.
> "Are you the managing editor?" he blurted out.
> "I am very busy now," I answered.
>
> "Oh, that's all right, sir; I'll wait," and he sat himself very comfortably into a chair.
>
> "I'm busy now," I again remarked.
>
> "No bother at all," he answered chattily.
>
> "Will you please leave the room until I'm through?" I asked.
>
> "Sure," and he sauntered out.
>
> As soon as I was through he popped in again.
>
> "I want a job as a reporter," he said. And so I told him:
>
> "You would be the last man on earth I would hire as a reporter."
>
> He expressed amazement—university graduate, been in the business for five years, and all that.
>
> "But," I explained, "What would a businessman or any other man think of the Detroit News if you walked into his office as you did into mine and did not have the good sense to get out when told to?"
>
> "Well, sir," he said, "I've cracked a good many whopping stories by doing just that."
>
> I know of no business where the reporter so wholly represents for good or evil his institution. To the person he interviews, he is the paper from the press room to the art department. If he fakes, colors a story, misrepresents himself, does anything that a gentleman should not do, the injured party does not think of him as the individual—always it is the paper.

Erie C. Hopwood, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, supplemented the story just quoted with one of his own:

> I happened to be in the office of the Chicago Tribune some months ago and Mr. Beck pointed out to me a young man sitting at one of their copy desks and said, in substance, that he considered this young man one of the most valuable members of their organization. He was valuable because he had tact, he had courtesy, he had a pleasant voice, and when anybody called up to complain to the Tribune about something or to make some inquiry or to discuss some matter which he thought was a more or less personal thing between him and the Chicago Tribune, this young man was on the other end of the telephone and almost invariably when the conversation was over another friend had been made for the Tribune.

Among the papers that deserve special mention may be listed the following: "My Experience in Being in Contempt of Court" by Carl Magee, of the New Mexico State Tribune; "Interviewing—Its Principles and Functions" by Edward Price Bell, Chicago Daily News; "Relation of Radio to Newspapers" by H. V. Kaltenborn, Brooklyn Eagle; and, of course, "The Press and International Relations" by the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes. Quotations are not necessary because, as has already been mentioned, these papers were fully covered in the regular report of the annual meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

WHAT might be called an editorial debate appears in The Forum for August between William Bennett Munro, until recently an editorial writer on the Boston Herald, and Walter Lippmann, the chief editorial writer on the New York World. The question is "Shall We Break the Third Term Tradition?"

Mr Lippmann's answer is "No"—at least not in 1928. Mr. Lippmann frankly admits that conditions may obtain that would make it necessary to abandon the third term tradition. But no such necessity has yet arisen. Believing that we have too many laws he does not advocate a law against a third term. In conclusion he insists that a wise tradition should not be abandoned without very [illegible] reason.

Mr. Munro's answer is "Yes"—[illegible] in 1928. He believes a substantial [illegible] jority of American voters are satis[illegible] with the present administration and [illegible] to see it continued. In his opinion, [illegible] great difference exists between eight y[illegible] and nine years and a half. STANDARD PROMOTION FORMS URGED AS MONEY SAVERS FOR DAILIES

Cards Containing Market Facts Similar to Rate Cards Suggested—Space Buyers Too Busy to Read Present Mass of Material

By A. J. SLOMANSON

TO save or not to save advertising promotion literature? That is the question which confronts hundreds of space buyers each day. "Will I need this information in the future?" "Will this circular matter clutter our files?" "Shall I set this literature aside to read at a more leisure time?" These, and many other thoughts are entertained by the space buyers, not considering their impulsive decisions to discard the literature into the waste baskets immediately when it is received. One space buyer, being so busy compiling schedules, answering correspondence, interviewing space salesmen, and doing innumerable other duties, decided to file all promotion matter for future reference, and at the end of six months found the four filing sections of the cabinet so jammed that he had to decide whether to get a new cabinet or stop filing the future promotion material. After realizing that he never referred to any of the filed literature since it seldom contained any of the information he wanted, instructions were given to the file clerk for other use of the cabinet. He thought that too much time and trouble was involved in filing the literature, so the filing was discontinued. This example, multiplied hundreds of times, will give publishers an idea of how much space buyers regard circular matter.

Yet, it is of the utmost importance that agency space buyers should receive information about the many publications, and it seems obvious that because of the great amount of literature they do receive, the filing of it is necessary for future reference, as they never could digest all the material received in one day. Thus arises the problem: what information should be mentioned in the circular matter?

Too many writers of advertising promotion literature are so close to their business that they fail to get the outside viewpoint. They fail to use the correct yardsticks of measurement and thereby misdirect the greater part of their efforts. How can these efforts be more profitably directed, and what information must the space buyer have in order to make a correct decision when purchasing publication space?

Since most of the material sent out by publishers reaches the space buyers when their minds are occupied with other matters, and cannot be diverted, what method must be employed to have them read the literature at the time it is needed? Standardization in the advertising field has been slow, yet it seems that publishers will eventually standardize their promotion literature as they have their rate cards.

Argumentative statements will be eliminated from all direct mail matter when the standardized stage is reached, and instead of wasting about 90 per cent of space in uninteresting messages, the literature will contain almost one hundred per cent constructive data about the publications. Five yardsticks of measurement, at least, will be used, viz., Analysis of Circulation, Analysis of Editorial Content, Analysis of Advertising Linage, Merchandising Co-operation, and current market activities of each city. This information in standardized form would eliminate the problem of "throw away" or "retain" literature.

It is impossible to mention all the various forms of literature mailed to space buyers, but the destination of most of it is the waste basket, without the circular matter ever making any favorable impression on the minds of the recipients.

The standardized form would save publishers thousands of dollars annually in eliminating duplication of mailing pieces. At the present time, it is not unusual for almost all the principal executives of agencies to receive the same literature, and in almost every case the same pieces are routed to the space buyer without the envelopes being opened by the addressees.

Invariably, agency mailing clerks have been instructed to route all promotion literature to the space buyers, thus having them receive three or more pieces of the same literature; truly a heavy waste of money and opportunity by the publishers.

The standardized form would likewise save thousands of dollars for publishers in eliminating personal names from their records, and cutting the costs of mailing lists in half, since no record of changes in agency personnel would be necessary, inasmuch as the standardized promotion form would be addressed to the agency, as is the policy at present in addressing rate cards.

SERIES ON MEDICAL SCIENCE

The Detroit News instituted an innovation in the handling of medical advice last week when it started a series of articles presenting the views of authorities relative to the most recent advances in medicine and surgery. The news is collaborating with the Joint Committee on Public Health Education which includes members of the faculty of the medical school of the University of Michigan who are internationally known in medical circles. The plan has the endorsement of Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan. The articles are being compiled by Allen Schoenfield, University of Michigan correspondent of the Detroit News.

CHAIN STORE VOLUME MAKES HIGH RECORD

General Prosperity Revealed in Large Gains of Leading Groups—Mail Order Houses Also Show Big Gains

Indications of prosperous conditions are given by the record breaking sales of mail order and chain store concerns. Sales of twenty-one of these firms for the first six months of the year show a large gain over the corresponding period of 1926, and indications are that a new high record will be established at the end of the year.

For the first half of the year business of these twenty-one representative companies totaled $584,880,967, compared with $533,333,552 in the same period of 1926, a gain of 9.7 per cent. Although this gain is somewhat lower than that shown in the same period of 1926 over 1925, when the increase was 12.4 per cent, this decrease was confined to the business of the mail order houses, the chain stores having made an even better showing this year.

Although 1926 was a record year for the chain stores, twelve of the more prominent of the five and ten cent systems did a business in the first six months totalling $259,057,908, an increase of 13 per cent over the same period of 1926. Vigorous expansion programs by all the better established chains are held responsible for a large part of this increase. Neisner Bros. topped the list of these stores with a 76.3 per cent gain in business, followed by J. J. Newberry Company, with 53.6 per cent. F. & W. Grand came third, its gain totaling 22.2 per cent.

Of the retail general merchandise chain group, J. C. Penney Company came first with a gain in six months' business of 29.6 per cent. Kinnear Stores and Leonard, Fitzpatrick & Mueller came next with gains of 15.2 per cent and 3.8 per cent, respectively.

Piggly Wiggly Western States Company, a chain of grocery stores in Southern California, showed a large advance in business. To date this year sales have equaled $6,502,696, 82.6 per cent more than those reported at this time last year. Drug store chains also did record business.

Following table gives sales of twenty-one representative mail order and chain store companies for the first six months of 1927 compared with 1926, and the increase in 1927 period over that of 1926:

COMBAT MAIL SALES

Unsolicited Goods Deluge Richmond and Ad Club Advises Public

An attack on direct mail selling in Richmond in which unsolicited merchandise is sent through the mails, with the request that either the money for the goods be forwarded or the goods returned, has been launched following investigations of Horace Gans, of the Richmond (Va.) Advertising Club, with the co-operation of the Retail Merchants' Association and the Chamber of Commerce.

More than 10,000 people of Richmond have recently received unsolicited packages of neckties, initialed handkerchiefs and other products.

A newspaper advertisement recently run by the Better Business Bureau of Philadelphia emphasized the following statement:

"You do not have to buy unordered merchandise. You do not have to return it, even if sufficient postage is inclosed for that purpose. Simply keep it with reasonable care. If the company wants it back again they will have to send a qualified agent for it."

FRIDAY is found by a Northwestern metropolitan daily to be a good day for running a full-page of "Bargain Bulletins." This paper therefore divides a page at this time into space for 32 retail stores to individually advertise, so that they may reach the consumer just prior to the Saturday paycheck and also prior to receipt of an independent shopping paper delivered on Saturday morning.—C. M. L., Seattle, Wash.

There is quite a demand these days in many cities for nature foods, as they are called, these being foods that aren't refined or cooked or mixed up with a lot of other products. The paper can cash in on this situation by running a page or spread of ads of concerns handling such articles with this heading over the ads "Nature Foods."—Frank H. Williams, 815 S. Van Ness ave., Santa Ana, Cal.

The Franklin (Ind.) Star recently staged a circulation contest within its carrier organization. Bags, whistles, rain capes and free passes to theatres were offered as prizes. The contest netted 226 new subscribers at a cost of $24.30. The carriers were given a small commission in securing new customers in the country.—Davis O. Vandivier, Franklin, Ind.

Electrical washing machines are now wedging their way into the modern kitchens. Although the washing machines came before the electrical refrigerators it seems as if they were somewhat lagging in advertising. It might be a good idea in your town to run a whole page devoted to this great boon to housewives. Consult each agent in your territory and ask him to join in on a page spread. If reading matter is desired much stuff can be gathered from each dealer in washing machines. A short story with pictures, showing the progress of washing clothing from the very, very remote ages to the present time will most surely attract attention of the reader.—F. S., Salem, Mass.

Many people want to spend their vacation where they can enjoy the quiet and rest of the country and yet be within commuting distance of the city. Run a page each week advertising the vacation farms and resorts located within a radius of fifty or a hundred miles.—Norman B. Terry, St. Louis, Mo.

Do you have an enterprising shoe merchant in your town? If you do you may be able to sign up some good advertising with an idea that has been found successful. Give a dollar off on ever pair of old shoes that are brought in in trade and the old shoes are given to unfortunate families. This would be a good idea for the fall with colder weather coming.—K. W. F., Indianapolis, Ind.

Almost time for a list of the local students who intend to enter and return to college, together with the names of the colleges.—D. A. Davenport, Iowa.

"Here And There About The Big Town" is the head over a special department in the Chicago Daily News. Each day this department contains short stories of a particular district. It is the belief of the promoters of this special department that the "small towns within the big town" have many vital problems and happenings which concern only those living in that district. If it was not for this department these stories would probably never be printed.—J. F., Chicago, Ill.

CROOKS NOT "HEROES" IN THIS DAILY

Stupidity of Criminals Being Stressed in Worcester Post Instead of "Cleverness" and "Daring"

The Worcester (Mass.) Post has inaugurated a new policy in dealing with crime stories, and the young bandits whose deeds find their way into print and the police court no longer get any pleasure reading of their exploits in the Post.

No longer is every young storebreaker, holdup man and safe cracker a "daring" this or a "clever young" that.

Under the new police news policy, the stupidity and defeats of the youthful criminal element are fully pointed out, and the result is that the Post's crime news has silenced the critics who have wailed, as they do in every city and town in the country, that the newspaper stories encourage wrongdoers.

Two young men who started out to learn the safe breaking business in Worcester were arrested one evening recently. The lead referred to the fact that the "bungling, would-be safe crackers" were so inefficient that their nine hours of pounding at the safe failed to open it.

Another crime story, referring to a series of holdups, pointed out the fact that the receipts from various jobs were much below the amount of money which a couple of energetic young men might have earned over the same period of time if they had gotten jobs and worked for a living.

Other crime stories run by the Post have repeatedly stressed the moral, in a simple, unpreaching way, that the police have a habit of clearing up a majority of crimes in the city and landing those of criminal bent behind the bars.

OPERATING OWN STATION

The Milwaukee Journal began operating its own radio station, WTMJ, Monday, July 25, on 1,000 watts, making it the most powerful station in the state. Since January, 1925, the daily has been operating station WHAD, jointly with Marquette University. The transmitting station of WTMJ is 13 miles west of Milwaukee, where two 200 feet antennae towers have been erected 500 feet apart. Walter J. Damm is director of broadcasting.

HUNCHES

One Dollar will be paid for each idea published. Send clipping for payment.

"I EARNED my first dollar tying sheaves of wheat," said Rev. G. B. Enterline of Kenmore, Ohio. Why not get a series of stories on "How I earned my first dollar" from the prominent men of your community. A variation of this might be to have the men write on "What I did with my first dollar." One man, when asked what he did with the first dollar he ever earned, replied, "I gave it to my mother."—Art Murray.

A local feature that has been used with very good results indeed by various newspapers consists in running a series of articles on "Local People Who Have Made Good In Other Cities."—Frank H. Williams, 815 So. Van Ness Ave., Santa Ana, California.

Sporting goods dealers are one of the best bets for the sports reporters. Occasional checking up with such live dealers will bring in more hot spot tips than any other individual source. One dealer supplied during just one month tips sufficient to provide more than three columns of local spot on various subjects.—B. A. T., Springfield, Ohio.

With so much "stuff" such as neckties and other merchandise being sent through the mail without being ordered, there's an opportunity to be of service to your readers by obtaining an authoritative statement regarding the entire lack of obligation to buy such goods or to return them even if sufficient postage is enclosed. This statement might be secured from the postmaster, the postoffice inspector or the Chamber of Commerce.—D. P. Fall River, Mass.

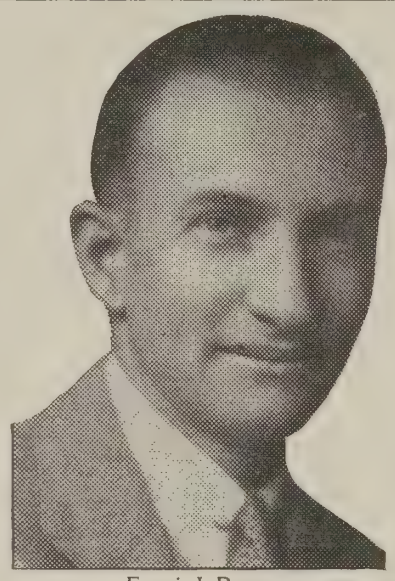
NEW YORK STATE
3 markets in One!

New York State cannot be classed a local market—not even a national market, because it is international in scope.

New York does business with the whole world. It is the center of international trade. It is the buying and selling headquarters for every imaginable product. Establishing a product in the Empire State hastens national and international distribution because the rest of the world is influenced by what the Empire State buys, sells and uses.

No campaign can be complete without New York State heading the list. No State offers greater advantages in obtaining quick and economical distribution than the Empire State. For where can you find such a thickly populated market, whose people are so rich, who live so well, who buy so freely of everything, regardless of price?



If you have a quality product come to New York State—and establish your market.

The National Advertiser Speaks:

"FIRST, our entire interest is to enable the advertiser to buy circulation which represents a maximum degree of profitableness to him. This implies concentration in local trading areas, sound character of readers, and a sustained reader interest."

A. H. Ogle, Secretary Association of National Advertisers, in Editor and Publisher, May 28, 1927. (The italics are our own.)

The Daily News Replies:

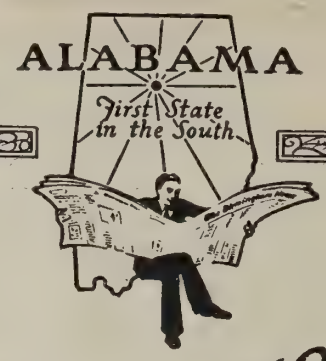
CONCENTRATION

The accepted "local trading area" of Chicago comprises that territory within a forty-mile radius of the city's center. In this area 95 per cent of the circulation of The Daily News is concentrated.

CHARACTER

The more than 400,000 circulation of The Daily News reaches a majority of the financially responsible families in Chicago. These readers have been won to The Daily News by no inducements except The Daily News itself, convincing indication that they reflect in their personal characteristics its sane, clean-thinking, progressive spirit.

READER INTEREST



The best proof of the reader interest in a newspaper is the responsiveness of its circulation to the advertising in its columns. Advertisers have put their stamp of approval on the responsiveness as well as on the quality and distribution of the circulation of The Daily News by placing in its columns more lines of display advertising than in any other Chicago week-day newspaper.

Editorial Brings Firm to Birmingham.

The value of an editorial has been justly proven, for one which appeared in The News on July 6th, has brought the Liberty Life Assurance Association to Birmingham. A letter from the president is reprinted at the right.

This action on the part of a Philadelphia concern might well be taken as food for serious thought on the part of many business executives.

Write for "The Survey," a complete analysis of the Birmingham Market. It is yours for the asking.

"Hon. Victor H. Hanson, president and publisher,
"The Birmingham News,
"Birmingham, Ala.

"Dear Sir:

"Please permit me in behalf of the officers and directors of the Liberty Life Assurance Society to thank you most cordially and sincerely for your invitation to our society to move its executive offices from Philadelphia to Birmingham, which invitation was extended in a most inspiring editorial appearing in The Birmingham News of July 6, under the heading, 'Capital Investors Turn South: Birmingham Becomes a Real Mecca.'

"The prestige which Birmingham is accredited with in industrial affairs is, in our belief, destined to be duplicated in financial affars and, in the very near future, Birmingham will enjoy the distinction of being not only the largest city in the South but the South's financial center.

"Big business breeds big vision, with the result that provincial lines and provincial selfishness are obliterated in the controlling motive of expansion for service. Birmingham reflects this idea as no other Southern city does; its leaders see beyond Jefferson County and the State of Alabama; the whole South is its field for service and it is now preparing in all lines—financial as well as industrial—to shoulder this bigger responsibility.

"The Birmingham News has contributed as much or more than any other agency to the growth of Birmingham and to Birmingham's fitness to assume the South's leadership. Faith in Birmingham's future greatness was a compelling factor in our decision to move our executive offices to Birmingham and we hope that, when we are domiciled in the Magic City of the South, you will permit us to carry on with you in the upbuilding of Greater Birmingham.

"Very truly yours,

(Signed) "ROBERT P. DAVISON,
"President."

An Appreciation

(From the Evening Record, Lansford, Pa.)

THIRTY-TWO years ago Mr. William L. McLean and others purchased the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, then a newspaper with a small following in Philadelphia. It had less than 7,000 readers, circulating only in Philadelphia. Mr. McLean upon assuming the controlling management announced that time, money and effort would be applied towards making The Evening Bulletin a newspaper that would be responsive to the people, would stand for good government and would criticize freely when circumstances demanded.

Today The Bulletin stands out as the greatest newspaper success in the United States. It has attained a circulation of 565,147; it has never resorted to prizes or contests, building from the point of offering the reading public a newspaper that could be taken into any home.

It is a credit to the newspaper profession to note such progress as has marked the efforts of The Evening Bulletin. And it is refreshing to realize that the family newspaper after all is the most successful. The entire newspaper estate has reason to congratulate The Evening Bulletin and might find success in emulating its example.

Inside Story of Pittsburgh Consolidations That Eliminated Three Newspapers

Approximately $10,000,000 Said to Have Been Paid for Old Morning, Evening and Sunday Papers by Hearst and Block—Advertising Rates Increased—Make-up Drastically Changed

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 2.—The latest chapter of the new-day daily journalism of fewer but stronger units was written in this city this week. Four locally-owned newspapers were merged to two and both became members of different national groups, the William Randolph Hearst and the Paul Block newspaper organizations, making Pittsburgh the outstanding center in America today where a press serving the city is exclusively made up of segments of huge privately-owned enterprises operating similar units elsewhere.

The newspaper line-up in Pittsburgh today reads:

The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, six-day evening with Sunday morning edition, the fifth daily of the Hearst group; Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, six-day morning paper, member of the Paul Block group, which includes the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle, Toledo Blade, Duluth Herald and Lancaster (Pa.) New Era; and the Pittsburgh Press, six-day evening and Sunday morning, owned by the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Yesterday Pittsburgh had eight papers, two mornings, three Sundays and three evenings, instead of the present five.

The tri-cornered deal and trade, unparalleled in American journalistic history, ended at 3:03 o'clock Monday afternoon of this week. At that hour papers were signed by which Paul Block bought the so-called Braun papers, the Post and the Sun and William Randolph Hearst became owner of the Oliver papers, the Gazette-Times and Chronicle-Telegraph. A contingency of the transaction immediately carried out brought about a trade between Hearst and Block, with the former taking the Sun to merge with the Evening Chronicle-Telegraph to the Sun-Telegraph and the latter accepting in exchange the Daily Gazette-Times to be consolidated with the Post to the Morning Post-Gazette.

George Schroeder, Sr., president of the Schroeder Piano Company of Pittsburgh was the broker who negotiated the purchases and the subsequent consolidations. He informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER in an exclusive interview that the price paid for the two Oliver papers by Mr. Hearst was approximately $5,500,000. This sum is compared with the $6,200,000 said to have been paid for the Press by Scripps-Howard. Mr. Schroeder declared he was unable to furnish figures on the purchase by Mr. Block of the Braun papers.

As a possible index to the value of the Braun papers, the Post and Sun, Arthur E. Braun informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the two papers grossed last year about $5,000,000.

"I look upon the modern newspaper," he said, "as one of the soundest of investments. An indispensable companion to men and women in their daily life, a newspaper that is conducted with regard for community welfare and has sound business management is an institution of the greatest importance and value."

One consideration of the Hearst-Block trade of the Pittsburgh properties they purchased and Mr. Block giving up the Sunday field was that Paul Block, Inc., will represent the Sun-Telegraph, the newest Hearst newspaper, in the national field, succeeding E. M. Burke, Inc. Hearst Bureau will be one of the results of the consolidation, according to J. K. Burnett, general manager. With the principals engaged at the moment with the big papers usually operate through their own selling organization.

In the case of the Chronicle-Telegraph and the Gazette-Times Mr. Hearst bought stock, the bulk of which was held by the Oliver family. A. K. Oliver told EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the only outside holder other than his family was D. B. Smith, who had been associated with his father in the steel business, and was treasurer of the Newspaper Printing Company.

Mr. Block purchased from the Given estate the plant and equipment, goodwill and subscription lists of the Post and Sun. The plant had been built in 1901, but remodelled and rehabilitated in 1921. The equipment includes three Hoe super-speed octuple presses.

Briefly summed up other major features of this important three-cornered transaction, notable for its radical transitions and many ramifications, include:

Make-up of the Oliver papers changed overnight into the typical Hearst style; price of the remaining single morning paper was raised to readers from two cents to three; advertising rates of the Sun-Telegraph were increased immediately, the increases ranging from six to 10 cents a line.

Mr. Hearst, by the purchase, also acquired another membership in the Associated Press. Efforts made to determine how much this membership figured in the total bill were unavailing.

A reorganization of the Tri-State News Bureau will be one of the results of the consolidation, according to J. K. Burnett, general manager. With the principals engaged at the moment with the big consolidation, the bureau is now functioning as usual, but, at the proper time, Mr. Burnett said, the bureau men will be transferred to the two papers. It is expected that the out-of-town service will be continued, he added.

Col. Frank Knox, the Manchester (N. H.) publisher who became a Hearst advisory executive last March 1, represented Mr. Hearst in the newspaper transaction. He was assisted by Geoffery Konta, a New York attorney. Paul Block was in Pittsburgh in person, assisted by a large group of executives of his organization, including M. F. Hanson, Duluth Herald, Grove Patterson, editor of eth Toledo Blade, John Hertel, business manager of the Blade, and Gilbert Falk, business manager of the Newark Star-Eagle.

A report current in Pittsburgh and also heard in New York that Mr. Block was acting for Mr. Hearst who was the actual and sole purchaser of the several papers, was emphatically denied both by Mr. Block and by Col. Knox, who talked to this reporter on Tuesday.

"As a personal friend of Mr. Block's, I went to him for Mr. Hearst and interested him in the deal as it was ultimately carried out," Col. Knox declared.

"I never saw a deal go through with less friction. All parties were apparently satisfied. We certainly were glad to get into the big Pittsburgh advertising field, which, with a total of about 84,000,000 lines for all papers, was, I believe, the fifth largest market in the country."

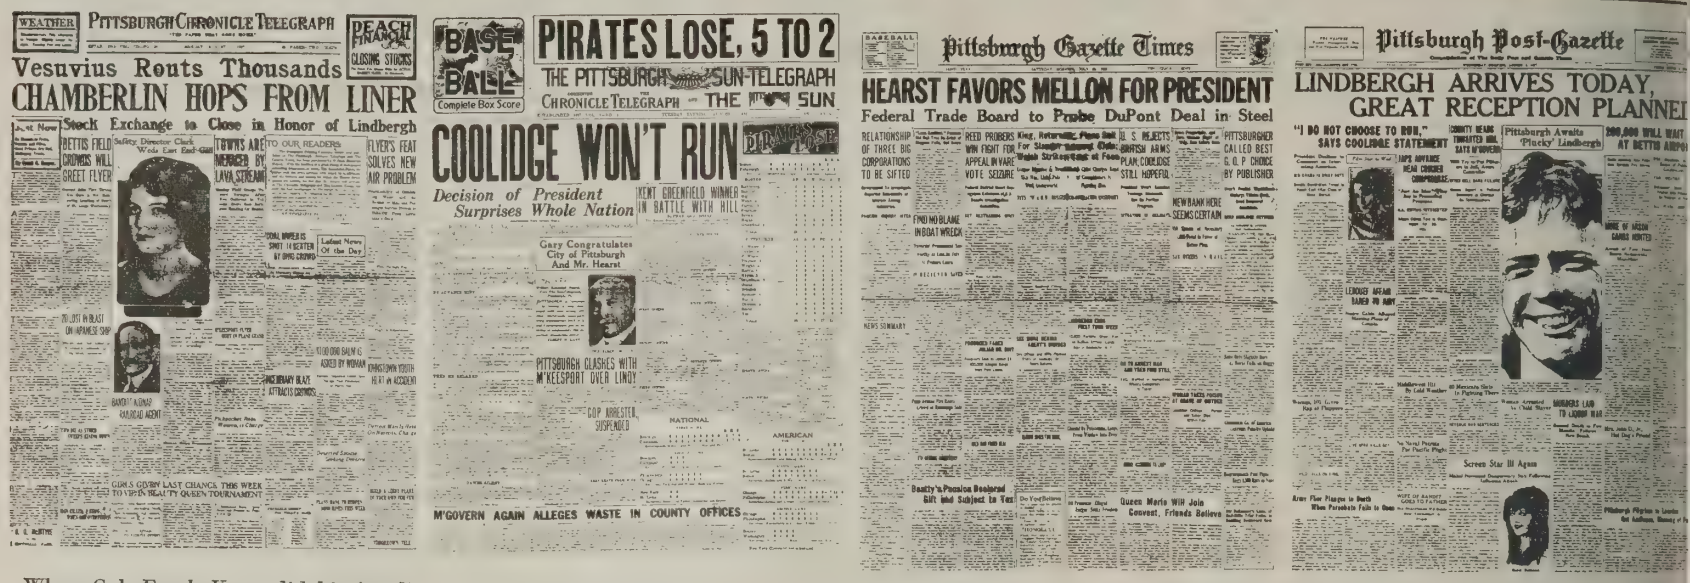
Arthur E. Braun, who with George C. Moore, was trustee of the T. H. Given estate from which Mr. Block purchased the Post and Sun, reflected what was declared to be the major spirit behind the entire transaction, when he stated to EDITOR & PUBLISHER in an interview at the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, of which he is president:

"The tendency today is toward larger and stronger units in all industries. Cost of publishing has made the newspaper business turn toward consolidations. Present-day conditions require it. And in the hands of conscientious publishers, the unification of the newspaper field is a good thing for the people as well as for the owners."

Mr. Block, in a statement sent to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, said in part:

"In taking over the Pittsburgh Morning Gazette-Times and the Pittsburgh Morning Post and by consolidating them into one morning daily newspaper I am pleased to have something to do with the correcting of the newspaper situation in Pittsburgh. Everyone acquainted with Pittsburgh has known it was overcrowded with newspapers. Not so long ago when the Morning Dispatch and Evening Leader were still in the field Pittsburgh boasted of three morning papers and four evening papers and four Sunday papers.

"Now with the consolidation of the Morning Post and Gazette-Times, with the consolidation of the Chronicle-Telegraph and Evening Sun, and the consolidation of the Sunday Gazette-Times and Sunday Post, it means Pittsburgh will now have one morning newspaper, two evening newspapers and two Sunday newspapers. This is economically sound not only for the people of Pittsburgh but for the advertisers as well. The readers will not have to buy three or four papers per day and the advertisers will be able to cover the field at a lesser expense.



"There are many other cities in which too many newspapers are published. I believe eventually the publishers will get together in those cities and accomplish what has just been done in Pittsburgh."

He would not add to this.

George S. Oliver, president of the Newspaper Printing Company, former publishers of the Gazette-Times and Chronicle-Telegraph, with whom the Hearst representatives dealt, had no statement to make other than the formal announcement published to readers of his papers Aug. 1. Nor did his brother A. K. Oliver, who was vice-president.

It is definitely known, however, that the two brothers have retired permanently from newspaper work. Both are reputed to be millionaires independent of their former newspaper holdings. They own and operate the Chamber of Commerce Building of this city for one thing. To George S., newspaper work was secondary to politics. He was the outstanding political leader of this section and the "Oliver faction," so-called, has been powerful in Pennsylvania politics. Last year, however, he definitely announced his retirement from the state political field.

NEW OWNERS RADICALLY CHANGE DRESS OF PITTSBURGH DAILIES

When Col. Frank Knox did his juggling act in Pittsburgh, one of the most noticeable results was the over-night change in type-dress of the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph when it became the Sun-Telegraph, with the typical Hearst make-up throughout. Note box scores outside, something new in the Iron City. Harry Bitner, responsible for the change, brought help with him from Detroit. Paul Block's Post-Gazette looks livelier than the old Gazette-Times, as seen in the reproductions of front pages printed above.

The new company publishing the Sun-Telegraph has been given the name of the Pitt Publishing Company and the new officers are listed as William Randolph Hearst, president; H. M. Bitner, a former Pittsburgh newspaper man but more recently associated with the Detroit Times, vice-president and publisher; A. W. Clark who is general auditor of the Hearst newspapers with headquarters in New York, secretary-treasurer; and C. W. Danziger, for 21 years with the Oliver company, managing editor. T. R. Williams, who was vice-president and publisher of the former Oliver regime, remains as business manager under the Hearst management.

Officers of the Post-Gazette are: Paul Block, president; M. F. Hanson, vice-president; J. S. Welliver, secretary; and L. B. Rock, treasurer.

The complete inside story of this amazing and historic newspaper deal was told to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by the principals and their close advisers in Pittsburgh on Tuesday this week.

In Oct., 1926, Mr. Schroeder, who in addition to being president of a piano company bearing his own name, is also a broker and promoter of financial enterprises, came to the Olivers and broached the idea of, as he phrased it, "cleaning up the field in Pittsburgh." Officials of the Chronicle-Telegraph and Gazette-Times concluded in conference that the suggestion of Mr. Schroeder was a profitable and logical solution of the Pittsburgh newspaper situation, namely, that a consolidation of the Braun and Oliver papers be effected into one morning and two evening papers. Hearst had for some years been nibbling at Pittsburgh bait, and the idea in the minds of the Pittsburgh publishers was, "if we don't do it, someone else will."

There had been one previous "Munsey movement" in Pittsburgh in 1923, when the owners of the Post, Sun, Gazette-Times and Chronicle-Telegraph got together and purchased the Dispatch and Leader, reducing the field to three afternoon and two morning dailies. Then also the Sunday papers were cut from five to three.

Then last fall the Newspaper Printing Company, owned by the Olivers, went to Mr. Braun and arrangements for the locally engineered consolidation were virtually concluded by Jan. 1 of this year. But, as the story was told EDITOR & PUBLISHER by T. R. Williams, Mr. Braun backed out. It is said that he feared to brave the three-cent price in this two-penny town and was also fearful that Scripps-Howard would extend the Press into the morning field, giving competition he had no desire to meet.

Mr. Braun had other interests. As he explained in a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, he was recently named by the will of Henry Buhl, Jr., as one of the four directors of the $15,000,000 Buhl foundation which is to be organized and administered. Upon the death of the late Judge James H. Reed, he was made president of the Reliance Insurance Company, of which he had been vice-president. He also is a director in a number of corporations.

And in the natural course of events Mr. Hearst learned that he might very well get into Pittsburgh. Shortly after Col. Knox became associated with Mr. Hearst in Boston, not quite six months ago, he was assigned to represent his chief in the Pittsburgh negotiations. It was at this time that he went to Mr. Block, as he himself explained.

On Decoration Day of this year the Hearst executives held a conference in Chicago and discussed entering the Pittsburgh field. The time for final transfer negotiations brought those concerned together under Mr. Schroeder.

Col. Knox had frequent consultations with Mr. Hearst before any agreements were reached. Only 10 days ago he returned from the Pacific Coast where he had consulted with the newspaper owner.

"There were three deals going on simultaneously," Col. Knox pointed out to the writer. "For any of them to be good, all of them must be good. It was like playing a game of chess or juggling. I had to keep three balls in the air at one time."

Every effort was made to keep the negotiations secret. But there was the usual leak. EDITOR & PUBLISHER was among the first to hear that the deal was pending. While unofficial statements were plentiful, no one in authority would discuss the affair, however, and the negotiations moved on under cover until last Saturday.

Even the local Pittsburgh newspaper men were in the majority unaware of what was transpiring. The staffs of the Post and Sun were not informed until Monday of this week, and only a few department heads had been informed that any deal was pending on Saturday.

On Saturday, July 30, the Gazette-Times came out with its bold-faced eight-column streamer reading: "HEARST FAVORS MELLON FOR PRESIDENT." This story, an interview with Mr. Hearst written by Robert M. Ginter, a staff correspondent, served to many as an advance notice of Hearst's impending entrance into the Pittsburgh newspaper field. They attached less political significance to it than to the theory that Mr. Hearst was trying to show the bigwigs of Pittsburgh that he was a conservative, after all, that he could give support to men like Secretary Andrew Mellon.

Although Mr. Block and Mr. Hearst traded the names and subscription lists of the Sun and Gazette-Times, Mr. Block declared he would look after the staff of the Sun, while the new Hearst management announced it would take care of the Gazette-Times staff. For the time being, as it was phrased in the newspaper offices concerned, all the men affected by the merger would be retained. Altogether, it is estimated, there are some 500 employes to be absorbed, and it appears that within a few weeks about 300 must be looking for other jobs.

This number does not include a large total in the editorial rooms since Pittsburgh papers have worked with small staffs, obtaining much of their city news in common through the Tri-State News Bureau. The editorial staff of the Chronicle-Telegraph, for instance, numbered about 30 and that of the Gazette-Times 40. Of the 70 it is expected about 50 will survive the inevitable weeding out process.

At present J. N. Digby, managing editor of the Gazette-Times and R. M. Chilton, managing editor of the Chronicle-Telegraph are retained, while S. M. Kennedy, city editor of the Chronicle-Telegraph, Dwight Fee, city editor of the Gazette-Times are holding down the city desk of the new merged paper jointly.

Vattier Snyder, for the last two years circulation manager of the Chronicle-Telegraph, remains in that capacity for the Sun-Telegraph. John H. Miller, Jr., who had been with the Gazette-Times for 27 years resigned as circulation manager on Aug. 2. Assisting Mr. Snyder will be Howard Alberts, Russell McCoy, and Charles Drescher.

As soon as the deal was made public the usual crop of rumors of a new paper coming to Pittsburgh started. Gossip here had it Cyrus H. K. Curtis would put a morning paper into the field in Pittsburgh; others had it that the Pulitzers were coming. The latter report is authoritatively denied in New York.

Those who know this field thoroughly were inclined to believe that no one would be willing to spend the vast amount of money necessary to launch a new paper here, and they further stated that others had previously talked of putting another paper here but were balked by the hostile attitude of the local merchants.

It is certain there will be warfare between Hearst and Scripps-Howard, but although some theorists expressed the view that the Press would issue early editions to crowd into the morning field, it was stated at the Press office that such a move was neither contemplated nor necessary.

Keen competition will be seen in the afternoon field, it is predicted, a competition which the well-known agreements of the local publishers' association may not be able to curb. At present these agreements provide that no premiums or prize contests will be used by member papers. Whether or not Hearst will abide by such measures was not known this week.

One development of the week, an evidence of competition to follow, was the inauguration on Tuesday of a new baseball extra by the Sun-Telegraph to be issued immediately after the Pirates end their game. This was sprung as a surprise by the new Hearst paper. The Press, it was said today, would issue a similar extra beginning tomorrow.

Of course the Press started out hammer and tongs for the readers shaken up by the mergers.

Cards reading to the effect: "If your paper has been discontinued, why not try the Pittsburgh Press" were plentifully scattered about the city. Posters bearing the same type of legend were on Press motor-trucks.

At the same time, Mr. Snyder told EDITOR & PUBLISHER that presses could not be run fast enough on Tuesday to keep up with the demand for the Sun-Telegraph which hit Pittsburghers' eyes with its startlingly big type and out-of-the-ordinary picture dress.

Mr. Bitner, responsible for this transfer bodily of the Detroit Times make-up into Pittsburgh, was not entirely satisfied with the beginnings of the job, he said. But he is certain that citizens of the Iron City will like the Hearst journalism, with its creed of "make it easy to read."

To assist him in the over-night metamorphosis of the Olivers into a Hearst Sun-Telegraph, Mr. Bitner brought with him from Detroit, Tom Martin, make-up editor of the Detroit Times, and C. M. Wagoner, Sunday editor. After initiating the local newspaper men in Hearst ways, the Detroiters will return home. S. A. Weinschank, who for the last 10 years has been Sunday editor of the Gazette-Times, will handle the Sunday desk of the consolidated paper. He is a former Hearst man, having had 12 years experience with that organization, including service on the San Francisco Examiner and the New York Evening Journal.

Another Hearst old-timer noted in Pittsburgh was Charles Tebbs, who is general supervisor of pictorial production for the Hearst newspapers, and who makes his headquarters at the New York American. It will be his task, he said, to brighten up picture reproduction on the Sun-Telegraph.

Changes in the advertising columns of the Sun-Telegraph were no less radical than the editorial make-up changes. In charge of this was Mr. Williams. All ROGRESSIVE retail merchants agree on two points regarding newspaper ertising as a factor in business-build- One is that no store can long hold competitive standing without the con- ient use of more or less space day in day out.

his lack of accord, whatever the ex- , is no more healthful for publishers for merchants in view of the fact retail stores, particularly department es, represent the greatest number of s's of space and the largest users in ntity of space.

While doubt or dissatisfaction on the chants' part may not immediately ct the gross revenues of publishers eneral, evidence is plentiful that cost selling space is materially reducing rits of publishers competing in the e local field. As time goes on, costly ng will continue to offset profits in ply increasing degree. Overhead in tion to advertising volume continues ard whether or not a full paper rep- nts large linage from a few adver- s or less per advertiser from many. erchants, including the most pro- sive, constantly are faced with rising s and the daily necessity of keeping me at steady pitch. Naturally as head goes up cost of advertising es in for careful analysis and with xious scrutiny of the selling-power ace and circulation.

hether or not a general controversy s regarding increased rates and ap- ntly decreasing returns, a well-de- tendency exists among department s to cut down space and to experi- with direct mail (either as a sub- te or to supplement newspaper ad- rsing) and other media and methods. th the situation and its effect, though ving other factors, can be traced rge measure to lack of accurate ledge from the merchants' point of as to what newspaper advertising rs him and the publishers' inability to him in terms of store sales. Enough stake on both sides to warrant a er amount of erative effort now exists lines of re- particularly alized fields As a specific ex- of one direc- co-operation take with to all con- , the results a extensive ex- ent made by representative chant are on Chart C. This merchant, nated as Store ", sought the nd most eco- al method of ing the circu- of a morn- d an evening without les- sening his gross space appropriation. He needed greater general volume and a larger and more continuous outlet for better quality merchandise.

Previous to the experiment space had been scheduled along hit-or-miss lines, large space today in one or the other paper small space tomorrow and none the next with high cost on sales and apparently diminishing returns all around.

He planned and carried out a 102-day schedule of insertions running full copy in first the evening paper and then the morning paper one week, and the next week alternating every second day with full copy in both evening and morning and part copy in first one and then the other, carefully checking returns on each kind of schedule with reference to increase or decrease of normal daily volume on all departments and with reference to the relation of returns from advertised department to returns on total daily volume of sales.

Results of two days out of the 102-day schedule are shown on Chart C as "Result No. 1, No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4.

Result No. 1, full copy in evening paper: Whole store did $4,500 volume of which advertised departments did $900.

Result No. 2, full copy in evening and morning papers: Whole store did $5,200 volume of which advertised departments did $1,600.

The second instance shows an increase over normal day's business on both whole-store volume and advertised department volume, a double advantage which alone would be significant had not other improvements of even greater value been noted during the experiment, as for example:

Even with less space per paper on the combined circulations than was used separately in both, speed of returns showed a notable increase—volume on advertised departments came into the store earlier in the day, thus improving the merchant's chance for a better share of all the business of the town. (There are 8 competing stores in the town.)

More sales on higher-priced and better profit items were made by using both papers and the average sale all over the store, department by department, increased practically every day.

On the days when part copy was run in one paper and full copy in the other, no matter which paper got full copy, the general results ran as shown on "Result No. 3." That is, the departments appearing on both circulations brought better volume and an increase in the sale of better class goods.

With part copy the effect was as shown in "Result No. 4." That is, the departments appearing in only one paper ran down in volume, with a lessened average sale and lowered volume on non-advertised departments.

Other things of specific importance to this merchant and useful every business day came out during the checking period.

He discovered or rather substantiated a belief that the morning paper drew better on certain departments such as men's clothing and furnishings, women's dress accessories, children's shoes, housewares and so on, and that certain other departments drew well or better in either morning or evening. These points in addition to the one of most importance: That combined circulation of two competing mediums in this particular instance enlarged the store's daily outlet for goods, reached more people of all classes of trade, reached a greater number of better class customers and at less outlay for space daily.

Competing papers can fail to see the individual benefit of this experiment only by overlooking the fact that in the end both papers got more linage than under the merchant's hit-or-miss method schedule. They got a less amount per insertion but a steady and regular schedule which more than made up the daily reduction in linage.

The essential point is not so much what this advertiser found out for himself but that he made the effort instead of blaming the papers for unsatisfactory returns.

Far from being a detached incident this one is typical of many others brought to light during fourteen years of circulation analysis of hundreds of advertised days on the basis of actual sales volume figures and newspaper circulations. It is typical not only of cities where two or three papers compete but of larger centers with several morning and evening papers in the field.

Aside from the special advantages to the store making it, this specific research furnishes a slant on how two newspapers fit into the local market served by both, illustrating the relative importance of quantity and quality of circulation to localized market coverage.

Increased speed of returns indicated to the merchant in question that repetition gained from putting the same items in both papers had an amplifying effect on sales and was worth the extra cost of combined circulation.

That the same departments advertised first on evening circulation, then on morning circulation the day following reached an extra number of people, even with a certain amount of duplication, and proved consistently time after time by increased volume on advertised departments that reading and buying increase as coverage increases.

Increase in number of large units-of-purchase and the extra volume on better class goods incident to combined circulation showed conclusively that both circulations reached more first-class homes than one did, no matter which reached the greater number singly. Whatever advantage of reader interest either medium had, the merchant's advertising benefited by both in the form of additional volume on his better-profit items.

That circulation is more than a reaching or carrying mechanism, though it is all of that, by which an advertiser can broaden his outlet and concentrate his volume, is supported by hundreds of similar instances. A few are cited here to demonstrate the varying influence on retail volume of large and small, evening and morning and combined evening and morning circulations, also of popular and conservative papers in the same local market.

Extensive circulation, on a purely numerical basis, draws advertised department volume, everything else being equal, with greater speed than smaller circulations in the same field and in some cases more whole-store volume but not always. On better class goods the large-scale circulations, as a rule, give the store a better proportion of direct returns over a selling period and on a minimum of space per item. On lower-priced values this rule is reversed except in metropolitan cities.

Smaller circulations, as compared to larger in the same population, draw better volume than the larger circulation on non-advertised items found in the departments appearing in the advertisement, that is items at other prices than those specifically advertised. This indicates a high degree of reader interest, and is almost universally true on certain lines, particularly on furniture, home-furnishings, larger art wares and style goods—items bought on decision rather than on impulse.

Morning circulations, regardless of notable commercial size, in the average city give more performance on first floor departments and on lines supplying convenience and necessity needs such as electrical appliances, stoves, small kitchen conveniences, men's hosiery and underwear, infants' goods, shoes, hats and lesser items of outer apaprel. There are of course notable exceptions to this rule but not enough to disprove it.

Evening papers draw better, on the average, on goods in continuous demand by families and households: notions, domestics, bedding, silks, gloves, millinery, dress accessories, linens and so on.

Combined morning and evening circulations draw notably well on musical instruments, novelties, specialties or special-use articles typified by safety razors, cameras, cosmetics, popular price jewelry, hair goods, ornaments, luggage, tires, auto accessories and sporting goods. The reason is that goods typified by these items react well to repetition.

Differences in drawing-power are not so marked between popular appeal and quality appeal circulations. The former is shown by the results of several special analyses made in 20 large cities have marked advantages on certain days of the store's selling week rather than
